A distinguished scholar and an active woman in political affairs in Syria will speak at UMass. Mrs. Randa Kahalid El-Fattal, Professor at Damascus University and presently editor of the ARAB WORLD, published in New York City, will address an open meeting sponsored by the organization of Arab students on "Third World Liberation Movements: The Palestinian Resistance." Mrs El-Fattal has written a number of articles on the subject. She holds a B.A. and M.A. from Oxford University. She is Palestinian by birth, and has played an active role in women's affairs in Damascus, where she was elected President of the women's organization.

Mrs. El-Fattal will discuss the development of the Palestinian Resistance movement and will explain the position of the National Liberation Movement. The lecture and discussion will be held Wednesday November 12, 8:00 p.m., in the Colonial Lounge. The lecture is open to the public. Coffee will be served after the discussion.

Amherst Area Activists To Speak At YPSL's First Meeting In Mahar

Tomorrow night UMass students will have a unique opportunity to listen to Amherst area activists speak on a wide range of liberal/left struggles taking place in this area, and to learn how they can help. These activities range from the Vietnam moratorium and the grape boycott to support for welfare recipients in Holyoke and blacks and Indians in South Carolina. The open meeting is being sponsored by the UMass chapter of the Young People's Socialist League (YPSL). It will take place at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow in Mahar Auditorium.

The purpose of this meeting is twofold. Part one of the meeting will feature remarks by national officers of the YPSL and members of the Harvard-Radcliffe chapter of the YPSL. These remarks will include the policies of the YPSL, its history and future plans, and an examination of the activities of a particular chapter, in this case, Harvard-Radcliffe.

Part two will feature the Amherst area activists, speaking on the various projects with UMass chapter plans to be involved in, and cosponsor with other groups. No one has to join, or be associated with, the YPSL in order to be involved with these activities. Those attending the meeting will be given an opportunity to sign up for whatever activities they want to participate in. Those wanting to join YPSL will also have the opportunity.

A welfare organizer from Holyoke, and perhaps a welfare mother, will speak on the welfare struggle in Holyoke. Debby Smith, co-chairman of the Students for Welfare Rights, will speak on what her group is doing to support the Holyoke WRO.

Steve Moore of Afro-Am will speak on the black-Indian coalition in South Carolina, the situation as of now in Dorchester County, and on what UMass students will be doing to support them.

Isabel Arnold, a grape boycott activist from Northampton, will speak on the grape boycott in this area, and on what UMass students can do to help.

Bob Davidson, of the Amherst tenants' union will speak on the efforts to organize tenants, and on how UMass students can participate.

Sam Johnson of the Valley Peace Center will give a report on the November moratorium, give suggestions as to what students might do, and look ahead to the December moratorium.

Bruce Kobritz, president of Hillel, will outline an educational campaign which will take place this year, in support of Israel.

Shawme Hutcheson, chairman of the UMass YPSL chapter will speak on the possibility of a "university reform committee" and of a march on the state legislature in Boston. He will also present plans for educational campaigns around international "trouble spots": Czechoslovakia, Ireland and Greece.

The UMass YPSL chapter plans to participate vigorously in each of these campaigns, and will work with many other groups i n doing so.

After the open meeting, members of the UMass YPSL will have the opportunity to meet and talk with the national officers and Harvard YPSL's in Pierpont Main Lounge.

WMUA's "Focus" To Discuss Local Plans For Moratorium

Tonight at 9 o'clock, WMUA's "Focus" will examine "Preparations for the November Moratorium" in the Amherst-Northampton area. Ken Mosakowski's tentatively-scheduled guests include Kay Stewart and Renee Yuen of Smith College and Scott Campbell and Steve Menitove of Amherst College, who are working together on the Amherst-Northampton Vietnam Moratorium Committee, headquartered at 8-10 Green St., Northampton. Also Tony Teso, and Bob Solomon of the UMass Moratorium Coordinating Committee; and Sidney Finehirsh, secretary of the Coalition, who will comment on preparations for a University strike and picketing of University buildings, scheduled for Thursday, November 13th.

Interested persons are invited to tune in on "Focus" tonight at 91.1 FM.

Lederle Presides Dedication Of Christian A. Herter Hall

UMass formally dedicated Christian A. Herter Hall, its newest academic building, in ceremonies Saturday morning.

UMass President John W. Lederle presided. The building honors former Massachusetts Governor and U.S. Secretary of State Christian A. Herter.

Speaking at the dedication was a longtime friend of the Herter family, J. Graham Parsons, former ambassador to Sweden and assistant secretary of state under Herter.

Parsons eulogized leadership qualities of the late statesman "He led people rather than drove them," Parsons said, and "He sought and obtained cooperation."

Lederle quoted the late President Dwight D. Eisenhower, who once said of Herter, "When you just look at him you know you are looking at an honest man."

Herter's widow Mrs. Mary C. Herter, unveiled the dedicatory plaque.

After serving as a special assistant to the U.S. State Department in 1917 and 1918 and as secretary to the American Commission to Negotiate Peace in Paris in 1919, Herter became an assistant to Herbert Hoover, then director of the American Relief Administration. He was assistant to Hoover when Hoover became Secretary of Commerce in 1921.

Herter was a member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives from 1931 to 1943 and House speaker from 1939 to 1943. He represented the 10th District in Congress from 1943 to 1953, was governor from 1953 to 1957, undersecretary of state from 1957 to 1959 and secretary of state from 1959 to 1961.

Herter Hall is a seven-story classroom, office and auditorium building costing about $3.8 million, of which $750,000 was a federal construction grant. It is of contemporary design and has large sections of precast concrete. Architects are Coletti Brothers of Boston and general contractors Fontaine Brothers of Springfield.

Welfare System Cause Of Poverty Problems

"The welfare system as a whole is inherently and unalterably a failure," writes a Boston Globe editorial. "The system itself contributes to the perpetuation of poverty rather than its elimination."

The Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program was set up in 1935 to keep mothers at home to care for their children, but serious problems have developed: (1) Mothers on AFDC do not receive adequate benefits. In April, 1969, mothers' monthly welfare checks averaged $60.60 per recipient. (2) The welfare system does not give recipients enough information. (3) The present program does not give its recipients enough control over the system that controls them. So often accused of laziness and apathy, mothers ask for a chance to make the decisions that govern their lives.

In response to these problems, the National Welfare Rights Organization (NWRO) is attempting to unify welfare recipients and inform them of their rights. Attempts are also being made to expand the provisions made for welfare families.

About a month ago, 30 to 40 students met on campus to discuss ways in which they might assist the efforts of the NWRO office in holyoke. It was impressed upon them that the major need was organization; demands made in a collective voice are better heard than the single cry.

The group, Students for Welfare Rights, is now trying to discover by what means they can best help organize and support the office's efforts. Plans for a fund-raising drive are in the making; a meeting to discuss this and may other suggestions members might have is being held Wednesday, Nov. 12, at 7:30 in the Plymouth Room. All interested persons are most welcome.

Brecht's "The Caucasian Chalk Circle"--- An Exciting Performace At Mt. Holyoke

By KEVIN WM. DONOVAN
Fine Arts Staff

"Who owns a child? And who says so?
We find such questions a propos,
Like: Who owns Natchez and Birmingham?
Santo Domingo? Or Vietnam?
Or to be very impolite:
Who owns America, and by what right?"

.....Eric Bentley, A Prologue To THE CAUCASIAN CHALK CIRCLE, 1966

On November 6th through the 9th Bertolt Brecht's epic drama, THE CAUCASIAN CHALK CIRCLE was performed at the Laboratory Theatre, Mt. Holyoke College. Decidedly one of Brecht's most positive statements of communist ideology, the play takes place in the ruins of a collective farm in the Caucasus at the end of World War II.

In the prologue of the play, the members of two collective farms have returned to their lands after the Nazi's defeat. In their delight at having recovered their farms, the members of the collective enact the Chinese parable of the chalk circle for the benefit of a delegate from the state. This elaborate tale dramatically depicts the terror of war and the inhumanity of oppression, and points to Communism as the only reliable panacea.

Through this parable, Brecht declares that property should belong only to those who use it well. Consequently, the common man, whose drudgery nourishes his society, is far more deserving of the fruits of his work and more capable of directing his nation than the indolent bourgeois and aristocratic parasites that infest his society.

Director Jim Cavanaugh and his dynamic cast have succeeded in translating these thematic statements into exciting theatre. Especially pleasing was the use of Paul Dessau's music written for Brecht's own Berliner Ensemble, a first for American productions of this play. The stark horror of Leonard Delonga's sculpture and paintings desplayed in the theatre's lobby was a striking complement to the statement made by THE CAUCASIAN CHALK CIRCLE.

As Cavanaugh points out in a Director's Note, Brechtian drama strives to "erase overblown emotionalism with rigorous chastity" moving an audience to "social thought at the expense of emotional involvement." Even so, Brecht was not always totally successful in maintaining this antillusory stance in his drama. The director emphasizes his awareness of this weakness in Brecht stating that "It is this modified and recognizedly human Epic Theatre that we have used as our guide in preparing this production." As a result of the director's efforts and the vibrant interpretations of the cast, the thematic statements of the play can be examined on an intellectual and critical level in the traditional Brechtian sense, as unhampered by the unavoidable emotionalism as could be expected --perhaps even by Brecht himself.

Poet More To Read At Euphoric Urge

On Friday evening November 7 poet David More read in concert at the Euphoric Urge Coffee House located in the cellar of Mills Central Area Center. Mr. More traveled to the very core of the black experience making fewer concessions to the gentle listener. Mr. More's thoughts covered the period of time ranging from the late Forties to contemporary Black life in America and especially in Chicago where he grew up as a "gangbanger" of the post World War II era. Mr. More spoke with a harsh sentimentality contrasting with his special view of the life style of Black-Americans. His fascination with the Black - P - Stone Nation has profoundly influenced both his life and poetry and the P-Stone Nation itself. He has been refered to as their unofficial trubadore.

Fac. Music Series Presents Two New Members In Concert

The UMass department of music faculty recital series will present two new faculty members in their first campus concert tomorrow, Nov. 11 in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

This occasion marks the local debut of tenor Jon Humphrey and assisting pianist Fernande Kaeser. Mr. Humphrey comes to U-Mass with impressive professional credientials as a performer. He has been a solist with The Robert Shaw Chorale during several seasons of touring and recording. In addition, he has performed with the New York Pro Musica and with major symphony orchestras throughout this country including twelve engagements with The Cleveland Orchestra.

Critical acclaim for Jon Humphrey's performances has been substantial also. Typical of press comment comes from Michael Steinberg in the Boston Globe: "Tenor Jon Humphrey was outstanding for purity of voice and style and the elegance of his phrasing."

This recital is open to the public without charge.

Music Review

Phil. Quintet."Neat Impeccable" Perf

By STEPHAN WALT
Fine Arts Editor

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 9, The Philadelphia Woodwind Quintet performed in Bowker Auditorium. This was the second program of the University Chamber Music Series. The group - is made up of the first-chair players from the Philadelphia Orchestra, which immediately prepares onefor a first-rate, professional performance. The program was composed of Cassation in E-flat Major by Mozart, Quintet for Winds, Opus 81, by Onslow, Concerta for Flute, Oboe, and Bassoon in g minor by Vivaldi, Quartet No. 5 in D Major by Rossini, Allegro and Arioso by Dahl, and Trois Piece Breves by Ibert.

The individual playing was near impeccable and the playing of the group was, with rare exception, near perfect. The Quintet came across as a musical unit; the transition in melody from one instrument to the next was hardly noticeable, the blending, intonation and balance were exact. These musicians projected warmth in their music-making without sacrificing exactness in the individual playing. The sound lacked the staleness common to long-established groups.

Unfortunately, woodwind chamber music is trite, with few exceptions. Music by Onslow, for example is rarely heard today, and with good reason. The music is more trite; if that is possible, than the writings of Onslow's Anton Reicha. Rossini is triteness itself. Comments about this music normally tend to term it "cute", "charming", "delightful." As I said, trite.

There was an exception on this program. The work by Ingolf Dahl is tremendously interesting. His use of rhythm and timbre are highly provocative. The final piece on the program, by Ibert, brought an extended ovation. The piece is cute, charming, and delightful.

An evening of Hassidic songs and dances will be presented tonight, at 8 p.m. in Berkshire Clubroom, Southwest Residence by the Worcester County Lavavitcher Youth Organization.

This program has been arranged by the newly-formed Jewish Community of Amherst as the first of this year's cultural activities and is open to all without charge.

The Hassidic movement within Judaism is a subject which is rather vague to many Jews as well as Gentiles. Members of the Lubavitcher Youth Organization will discuss the Hassidic movement as it relates to current life as well as the past and a social hour will follow.

FROM OUR SIDE

A Just Protest

Nov. 15, 1969, will probably be remembered as one of the most important dates in American history. On this day, hundreds of thousands of Americans will converge on their nation's capital to protest the horrible war in Vietnam.

In our recent history, two other marches on Washington have been held, the Civil Rights March and the Poor Peoples March, to bring to the attention of the American people problems which the nation had failed to solve. As a result of these marches, progressive legislation was proposed and passed.

The war in Vietnam, presently the longest war in America's long war-time history, has been a bone stuck in the throats of many Americans for many years. There have been many efforts on the part of the American people to bring this conflict peacefully to a close; all to no avail. In spite of all the telegrams, letters, petitions, local referendums, house and senate motions, etc., etc., ad infinitum, the war goes on, in obvious contradiction to the wishes of the vast majority of the people of this supposedly democratic nation.

It is an undisputed fact that most Americans at present want us out of Vietnam. It is also an undisputed fact that most of the people of South Vietnam, irrespective of the wishes of their U.S. contrived governmental "representatives", want us out of their country. And then there are own "loyal" allies, many of whom we have fought wars beside, who have denounced our involvement in the war.

We believe that it is imperative that this march take place. The issue ranks in equal if not greater importance with the other ones which have gained self-attention by going to Washington. We urge all who can to attend the Washington rally.

Both of the other issues which have spurred marches on Washington have had favorable action taken on them, but only after the marches took place. It seems clear that this is what it will take. Our only hope is that this march will be as peaceful as the other two and that the results will be of a similar nature.

Nixon And Attacks

Few would dispute the fact that we are living in an emotional era. The major issues of this era are not of a black or white, right or wrong nature in many cases. We are living at a time when fine lines and shades of gray mark the crux of most issues, and this is where emotionalism enters the picture.

People can quite easily be completely objective and entirely rational when the issues are clear-cut. Emotionalism would have much less of a chance of entering into such issues.

The war in Vietnam is as few would argue, a highly emotional issue, especially for those directly connected with it; as are college men with their very shaky II-S deferments. How can one be expected not to be emotional where one's life and soul are concerned?

At present there is one man who is threatening the lives of these young men as well as the lives of every individual inhabitant of two foreign countries. As far as many are concerned, it is but one man who is responsible. This man is not the Commanding General of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, not the Secretary of the Army, not the Commander of Overseas Operation, but our own, duly elected, infinitely more powerful and deadly, President of these United States, RICHARD MILHOUSE NIXON.

When one talks of a personal attack, he should think of the personal attack (infinitely more deadly than mere newspaper print) that this man makes on almost every 18 to 26 year old, able-bodied male in this country. When one talks of a personal attack, he should think of the personal attack that this man makes in the hypocritical guise of a helping hand on every living thing, including the foliage, in two sovereign countries many thousands of miles from his white stone sanctuary on the mall in beautiful downtown Washington. When one talks of a personal attack, he should also think of the many thousands of underprivileged American people who he is stealing from, leaving many to starve, freeze, and remain uneducated so that he can carry on his personal little diplomatic game to save something as remote from the reality of life and death as "face."

Yes, people tend to get just a little emotional where death is concerned, and emotions being what they are: very human and irrational, people will tend to come off in emotional situations obviously emotional and often irrational. Stop for a moment and think, if someone was trying to KILL you, would react to them cooly and unemotionally and rationally?

Words in relation to guns and bombs and napalm are in reality pretty harmless. And besides how much difference is there from being called an "ass" than from being called "an impudent snob"? Think about life and death, and then think about personal attacks.

ART BUCHWALD

I Am Curious--- Maxi

WASHINGTON - I have refrained from making any comment about the maxi-length skirt up until now in hopes that it would go away. But I'm starting to see more of them on the streets and I can no longer remain silent.

Heaven knows I'm not a prude when it comes to women's clothes, but when ladies from good families start showing their ankles in public, then I think someone has to make a stand.

Our society is not ready for the maxi. The shock of seeing women of excellent breeding walking down Fifth Ave. in New York with the bottom of their legs protruding from their skirts can only destroy the fabric and morals of this nation. How can men go about their business and keep their minds on their work when they are dazzled by the shameful sights of women flaunting the lower portions of their legs in front of every Tom, Dick and Harry?

A well-turned ankle can produce the most evil thoughts in any normal man, and the women who are wearing maxis, without knowing it, are exciting and provoking men into a state of frenzy.

I confess that even someone like myself, who has lived a pure and monastic existence, finds it hard to contain my ardor when I see a maxi. There is too much flesh showing for one person to bear. Only the greatest of will power has pretented me from going up and putting a hand on a shapely calf just to make sure it's real.

The worst part for most males, when a woman wears a maxi-length skirt, is when she is sitting down. Then the maxi has a tendency to slide up, and you can see part of her shin.

Even when she is wearing stockings, the effect of seeing a lady's shin can cause any red-blooded man to go berserk.

Time and time again, I have seen women purposely lift their maxi two, three, sometimes four inches above their ankles in a flirtatious manner without thinking through the consequences. A woman fails to realize that such brazen behavior can only suggest to a man that she is leading him on, and eventually he will attempt to kiss her, a situation she will be sorry she got into.

I am not just speaking for myself when I discuss the havoc that the maxi is causing in our everyday life. I have a friend who is unable to give dictation to his secretary since she started wearing a maxi. When she sits, legs crossed and boots showing, he loses all train of thought. He has warned her if she continues wearing a maxi to work, he will have to let her go.

I know another man, of impeccable reputation, without a breath of scandal associated with his name, who was given a lift in a car by his friend's wife. In order to drive she had to lift her maxi to her knees. Someone on the bus saw her driving that way, and the man was so disgraced he had to leave the neighborhood.

There are probably hundreds of similar cases where the maxi-length skirt has played its share in breaking up homes and causing men to resort to violent and unpredictable behavior.

The danger of the maxi skirt, as I see it, is that if it becomes acceptable, the dress and coat designers could be encouraged to make the length even shorter. This year the ankles are showing, next year the upper part of the lower leg could be featured. Where will it all end?

I say that unless the trend is reversed and we reject the maxi-length skirt as immoral, our women will become nothing but sex objects to be stared at on the streets, accosted in stores and kissed in their homes. For after all, despite the strict moral climate we now live in, everybody is only human.

70¢: Little To Ask For Peace

To the editor:

The students of this University have a chance to affect Nixon's policies on the war in Vietnam. The President has made it abundantly clear that he has no plans at all for disengagement, but rather that he fully intends to continue the war at the cost of many thousands of lives, both American and Vietnamese. This senseless loss of human life can be stopped only if pressure is put on Nixon to end the war - now. Toward this end, many students from UMass will be participating in the march on Washington on November 15. They believe, as do many students who cannot go for financial reasons, that this action will put considerable pressure on the national government to end the war, but only if a large number of people participate. The federal government has attempted to prevent allegedly free Americans from exercising their freedoms of speech and assembly by pressuring transportation companies to decline bus and train contracts, and by perpetrating a scare campaign in the press.

The UMass Vietnam Moratorium Committee has managed to arrange bus transportation to Washington for those students who wish to participate, and the Student Senate has voted to subsidize one-half of the cost of transportation up to $10,000. Although the Senate has voted twice to support this expenditure, a group of students have been doing what they can to cancel this attempt to help end the carnage in Vietnam. They have succeeded in effecting a referendum on this question, to be held this Wednesday. The student body will therefore be asked to make the final decision on whether they are willing to spend 70¢ each to help end the war. This minimal sacrifice seems little to ask for the preservation of human life through an end to the senseless carnage. Yet some students have seen fit to oppose this effort on the part of the Student Senate. I cannot believe that those who are opposed to the appropriation are in favor of the Nixon policy in Vietnam, but that is the only logical conclusion that can be drawn, because any other motivation is illogical and/or hypocritical. Those students who claim that they are in favor of the efforts of the Moratorium Committee, but opposed to spending 70¢ to further its aims are either misguided or hypocritical.

For argument that the appropriation would benefit only a small group of students (those who are going to Washington) is in no way compelling. If enough students make bus reservations to use the entire $10,000 there will be over 1200 representing this university at the November 15 action for peace. This group would be larger than any other group that receives support from the student activities tax. Further, the students who go to Washington are not the only ones who will benefit from this expenditure. The beneficiaries will be the thousands of Americans and Vietnamese whose lives will be saved if we end our involvement now, as well as the countless indirect benefits that will accrue to this society by bringing to a close this useless and divisive conflict. Those Senators who have construed this appropriation as being for the benefit of those comparative few going to Washington miss the point. This effort is completely dissimilar to the useless student activities to which some of the student tax money goes; its value is in its ability to save lives by bringing this war to a close. What comparable humanitarian ends are served by the funding of such groups as the University Band, the Flying Redmen, and similar groups?

It may be expected of students basking in the comfort of middle-class affluence to sit idly by and express vocal opposition to the war in Vietnam, while refusing to part with 70¢ of their money to help end that war by meaningfully demonstrating that opposition to the national government. I believe that anyone who wants to see the war ended, but is unwilling to spend the equivalent of one mystery meat lunch to attain that end is as morally bankrupt as the militarists who persist in prosecuting this war.

If you want to help end the killing in Vietnam, and make your actions consistent with your beliefs, they this Wednesday you must vote NO on the referendum to rescind $50.

"Boston 8" Claims Responsibility For Damage To Boston Draft Offices

BOSTON (AP) - A group calling itself the "Boston 8" has claimed responsibility for vandalism at six Selective Service offices in Boston last Friday night.

"We attacked the Selective Service because it illustrates the powerlessness of the young, as well as the arrogance of power. It is to assist the one, and to check the other that we have acted," the group said in a statement delivered to the Associated Press.

FBI and police pressed the investigation to determine how extensive damage was in the five offices. An FBI spokesman said several file cabinets had been dumped. Clerks were called to the office to attempt to determine the extent of damage.

The vandalism was discovered several hours before the November Action Coalition, a radical antiwar group, was to begin a rally and march to the Selective Service office at Copley Square, the site of one of the vandalisms.

Shortly before noon, an unidentified woman called The Associated Press in Boston and said that eight persons had carried out the raids Friday night this morning.

"Six draft boards are now inoperable," she said. "All the 1-A files have been destroyed, primarily by tearing them. In addition, all the cross reference systems have been totally destroyed."

She said the group was acting as individuals, not as members of any organization.

Free University City Moves From Domes To South College

The "Second Free University City" will swing into operation next week from its new location on the third floor of South College.

On Monday, the city will set up a table in the Student Union lobby to ask students about supplementary education and find out what courses they want. There also plans to make one of the rooms at South College into a coffeehouse lounge open to the entire University community.

The "First Free University City", known for its plastic tents, disappeared after the tents blew down about a month ago.

According to Ken Apfel, one of the 25 students organizing the Second City, the remains of the tents are now stored in a University warehouse on campus. Of the $2,250 donated to the city by student governments, about $400 is left. The rest was spent on the tents, paper and office supplies.

Apfel said, "Too much time was wasted on the tents: the new city will be more practical and responsive to students' needs."

Commenting on the accomplishments of the First Free University City, he said that its publicity made it a common word around campus: it attracted faculty support and created a sense of community for the students involved.

The new city will concentrate on its academic goals, which, Apfel said, are - "eventually to change the University system but now it is to get students to realize that there are other ways of education, not just worrying about grades.

"Students should have more concern for learning, which is actually the ultimate goal of any educational system," said the Greenough senior.

Nat. Service Sorority Asks For Thanksgiving Donations

The sisters of Gamma Sigma Sigma, national service sorority, are appealing to the campus for donations of canned and packaged food and money. These donations will be used at a Thanksgiving dinner at the Riverview Project in Springfield, Mass. Riverview is a low income housing development. George Bruce, program director of the project, intends to provide the dinner to the building at Riverview which shows the most general improvement over the next few weeks. Turkeys will provided by welfare, but such canned goods as vegetables and cranberry sauce are needed. The dinner will be prepared by Riverview teenagers with the aid of Gamma Sigma Sigma.

This project is being participated in by GSS in conjunction with their national project - working through the Office of Economic Opportunity, a federal agency. Central to this fight is Community Action Programs, which aim toward the decentralization of federal aid and toward helping the local community to "help itself". It tries to alleviate the problems of illiteracy, unemployment, and poor housing.

A table will be set up in the Union Nov. 10 - 14 from 9 a.m. - 4 p.m. to accept donations and to hand out information on O.E.O. Donations may also be dropped off with any G.S.S. sister until Nov. 20 or at the S.U. Flame of Hope candle sale (Nov. 17 - 21) also sponsored by G.S.S.

MDC Interview

Speculations On The Haynesworth Nomination

By ERNEST REIS

"I wouldn't be surprised if the Haynesworth nomination will be defeated," Prof. Loren Beth of the Government Department told the COLLEGIAN. The Senate debate over the nomination has been delayed until mid-November.

Prof. Beth continued, "There are a lot of ways to put pressure on Senators and the delay may be a way for Nixon to do it. However, the opposition seems to have withstood the delay."

Prof. Beth considers the Haynsworth nomination the first major political battle for the Nixon administration. He said, "Nixon wants to win this battle to get the upper hand for coming political fights."

Labor and civil rights organizations, he said, cannot defeat the nomination alone. "It is the support the opposition is getting outside these organizations that will defeat Haynesworth," he continued, "This support is not necessarily liberal."

Republican Senator Robert Griffin of Michigan is one such opponent to the Haynesworth nomination. Senator Griffin, the Republican whip, led the opposition against Abe Fortas last year.

Prof. Beth said of Senator Griffin's opposition to both nominations, "It probably started with Fortas on ethical grounds but it was hard to determine because they are of opposing parties. But I feel they were mostly ethical. Senator Griffin's previous opposition against Fortas has boxed him in with the Haynsworth nomination."

The present fight over Haynsworth's nomination has not been completely political. Prof. Beth continued, "With Haynsworth and Fortas there are real ethical questions. It is not that the answers to these questions are incriminating but the fact that there are questions."

Prof. Beth does not support the Haynsworth nomination. He considers Haynsworth a mediocre nominee and not an able man for the position. Beth feels that Haynsworth would possibly vote the way his friends and associates expect him to vote.

Describing himself as a "1950 sort of liberal," Prof. Beth stipulated he does not like the term. Could he support LBJ, McCarthy, Humphrey or Lindsey at a presidential convention? "He could go for Humphrey or Lindsey," he said.

UMass Debating Team Impressive In First Intercollegiate Meets

The University of Massachusetts debating team has compiled an impressive array of awards in its first few tournaments of the 1969-70 intercollegiate debate season.

Travelling to Philadelphia, the weekend of October twenty-fifth, the varsity switch side team, consisting of Mike Farrell and Matt Novak, captured the second place trophy at the annual LaSalle College Tourament. They were victorious in the preliminary rounds over Bloomsburg, St. Peter's, Vermont, and Geneseo State, losing only to Brown. From these victories, they were moved into the semi-final elimination rounds versus Washington & Lee. Their victory in this round placed them in the final round versus Rutgers, Novak and Farrell narrowly missed first place in this round on a three-two decision.

Also representing UMass at the LaSalle Tournament were Elliott Margolis and Debbie Flaherty who were victorious over Catholic University and William and Mary.

That same weekend, at the Novice Tourament held at Wesleyan University, the University of Mass four man novice unit captured first place. The unit, consisting of Roger Lagendre, Dave McCaffrey, Alan Kantrowitz and Mike Kavanaugh, had an overall record of eight wins and two losses. Kantrowitz and Kavanaugh were awarded the second place affirmative team certificate after beating teams from Yale, Boston University, and Wesleyan, while losing to the Univ. of Vermont and Colgate.

Legendre and McCaffrey were also awarded a certificate as second place negative team. Victories came over Harvard, Middlebury, Gorham State, and the Universities of Bridgeport and Rhode Island.

McCaffrey was also the winner of a third place speaker award.

The following weekend, at the Boston University Touranment, the four man novice unit captured second place and was awarded a silver bowl. On the affirmative side, Carol Pollard and Paul Drager were victorious over Mount Holyoke, Boston College, NYU, and UVM, their only loss coming against Brown.

At the same time, Bruce Murphy and John Day were also compiling impressive victories. Victories came over MIT, Northeastern, BU, and Fitchburg, losing only to Dartmouth.

The four man varsity unit, also entered at BU, compiled an overall 6-6 record. On the affirmative John Hogan and Paul Lamarche were victorious in four starts over Brown, Dartmouth, URI, and Hampton Institute. Debbie Flaherty and Elliott Margolis won over Boston Collele and Gorham State.

November War Moratorium Day Care Center Set Up

A child day care center has been organized for parents who wish to participate in the Moratorium activities on November 13 and 14. Hopefully, this will encourage all parents to become involved with leafletting, canvassing, and rallies a gainst United States involvement in the Vietnam war.

The center will operate from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Thursday and Friday, Nov. 13 and 14, at Grace Church in Amherst. Children may be left there for any length of time. The facilities are fully equipped, and will be staffed by qualified UMass students. If the children are to stay during the lunch hour, mothers are asked to send a box lunch; beverages and dessert will be provided.

Any parents wishing to make use of this service are asked to send the names and ages of the children to : Day Care Center, 311 John Q. Adams Tower, University of Mass., Amherst, or to call Claire or Kathy at 546-8293. The children should then be brought to Grace Church on Bottwood Ave., on the appropriate days.

Let's all work together for peace.

Dartmouth and Princeton Score Big Wins Over the Weekend

BOSTON (AP) — Dartmouth and Boston University matched its best football games. Yankee Conference off, having been scheduled to meet due to a hepatitis outbreak.

Connecticut knocked off Rutgers and Yale kept its hopes for a share of the Ivy League title alive in other key games, but struggling Boston College lost its fourth straight.

Dartmouth, New England's No. 1 college power in the Associated Press poll, hiked its record to 7-0 by rolling to a 37-7 victory over winless Columbia at New York. The Indians mixed a fierce ground attack and the passing of Jim Chasey, who hit Bob Brown with a 31-yard touchdown toss to break the game open late in the first half.

Princeton fullback Ellis Moore wrecked Harvard defenses for the second time in three years as the Tigers buried the Crimson 51-20 at Cambridge. Moore, who had scored five touchdowns as a sophomore against Harvard on the same field in 1967, added three more on runs of 6,8, and 10 yards. All his scoring came in the first half, as the Tigers rolled up a 31-7 lead.

The Tigers lost two non-Ivy games this season, but Saturday's victory enabled them to keep pace with Dartmouth in league play at 5-0. Each team has one more game at home next week -- Princeton vs. Yale and Dartmouth vs. Cornell -- then they collide at Princeton in the season finale Nov. 22.

Sophomore quarterback Sam Hollo and junior halfback Gary Capehart scored twice each as second-ranked BU defeated Rhode Island 27-13 to lift its record to 7-1 with two games remaining. The best previous Terrior mark was 7-2 in 1954.

Yale, rebounding from its first Ivy loss since 1966 a week ago, defeated Penn 21-3 with the help of four interceptions, one of them returned 77 yards by Jack Ford for a touchdown. The Elis now have Princeton rolled on toward a probable Ivy League showdown and winning record in history Saturday in New England's top college champion UMass, New England's third-ranked team, had the day Holy Cross, which cancelled its scheduled earlier in the season a 4-1 league mark.

Boston College stayed with Buffalo for a while, thanks to the passing combination of Frank Harris-to-John Bonistalli, which clicked for touchdowns of 15 and 46 yards to give the Eagles a 14-13 lead in the third period.

Here's how the Top Ten in the Associated Press New England College football poll fared Saturday,

1. Dartmouth (7-0) defeated Columbia, 37-7.
2. Boston University (7-1) defeated Rhode Island, 27-13.
3. Massachusetts (5-2) idle.
4. Tie Yale (5-2) defeated Penn, 21-3; Boston College (2-4) lost to Buffalo, 35-21.
6. Harvard (3-4) lost to Princeton, 51-20.
7. Tie Connecticut (4-3) defeated Rutgers, 28-33. Wesleyan (7-0) defeated Williams, 18-17.
9. Amherst (5-2) defeated Trinity, 35-7.
10. Tufts (6-1) defeated Bowdoin, 35-17.

Pats Bow to Dolphins,17-16 in the Rain

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) - The Miami Dolphins, lifted by Larry Csonka's 54-yard scoring run through the mud, with 2-1/2 minutes left, earned a 17-16 victory over Boston as the Patriots' two-point conversion attempt failed with 35 seconds remaining Sunday in a rain-soaked American Football League game.

The Dolphins spoiled a Boston comeback on Csonka's long dash, but the Patriots made their game bid to pull out a victory in the closing seconds.

Mike Taliaferro capped a 61-yard drive by passing 15-yards to Pete Rademacher in the end zone. Then the Patriots elected to gamble rather than settle for a tie.

The Boston strategy backfired as Taliaferro's hurried swing pass fell incomplete.

The Dolphins scored their first touchdown when Bill Stanfill, a 6-5 rookie defensive end, intercepted a short pass by Taliaferro and ran 15 yards into the end zone in the opening minutes of the second period.

The Patriots finally scored when rookie Carl Garrett broke loose and raced 80 yards for a touchdown early in the fourth period.

Miami has tied one and lost six.

The loss was the eighth in nine game s for Boston, which is in last place in the Eastern Division.

Although 19,821 tickets were sold, only 8,374 hardy fans braved the downpour to attend the game.

Lions Claw Falcons, 27-21; Landry Tosses TD

DETROIT (AP) - The Detroit Lions scored 17 points in the second quarter, including one touchdown on a 96-yard kickoff return by Bobby Williams, then hung on to beat the Atlanta Falcons 27-21 in a National Football League game Sunday.

Detroit tallied a first-quarter touchdown on a 13-yard pass from Greg Landry, former UMass grid star, to Earl McCullouch.

Harriers Run in N.E. Championships

Redman Varsity. Frosh Eye Title

Today, the annual New England Cross-Country Championships will be held on the familiar grounds of the Franklin Park Golf Course in Boston. Both the UMass' varsity and frosh sevens have hopes of taking home the New England crowns.

Neither the varsity nor frosh races have a team that will run away with the prize. There will also be good competition for top ten honors in both races with the most competition being for the second spot.

Going into the race on the wet golf course grass, Providence College stands as one of the favorites. The Friars, who beat UMass in the first meet for both teams on September 27th, have developed a good five man team led by seniors Marty Robb and Ron Labonte and Sophomore Bill Speck. PC recently won the Eastern Championship cross-country race with their biggest opposition provided by Central Connecticut, the team U-Mass clobbered, 17-44, in last Wednesday's dual meet.

Defending champion, the University of Connecticut, is considered as another top contender. The Huskies are undefeated and barely beat UMass for the Yankee Conference titile a week ago. They have a strong four man unit lead by senior John Vitale and junior Rick Spurling. However, a weak fifth man may prevent UConn from repeating as New England champs.

The Redmen as a team, have been coming on real strong after a slow start. From a 1-3 record earlier in the season, UMass has surged to a 7-3 mark and in the process took a real close second in the Conference meet. Since the one-sided victory over Holy Cross on October 24th, when UMass captured second through fifth, the team has jelled into championship potential.

UMass has enjoyed strong team depth from the beginning of the season, and this battle for position within the team has produced a strong seven man group that will run the race.

Ron Wayne, leading the team for the second straight year, has come along strongly in the last two meets and again is ready to show the other New England runners his ability. Wayne was second in this race last year and is aiming for another top performance today. Second man and co-captain Leo Duart has also come along strongly the last few weeks and will be in with the race leaders all the way. Duart finished seventh in last year's championship.

A big boost for the team has been the running of Tom Derderian, who has been running his best ever recently, as he showed by nabbing third against Central Conn. with their top runner Jim Hall. Fourth and fifth men, Dave Evans and Larry Paulson have been exchanging places throughout the year along with sophomore Bruce Blackburn.

Evans, the only senior running for UMass today, has turned in some top performances in an up and down season, but he really has come through in the big meets. Junior Paulson has been consistent all season and will provide his typical tough race at Franklin Park. Sophomore Blackburn has proved that he is capable of running a great race and hopefully the experience he gained in the Conference meet will pay off for him in the New England's. Rounding out the seven man team will be soph Don Dunsky, who also has the ability and now, with some experience, he should be able to produce.

The battle for individual honors seems already settled with defending champion Art Dulong of Holy Cross running better than ever. Dulong's time on the Franklin Park course of 23:37 is over a minute faster than any runner who will be competing in the New England's today. However, the second spot could go to any one of a good group of runners.

TOM JASMIN

RONE WAYNE

Leading UMass frosh and varsity harriers.

This list of harriers includes Providence's Robb, UConn's Spurling and Vitale, Central Conn.'s Hall and UMass' Wayne and Duart. The runner that wins may be an indicator to which team will win.

UMass' freshman team is considered a threat to take home the New England trophy. The last UMass frosh team that won the cross-country crown of New England was 1965. This year's team, after being beaten by Harvard on opening day, has rolled up nine straight wins, most by lopsided scores. The biggest competition will probably be provided by U-Conn and Central Conn., two teams that the Little Redmen have already scalped.

Leading the UMass squad will be Tom Jasmin, Jasmin hasn't lost since September 27th, and that was only against Harvard runners who won't be competing today. Tom Swain has been second man all season but has been pressuring Jasmin and is capable of running with him.

Rick Barry and Phil Riley have been fighting for the third spot and will possibly make the top ten in the race. Fifth man Mike Daly has been steadily improving, finally nailing down the fifth spot, but he will be pushed by sixth and seventh men Bob Sullivan and Gary O'Dell. If the frosh produce another strong team effort like they have all year they will be hard to stop in today's championship.

Jasmin and Swain will be in the battle for the top spots along with Wesleyan's Dan Moulhan, and Northeastern's Tony Frontinerro and Paul McElroy.

A Frustrating Afternoon for the Little Redmen...

Frosh Gridders Fall to UConn in Closing Minutes, 26-20

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

Paced by the all-around play of halfback Ray Jackson and the throwing of quarterback Ray Tellier, the Connecticut freshmen tipped the UMass frosh, 26-20, Saturday afternoon at Alumni Stadium.

Jackson scored two touchdowns, while his running and pass receiving set up the two other Husky Pup scores. Tellier threw two touchdown passes, including the game winner, to tight end Joe Bacewicz with 1:43 left in the ball game.

It was a frustrating afternoon for the Little Redmen. They had several drives thwarted because of penalties, while UConn's first score was the direct result of three penalties.

With five seconds left in the game UMass was on the Connecticut 24 yard line. At this point quarterback Brian Murray's pass protection broke down and he was unable to spot all of his receivers downfield. As a result he didn't see Kevin Filley standing alone in the end zone and instead ended the game with a wild toss.

The win brought UConn's record to 5-1 while the Little Redmen fell to 2-2.

Midway through the first period Connecticut's Elwood Herald returned an Andy Dunkanidz punt 31 yards to the UMass 24 yard line. On the next play Jackson swept right end to the 13. A roughing penalty against UMass moved the ball to the 7, first-and-goal.

Two running plays by UConn netted only two yards, but an offside penalty on UMass on the third down pushed the ball half the distance to the goal line. The Little Redmen held, but on fourth down, another defensive offside infraction put the pigskin on the 1-1/2 yard line.

Tellier handed off to Jackson who hurdled in for the score. The extra point was good and the Huskies led, 7-0.

Led by quarterback Len Matuza the Little Redmen came right back and scored at 12:41 of the first period.

Key first downs by Matuza and fullback Tibb Rockwell brought UMass to the Husky Pups' 28-yard line. A 15-yard offensive holding penalty gave the home team a first-and-25 from the UConn 43. Matuza faded back, looking for split end Steve Shubert. Shubert, after giving an inside fake, gathered the ball in over his shoulder on the sideline, broke a tackle and went streaking into the end zone for the score. The extra point was good and the score was tied, 7-7.

Connecticut scored again in the second period. It drove to its own 42 yard line behind Jackson's hard running and advanced to the UMass 43 after a facemask penalty. On first down Tellier completed a screen pass to Gary Bevilacqua, which the halfback scampered with to the 25.

The UMass defense stiffened and UConn set up for a field goal. Although the Little Redmen were leary of a fake, Tellier took the snap and rolled to the left side of the field. Spotting Bevilacqua, he fired a completion and the ball was on UMass' six yard line. On the next play, Tellier set up to pass and hit Herald for the TD. The extra point was good and, with 8:15 left in the half, UConn led, 14-7.

UMass came back to score once before the end of the half. Shubert returned a punt 20 yards to the UConn 42. On second down Matuza hit tight end Doug Winslow over the middle and Winslow galloped in for the score. The extra point failed and UConn still was in front, 14-13.

After the intermission UMass came out fired-up. The Husky Pups received the kickoff, but fumbled on the first play from scrimmage and UMass linebacker Sal Pangallo recovered on the visitor 23. Matuza handed off to Rockwell, who broke through the right side of the UConn line and scored the go-ahead touchdown. The extra point was good and UMass led for the first time, 20-14.

With the ball changing hands back and forth, UMass' hopes took a turn for the worse, when, with about three minutes to go in the fray, Matuza fumbled and UConn recovered. The Husky Pups, sensing victory, drove to the UMass 25. On the next play, Little Redman hopes returned as John Welsh intercepted a pass on the 17 and returned the ball to the 20. Unfortunately they were unable to move and had to punt with 1:56 left in the contest. UConn fielded the ball on their own 44. On the first play from scrimmage Jackson went out of bounds after an 11-yard run. Moments later Tellier hit Bacewicz with the winning TD and that was the game.

MLK Council Acts to Support Coalition Strike Activities

By LOUIS DIMONACO
Assistant News Editor

The Morabrium Co-ordinating Committee of the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council has come out with a statement concerning the activities of the COALITION. The statement is as follows:

"The Moratorium Co-ordinating Committee of the MLK Council, believing that the COALITION's goals to be in the basic spirit of Moratorium, wishes to express its support of the COALITION's strike and picket line called for Thursday Nov. 13. We ask that all those who feel as we do join the picket line.

"As a sign of our support we are not scheduling any activities which may conflict with the COALITION's actions on Nov. 13."

The COALITION consists of and is supported by students of the Martin Luther King Social Action Council, UMass Students For a Democratic Society, SMILE, Greeks for peace, Student Senate Caucus for the COALITION, and Philosophers for the COALITION.

The immediate goals of the Coalition is the abolition of ROTC at UMass, an end to military and war related industrial recruitment, and an end to all military and defense research.

To achieve these ends, members of the COALITION have called a strike for tomorrow, Nov. 13. Non-obstructive picket lines will be set up first, at Bartlett Hall, then Herter Hall, Whitmore and Machmer, depending on the strike support. Those willing to join the strike should meet at Barlett Hall, 10:00 a.m. tomorrow.

In a statement made by COALITION representatives, arguments against ROTC, military recruitment and research were clarified. The statement reads in part:

"The "intellectual" values guiding ROTC put a premium on indoctrination. "The objective of ROTC training," writes Major General Autrey J. Mauroun in a letter to Mrs. Judith Follman of National A.C.L.U. (March 23, 1967), " is to inculcate habits of orderliness, instill discipline, develop patriotism, and encourage a high sense of personal order and deportment." A New York Times article of May 28, 1961, quotes Wilbur Brucker, then Secretary of the Army, as stating, "It would be a serious mistake to regard the ROTC program merely as one designed to produce a specific number of officers. More importantly the ROTC program serves to inculcate and develop in the student ideals of patriotism, sacrifice, and service to our country which can come in no other way."

We must not limit ourselves to attacking ROTC merely as an academic issue. We must also attack ROTC because it is an aspect of the growing militarism in this country and because the interests which ROTC serves are not the interests of the vast majority of the American people. ROTC serve the vital function of supplying the military with officers. According to the New York Times (January 5, 1969, p. 64) 50% of Army, 35% Navy and 30% Air Force officers are supplied through ROTC. To

Campus Strike Wants Change In War Policy

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

Members of The Coalition last night conducted a special meeting to discuss the role of ROTC at UMass and tomorrow's upcoming student strike on the Moratorium.

Speaking to an audience of approximately 35 students Coalition spokesman Sid Finehirsch stated that the strike was part of the organized effort of the Coalition for "Getting the War Machine off Campus" and would be "purposively non-obstructive," and designed not to enter buildings. Finehirsch handed out leaflets stating The Coalition's program and guidelines for the strike. He emphasized that the strike was to demonstrate that "The University is a political institution but should change its politics on this (Vietnam) war. It should recognize that the war is a bad thing."

Another student of The Coalition said that the strike "could be the first big picket line this campus has had in a long time." He also stated that part of the reasoning behind the strike is "to get people receptive to it as a tactic."

Finehirsch also announced the coming debates next Monday and Tuesday on the "War Machine on Campus" and said that he hoped "the administration will call off

DVP Speaker Newfield To Talk on "Radicalism"

By JILL WALLACH

The DVP will present their second speaker of the season tomorrow in Mahar Auditorium at 8:00 in the evening.

Jack Newfield, 31 year old assistant editor of the Village Voice will speak on 'Student Radicalism." An active and vocal supporter of the civil rights movement, the Vietnam war protests and the campaign to resist the draft, Newfield describes himself as "Pro-pot, pro-riot, and pro-cong."

A product of Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant ghetto, Newfield is also a graduate of Hunter College. In 1964 the New York Post gave him a tryout but felt "his talents were too meager to warrant offering him a job." He subsequently authored "A Prophetic Minority" which was published in 1966.

An avid supporter of the late Robert F. Kennedy, Newfield was active in the Senator's presidential campaign. But his big ambition is "to be a radical journalist."

Referendum Vote To Be Held Today

By DENISE MAGNELL
Staff Reporter

Voting on the referendum to rescind Bill S-50 will take place today in the Student Union Ballroom. Polls will be open from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Bill S-50 deals with the Student Senate's appropriation of $10,000 to subsidize half the transportation costs of those UMass students planning to go to Washington to participate in the moratorium march. As of Tuesday night, approximately 300 students had signed up for the trip to the capital.

Those senators in favor of monetary support of the march base their decisions on the fact that many students will not be able to make the trip if financial help is not made available to them. Those against Bill S-50 contend that participants of the march should pay their own fare, rather than tax the entire student body for political views not common to all. However, many student s in favor of the moratorium and completely opposed to the war have expressed agreement with this policy.

Opposition to the passage of the bill (37-36) resulted in the circulation of petitions requesting the campus-wide referendum. With an official count of 4249 names gathered, the motion was granted and arrangements to draw up the ballots were made by the Student Government Affairs committee.

Since a majority of any number of votes cast will decide the outcome of the referendum, all are urged to express their views at the polls today.

The text of the referendum is as follows:

S50 Whereas, the national action to end the war in Vietnam in Washington, D.C. on November 15, 1969 may well be the most important political action in recent years; and

Whereas, the Student Senate supports this action; be it therefore

Resolved that the Student Senate direct the Treasurer to disburse up to 50% of the cost of transportation to Washington with a maximum of $10,000. for those University of Massachusetts undergraduate students wishing to go, and be it further

Resolved that the President of the Student Senate appoint an Ad-Hoc Committee to coordinate arrangements for busses and/or other means of transportation, and to work with other groups in the area to arrange such transportation.

Do you approve the following?:

Move to rescind D50 as enacted by the Student Senate on November 5, 1969.

Penn. Ave. To Be Used By Marchers

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government agreed Tuesday to compromise and allow antiwar protesters to use part of Pennsylvania Avenue for a massive demonstration this Saturday.

The agreement was announced by Mayor Walter E. Washington and Deputy Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst, who declared last Thursday that "under no circumstances," could the Pennsylvania Avenue route be used.

The agreement followed several days of virtually continuous negotiations with sponsors of the march. It provides for the procession to proceed down the traditional parade avenue from the Capitol as far as 15th Street and from there to the grounds of the Washington Monument for a rally climaxing three days of antiwar activities.

This route makes no provision for a swing by the White House - one point that the New Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam had demanded.

Kleindienst and Washington also said the government agreed to the route after the New Mobilization promised to provide enough parade marshalls to ensure order during the mammoth march, which is expected to attract about 200,000 in what could be the biggest anti-war protest in history.

Under terms of the agreement the committee will provide 2,000 parade marshals to keep demonstrators on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue and another 500 marshals to keep crowds away from government buildings on the other side of the thoroughfare.

Meanwhile, a small advance party from the 82nd Airborne Division flew here from Ft. Bragg, N.C., to prepare for possible movement of paratroopers to the capital in connection with the weekend demonstrations.

Washington Not Asking Appeal of School Case

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Justice Department has decided against appealing a court decision that severely handicaps the process of cutting off federal funds to racially biased school districts.

A spokesman attributed the decision Tuesday to Solicitor Gen. Erwin N. Griswold, the department's No. 3 official and director of all of the government's appellate litigation.

He said Griswold's decision not to appeal was based on the feeling "that the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans should have sent the case back to the lower court."

Involved was a ruling of the New Orleans Appellate Court last Aug. 10 and a suit brought by Taylor County, Florida, against Robert H. Finch, secretary of health, education and welfare.

The court objected to the Welfare Department's policy of holding that proof of discrimination in faculty and pupil assignments constitutes proof that all programs conducted by the school district are discriminatory.

As a consequence, Finch's department was left with the additional burden of determining whether each school program that receives federal money is in violation of the law - instead of basing cutoffs on an assessment that could stem from evidence in one particular area.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Jerris Leonard, the department's civil rights chief, met with divisional lawyers concerning the Taylor County case Monday. But the decision not to appeal apparently was not made until late in the day.

Both Leonard and Finch had said earlier the New Orleans court ruling probably would be appealed to the Supreme Court.

The deadline for appealing was Monday, three months after the decision was handed down.

Although the case had wide impact on the welfare department's enforcement activities, officials there were reported Tuesday to be "not upset" by the Justice Department's decision.

MLK Council Aids Coalition

struggle against ROTC is to attack a policy which has meant ruthless, violent suppression abroad and a somewhat more subtle but very real oppression at home.

ROTC serves the interests of the Pentagon and the Pentagon serves the interests of big business. Increased American military intervention is a reflection of increased American involvement throughout the world. In 1950, 10% of the profits of US corporations (excluding banks) were earned off foreign operations. In 1964 this proportion had risen to 22%. Over this period while domestic profits for these corporations increased 66%, profits off foreign operations increased 271%.

The average American working man in no way profits from the ventures of the businessman into the third world. These ventures have lead to militarism and militarism means both higher taxes and inflation. Due to this inflation real wages over the past ten years have declined. Furthermore the procurement of cheap labor abroad means that the corporations will not only be able to pay American labor less but will also be able to fire large numbers of workers. Thus the interests of the few can determine the fates of a powerless majority. TO FIGHT AGAINST ROTC IS TO FIGHT AGAINST A SYSTEM WHICH MAKES PROFITS AND NOT PEOPLE THE FIRST PRIORITY.

The following is a reprint of the Program and Guidelines of the COALITION and Strike Committee:

"We are angry that President Lederle has utterly ignored the great anti-war sentiment on this campus by a policy of "political neutrality" on the vital moral issue of the war. We believe that only when "business as usual" stops in America will the government stop its mindless war. In this belief we take to the streets that we may encourage all of our brothers and sisters to support the Strike for Peace and respect our picket lines.

PICKET LINES. The meeting place for all pickets will be in front of Bartlett Hall at 10:00 a.m., Thurs., Nov. 13. At Bartlett we can break-down and picket a number of target buildings according to our manpower. Target buildings are Bartlett, Herter, Whitmore, Machmer, and Hasbrouck. Faculty and staff are expressly invited to join with students on the lines. Your approach to a person crossing a picket line should be a friendly effort to gain his support through leafleting and discussion, as well as example. It is essential not to use hostile words or physical obstruction against a person not supporting the Strike for Peace.

Picket signs will be provided by the Strike Committee on the lines on Thursday. However, pickets are encouraged to make their own signs in their own style.

Students are invited to devise informal street theatre groups and perform for their fellow pickets such themes as a Hate-Kill Freakout, A Celebration When the War is Over, a Funeral Procession, and the Automated War Machine.

IN-CLASS TEACH-INS. Our approach to the Strike for Peace must be to educate our community to the reasons that bring us to so strong an action. This educational process can take place in the regular classrooms. The Strike Committee urges teachers and students as far as possible to convert their regular classes into a Teach-in rather than calling off class or boycotting. Non-picketting strikers should actively participate in the Strike. Discussion leaders from the Strike Committee (see information below) are available to explain the Strike and the University's involvement in the war.

RALLY. Thursday, at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union, Jack Newfield, news commentator for the Village Voice will speak as part of the Moratorium program. At 7:30 p.m., prior to the speech, a rally will be held to Exorcise Whitmore by uprooting the War Machine in the University. The strikers will capture an effigy tank at Whitmore and roll it down to the Student Union where it will explode and burn out of its own destructive nature.

CO-ORDINATION AND INFORMATION. The Strike Committee of the Coalition and the Moratorium Committee stand in mutual support of the Strike for Peace at the University on Thursday and the Moratorium canvassing program in the surrounding towns on Friday. For further information contact the table in the Student Union lobby or the office at 207 Hampshire or call 545-0648 or 545-0649."

In co-operation with the UMass Administration the COALITION is sponsoring a series of debates concerning the University's role in the war. The debates are scheduled for November 17 and 18. Those people involved in research and recruitment at UMass have agreed to the debate, but as yet the U-Mass ROTC commandants have refused to participate in the program.

Open Letter Calls Upon Faculty

Moratorium Participation Urged

Dear faculty and staff:

Nixon's November 3 speech on Vietnam did nothing to allay our fears about the present Vietnam policy. We must continue in our opposition to U.S. foreign policy in Vietnam, and more specifically we must support the November Moratorium.

We ask faculty and staff to join us in the Moratorium. What can be done? (1) Discuss Nixon's policy in class and elsewhere. (2) Help in the canvassing and leafletting in order to reach the non-academic communities. We need drivers to take students to neighboring towns. Please come to the Moratorium table in the Student Union on Thursday, Nov. 13 at 9 a.m. or 1 p.m., or Friday, Nov. 14, at the same hours, if you can help in the canvassing. (3) Join the rally on the Amherst Common at 4:15 p.m. and the motorcade to Ware at 5:30 p.m. on Friday. (4) Join the candlelight procession at the Amherst Common Friday at 6 p.m. (5) Join the Amherst contingent for the march in Washington on Saturday, Nov. 15. Busses will leave in two groups on Friday evening. For details and tickets call the Valley Peace Center any afternoon (tel. 253-3683.).

Finally, we call your attention to the Sept. 25 Connolly resolution of the Faculty Senate, which read in part, "We urge that no member of the University take any action (against students) which could be construed as a significant constraint against individuals observing the Moratorium." While the resolution applied to the October Moratorium, we trust that faculty will honor it in the November Moratorium days.

We would like to run an ad in the COLLEGIAN showing faculty and staff support for the Moratorium and the March in Washington, which hopefully will indicate to Nixon that there is still a sizable opposition to his war policy. The ad would simply read: "We support the Moratorium and the March in Washington." If you would like your name to appear in the ad, and/or to contribute money for it, contact Prof. John Nelson (English Dept.) immediately.

Riot Control Gas Released From Munitions Plant Fire

HANOVER, Mass. (AP) - A fire fed by a series of explosions raced through a production building at a sprawling munitions plant here Tuesday, releasing into the atmosphere an undetermined quantity of a substance similar to tear gas.

No one was injured, but several firemen reportedly were overcome by the substance. Their condition was not serious.

The substance was identified only as "CS," a riot control agent manufactured for the military. Though a fine powder, it's dispersed from cannisters like tear gas and has a similar effect on human beings.

A brisk wind and fine rain kept the CS from gathering in any large concentrations.

At one point officials were considering evacuating residents of the area, but this was dropped about an hour after the fire broke out when authorities declared the situation under control.

New ideas, new talents, and new members are always welcome.

As I See It.

The Student Senate and Vietnam

I would like to devote the first part of my column to the attempt currently underway in James House to recall its Senator, Geoffrey Levine, for his support of the Washington appropriation in the face of his dormitory's opposition. It is a situation which offers some instruction on the larger questions, and some insight into the depth of the Senate's feeling on the matter of Vietnam.

Senator Levine, in his speech on the Senate floor, stated in part "I am and have been now for four years morally, emotionally, intellectually, and physically involved in the antiwar movement. It has been the primary concern of my life . . . I do not think that there is any question other than the war that would cause me any doubt but to represent my constituents."

Noting the possiblity of recall, Senator Levine continued, "My commitment towards the betterment of humanity supercedes my commitment to William James (House) . . . It is therefore necessary for me as an individual to do all in my power to stop this war. I believe that the November 15 march on Washington will help stop it. I believe that the Student Senate's allotment of $10,000 . . . will help stop it, and I believe that my vote in favor of S50 will help stop it.

"Despite my sincere desire to represent the members of my house as their Senator, my moral responsibility to stopping the war in Vietnam is greater. I believe that the members of my house will realize that I have acted in good faith to the dictates of my conscience, and to them."

It was a simple statement, not exceptionally eloquent, not in its words at least. But I find it as refreshing as it is rare to see someone who has the simple courage of his convictions. I have always believed that what students ought to expect of their Senators, and of the Senate, is not necessarily representation, but leadership - intelligent, informed, and incisive leadership with some degree of foresight.

On the question of Vietnam, it is no secret that the Senate in general, and its leadership in particular, feels more strongly about the uselessness of our continued involvement in Vietnam than does the student body at large. And it will continue to.

The indefinite prolongation of our commitment - since November 3rd clearly the intent of our present administration - will continue to wreak havoc on our national values, poison our international relations, alienate the national government from the academic community, prevent the overdue reordering of our national priorities (including an increased commitment to education), and guarantee that each eligible male graduate of this institution will be faced upon graduation with the possibility of surrendering his life in an undeclared war which bears no sane relation to our national interest, and which has no hope of success by any definition, our very presence alienating the South Vietnamese more with each passing day.

The Washington peace action is simply a means to communicate, peacefully and dramatically, to the national leadership - particularly in Congress - the sheer futility of our continued presence in Vietnam. The Senate believed simply that this was a worthy purpose, and sought to lend aid to that undertaking. That action was based on a firm belief that our involvement in Vietnam must be terminated forthwith.

P.S. For those who are concerned, the leaflet urging a NO vote was printed as a favor to an individual student. Whatever costs there are will be borne by him and his friends.

Muskie Urges Dialogue, Involvement in Society

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - U.S. Sen. Edmund S. Muskie said yesterday that Americans "must learn to talk with - not at - each other and listen" if they are to build a whole country.

Coalition Meeting

classes to allow people to participate in these debates."

A film on ROTC was then shown which was produced by the Boston Newsreel. The film examined not only the role of ROTC on campus and such issues as academic credit, but also the whole idea of the University's relation to research and the military.

A discussion of ROTC at UMass followed this in which it was stated that the Coalition's theory on the issue is that "ROTC is part of the war machine (only part of that machine) fighting the Vietnam war, an immoral war, and we must get it off campus."

"ROTC is an outside group; UMass and the Army should not be wedded," said one student, while another declared that "I think we should abolish ROTC."

The main arguments against ROTC centered around its being given a special "boost" such as academic credit and classroom facilities as opposed to other organizations such as SDS or IBM which are not, and the whole issue of the University's ties with the government and military.

While not mentioning either by name, the Maine Democrat apparently referred to President Nixon's and Vice President Spiro T. Agnew's appeals for unity on the Administration's Vietnam policy.

Muskie, the Maine Democrat who was the unsuccessful vice presidential candidate last year, spoke at a National Conference on Government luncheon.

"At a time of divisiveness, we hear appeals for national unity," Muskie said Tuesday.

"At a time when our shortcomings are the subject of wide-spread concern and protest, it is suggested that silence is the hallmark of patriotism."

Muskie said a whole country "draws its strength not from silence, but from the quality of its dialogue."

Muskie said, "We have confrontation today, because citizens have not been involved in solving their own problems."

Pentagon officials said no final decision has been made, but they indicated a light brigade of between 1,500 and 2,000 paratroopers may be brought up before the weekend.

The Defense Department called it "a normal part of the precautionary measures we have been asked to take by the Justice Department."

A spokesman stressed that "in no event would federal units be moved into the area unless and until requested by the Justice Department."

School of Education to Help N.Y. Experiment Keep Running

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst has offered to help keep alive a controversial New York demonstration school district encompassing Ocean - Hill-Brownsville and New York City.

The district is scheduled to be abolished next Monday when new district lines are to be drawn under a recently approved decentralization law.

In a last-minute appeal to maintain the experiment in community control, administrator Rhody McCoy asked approval of an alliance with the UMass School of Education to forestall a plan which would phase out the district.

The UMass school would evaluate the results of the three-year pilot project designed for underprivileged children and would help develop and staff future programs.

Robert Woodbury, assistant dean of the UMass School of Education, said yesterday that no Commonwealth funds would be used. It would be financed by New York City and New York state.

If approved, the alliance would continue an involvement between UMass and McCoy's district which has been going on for at least a year. Woodbury explained that the Amherst school's focus on urban education is part of its commitment to build a national reputation. UMass is already working in urban schools in Philadelphia, Washington and Temple City, Calif.

Dwight Allen, dean of the UMass School of Education, sat beside McCoy at a press conference in New York City when the proposal was announced. It came as a surprise to Joseph Monserrat, president of the Board of Education, which must offer a decentralization plan by Dec. 22.

Under a state mandate, the city must be divided into 30 to 33 districts with 20,000 students each. Ocean Hill-Brownsville has about 9,000 students.

Allen said it would be regrettable to phase out an experiment without evaluating it, though on the basis of his current involvement, he said, that "some exciting and significant" things have been accomplished in the district. He estimated it would take two years for evaluation.

McCoy said he had invited participation by the UMass school because it is "the most flexible and innovative" school of education he knows.

Research Team Investigates Problems of Sludge Removal

The University of Massachusetts environmental engineering program has begun work on the third year of a federally-backed study of water pollution caused by sludge from water treatment plants.

The Federal Water Pollution Control Administration has notified the environmental engineering program of the award of a $60,177 grant for the third year of a three-year study whose total funding is $157,667. The study is being made by the civil engineering department.

Directed by Donald D. Adrian, associate professor of civil engineering, a team is investigating means of disposing of sludge produced in the process of treating raw water to make it fit for municipal and industrial uses.

The researchers are investigating various methods of reducing the volume of sludge by removing some of its water, which often constitutes 98 percent by volume. The group has developed laboratory techniques to enable them to predict how any given sludge will react to the various dewatering processes.

Other members of the research team are Research Assoicate John F. Ramsay and Research Assistants Edward Clark and Kuang-Mei Lo, both Ph. D. candidates.

Talent Revue to Have Varied Program Format

The UMass Intercollegiate Talent Revue will be presented on Nov. 22, 8:15 p.m., at Bowker Auditorium by the University Chorale.

The show, featuring 5-college area talent, is one project in the Chorale's continuing drive to raise funds for a spring European tour.

In presenting the program, the Chorale plans to bring a fresh, new kind of entertainment to the university. In addition, the group hopes that this year's show will initiate attempts to present the program on an annual basis.

The Revue will include The Jeffersons, Musicor recording artists, presently on a New England college concert tour. The duo, formed at UMass in 1967, will perform "Suzanne", "Changes", and other contemporary folk music.

Also featured in the program will be Frannie Botelho, who has become a campus favorite at such events as the Military Ball, Freshman Picnic, and Pan-Hellenic Sing.

The Musigals and The Statesmen will both be performing their first concerts of the 1969-70 season.

In all, 10 acts will be presented, ranging from song and dance to drama.

"Environment as a Political Issue" Is Topic of Sierra Club Lecture

The dynamics of saving the environment through political action will be discussed by David Brower, president of the recently formed Friends of the Earth and former Sierra Club president, at UMass, Thursday, Nov. 13, at 8:15 p.m. in Thompson Hall 104.

"Environment as a Political Issue" will be the topic of the lecture sponsored by the UMass department of government and the local unit of the Sierra Club as part of the Distinguished Ecologist Lecture Series. Dr. Lewis C. Mainzer of the government department will moderate. The talk is open to the public without charge.

Mr. Brower was executive director of the Sierra Club for 16 years until his resignation in May of this year, shortly after which he announced formation of Friends of the Earth (FOE) and became director of the John Muir Institute.

FOE is an international conservation organization which is not tax-deductible, according to Mr. Brower, "to enable it to concentrate on legislative and political action which is non-compromising and aggressive."

Mr. Brower serves as director of the John Muir Institute for Environmental Studies, a tax-deductible, non-profit organization dedicated to environmental research and education. In addition to sponsoring symposiums, gathering and interpreting new scientific information, JMI will play a key role in publishing a series of books of international scope, "The Earth's Wild Places", conceived by Mr. Brower and John Milton of the Conservation Foundation.

Both FOE and JMI are designed to fight what Mr. Brower describes as "cirrhosis of the environment" . . . "There is only one environment that will sustain us and the other living things we share the planet with. Man's diminishing of the earth is a crime and the worst of all, grand larceny against the future."

The new conservation organizations have joint offices in San Francisco, New York, Washington, Albuquerque, and correspondents in Anchorage, Chicago, Honolulu, London and Morges, Switzerland.

Mr. Brower has received such awards as a merit award from the California Conservation Council, the National Parks Association Award, the Paul Bartsch Award of the Audubon Naturalist Society, and the Carey-Thomas Award for the best example of creative publishing.

Mr. Brower is active in such leading U.S. conservation organizations as the Natural Resources Council, National Parks Association, Wilderness Society, Trustees for Conservation and others. He is a 10th Mountain Division veteran of World War II and a graduate of the University of California.

Mr. Brower will participate in a dialogue with faculty, student and staff in the Colonial Room, Student Union, at 3:30 p.m. This will be followed by a reception at 5:30 and dinner at 6:30 in the Hampshire Room of the Student Union. Dinner reservations must be made in advance through University Food Service, Student Union.

T.B. Tests should be taken at the Infirmary by students planning to be student teachers in the Spring semester.

The following dates have been scheduled:

L-O - DECEMBER 2
P-Z - DECEMBER 9

Student Teacher Meetings To be Held Today, Tomorrow

There will be a meeting for prospective spring semester student teachers on both November 12 and November 13 in the School of Education Auditorium. Members of the Center for Teacher Education will explain the intern and student teaching programs, and those special programs available to student teachers.

Students will be given an opportunity to sign up for programs which may suit their special needs. There are inner city programs in Hartford and Philadelphia; programs in the Boston suburbs and on the Cape Cod seashore; programs in traditional and non-traditional schools, and other choices. Students should attend the meetings to give themselves an opportunity for an intelligent choice regarding career training designed to meet special needs.

Information will also be given concerning job placement, state certification and student teaching procedures.

Wednesday, November 12, meeting will be for secondary student teachers. Thursday evening's November 13, will be for elementary student teachers.

Elem. Ed. Majors Must Make Appointments

All Elementary Education Majors are urged to make appointments as soon as possible with their Academic Advisors to plan their academic programs for the Spring semester. Counseling Day is scheduled for December 3.

Due to the large number of Elementary Education Majors it is impossible to adequately counsel all Education Majors on one day. As a result the Academic Advisors urge all Education Majors to call for a counseling appointment before December 3.

Appointments can be made by calling Norman Lyster on Mondays and Wednesdays or William Minichiello on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Office hours on Mondays and Wednesdays are from 8:30 - 11:00 a.m. and 1:30 - 3:00 p.m. On Tuesdays and Thursdays office hours are from 8:30 - 12:00 noon and 2:30 - 3:30 p.m. The Advising Office is located in Room 123 A in the School of Education and the telephone numbers are 5-1543 and 5-1544.

Every tampon you use is a trip to the Powder Room.

The fewer tampons you have to use, the fewer trips you have to make.

That's the beauty of MEDS tampons. They're so absorbent you'll probably need fewer of them.

MEDS are made differently. That's why. They're made with soft, absorbent rayon.

First, there's a gentle rayon cover. Then a layer of rayon fibers that absorb quickly. Then another layer of fine rayon storage fibers that absorb steadily. And, in the center, a cushioned layer that holds, and holds some more.

Can you imagine? Some tampons are just chunks of cotton. No wonder you probably need more of them.

This month try MEDS. They come in regular or super, with a soft polyethylene applicator.

See how much better fewer tampons can be.

Children's Theatre Performs Moliere Play

Photos by Patricia Lempart

The first production of the University of Massachusett's Children's Theatre will be held on November 14, 1969 at Bartlett Auditorium. There is no doubt that each student on campus will enjoy Aurand Harris' adaptation of the Moliere comedy, "A Doctor in Spite of Himself", and that it will be of equal interest to young and old.

Mrs. Dorothy Aldrich, Director of Children's Theatre at the University is in charge of the production. Her interpretation of Moliere's imaginative treatment of the ridiculous is both realistic and humorously portrayed. Professor Peter Vagenas, Speech Department, is the designer of the sets which feature the ancient Greek Periaktoi. Prism shaped flats are decorated on each of three sides, thus enabling three complete scene changes to take place in view of the audience. Since the play will also be taken on tour to Greenfield and Holyoke the sets were designed to be readily dis-assembled.

All nineteen characters move on and off stage with the smooth ease of professionals. It is difficult for the viewer to remember that the actors are students. The attention to detail which Mrs. Alrich has insisted upon is clearly proven throughout the entire play, resulting in a production well worth your attendance.

A DOCTOR IN SPITE OF HIMSELF, written by Moliere, adapted by Aurand Harris, will be presented in Bartlett Theatre on Friday, November 14 at 7:30 p.m., Saturday, November 15 at 10 a.m. and 2:30 p.m., and Sunday, November 16 at 2 p.m. All tickets are 50¢, by reservation only. University Theatre Box Office - 545-2579.

Penn Handler, whose major is Theatre Production, is the stage manager. Penn also takes the part of Prologue in the play. Sue Holmes, is both Assistant Director and Assistant Stage Manager. Sue is also a Theatre major.

Costuming has been done under the direction of Diana Brown, Service Assistant in the Speech Department, and more care could not have been taken. The costumes are lavish and colorful with tremendous detail for the unusual clearly evident. Make-up is done by Stephen Driscoll, another Theatre major, class of '72. The entire crew share the responsibility of gathering the necessary "props".

Sganarelle, a woodcutter, is portrayed by Joseph Arsenault, who previously finished second in a state wide dramatics competition. Sganarelle's wife, the fiery tempered Martine, is well-done by Barbara Lewis. The parts of Robert, a friend, and Geronte, the rich merchant are taken by Ernest Bettez, who portrayed Joris last year in the Children's Theatre "Two Pails of Water". Don Quatrale and Naomi Berkowitz, are extremely good as the servant Lucas and his wife Jacqueline. Don played the lead last year in U. T.'s production of "Rumplestilskin"; he recently joined this cast after production was well under way. Naomi is the author of a play entitled "NJG" which is soon to be presented at the University.

Geronte's maid and " the doctor's" nurse are both played by Judith Gantshar. Stephanie Rosen plays the second maid Louise and the patient, Henriette. The third maid, Nicole and the patient Marguerite are done by Linda Laudierel. The last maid, Jeanne is done by Diane Goff, who takes the part of Thibaut's son, Perrin as well.

Harold Swinimer takes both the parts of Leandre, the young lover, and the clever "tree". His beloved Lucinde, around whom the story revolves, is done by Megan Woodward. The parts of Geronte's servant Valere and Thibaut, an old man, are capably handled by Joel Mayer.

The National Shakespeare Company begins a four day residency at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst tomorrow, November 13th with the first of six performances in Bowker Auditorium. This program has been arranged by the University's Fine Arts Council as the major dramatic offering for the first semester. During the residency, this noted company will perform three classics from the dramatic literature in repertory. The schedule of performances is as follows: Thursday, Nov. 13, 8:00 p.m. "Macbeth"; Friday, Nov. 14, 8:00 p.m. Moliere's "The School for Wives"; Saturday, Nov. 15, 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m. "Macbeth" and Sunday, Nov. 16, 2:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m. "The Tempest".

Among the actors taking part in the National Shakespeare Company's visit to the University will be Philip Hanson, one of America's most noted personalities of the stage. Mr. Hanson has a repertoire of some thirty-eight Shakespearean roles, and has appeared widely in one-man shows and with several prominent companies. Mr. Hanson is preparing for his London season of 1970 when he will present his entire repertoire of twelve one-man shows.

Joining Philip Hanson will be Marguerite Davis, one of the country's more gifted young actresses and Rob Evan Collins, an alumni of the University of Massachusetts who has gained a fine reputation for his performances throughout the country.

Reserved single tickets for the performances are priced at $1.50 for UMass undergrads; $2.50 for UMass Grad, students, faculty, staff and other students and $3.00 for the general public and may be purchased at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall daily Monday - Friday, 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. and at Bowker Box Office, two hours before each performance. FROM OUR SIDE

The Referendum

University undergraduate students have the right today to express their opinions on what has become one of the most controversial actions by the Student Senate in recent years.

The Senate by a 37-36 vote last Wednesday authorized the expenditure of up to $10,000 to defray half the cost of transportation of any UMass undergraduate who will travel to Washington this weekend to protest the war in Vietnam. At the same time the Senate refused to allow a referendum on the matter, realizing that it would be very difficult to sell the proposal to the student body at large.

Last Thursday a group of students organized a petition calling for a campus-wide vote on the matter. In just a few hours, the required number of signatures was obtained and the result is today's referendum.

The main argument against the expenditure is that student tax money should not be used to finance the activities of a few and that the money should not be used for activities not directly related to the campus.

In the past few years hundreds of thousands of dollars have been wasted on this campus for so-called "entertainment" on big weekends. Upwards of $20,000 has been spent for a single concert with only a relatively small percentage of the entire UMass student body attending the event.

Last week we announced that we could support the $10,000 expenditure if it was explicitly stated that only UMass undergrads who paid the student activities tax could use this money to help pay their way to Washington. We are satisfied with the wording of the bill passed last Wednesday, and thus urge UMass students to vote "NO" on today's referendum. A "NO" vote means the Senate should spend the $10,000 for the Washington trip.

Unlike concerts, where the number of persons who can attend is restricted, anyone who wants to go to Washington will be able to, if the proposal on the referendum is defeated.

The war in Vietnam must be ended immediately. The only way to insure that the President will bring the troops home as soon as possible is for maximum public pressure to be applied. UMass students can do their part by attending the anti-war rally Saturday in Washington.

No matter what your view on the matter is, VOTE today. Unless you vote today, you have no right to complain tomorrow.

In the Nation. Mobilization and Confrontation

(Editor's Note: The following is an article by Tom Wicker reprinted from the New York Times of Tuesday, November 11, 1969).

WASHINGTON - Dean Rusk is said to have remarked at a White House dinner last week that as a member of the "loyal opposition," he had become "more loyal than opposition" after President Nixon's Nov. 3 speech on Vietnam. The all-inclusive sprawl of this speech is aptly suggested by the fact that others here heard it as an outright pledge to withdraw all American troops. One prominent antiwar Senator, Mike Mansfield of Montana, now is joining in sponsorship of a resolution of support for Mr. Nixon.

But however the speech may have obscured the facts of the President's policy toward Vietnam, it left no doubt of his attitude toward domestic critics. Mr. Nixon's theme was that the only way to get peace was to support his policy, whatever it is; and that visible dissent was, in fact, support for a Communist prolongation of the war.

The predictable result of these echoes of Lyndon Johnson was to arouse the anger of those who have learned to discount the notion of Presidential infallibility, and who are rightly convinced that if the war is one step nearer an end today that it was in 1967 it is only because of sustained public dissent and political opposition. They know that to say what Mr. Nixon said was, in fact and effect, to equate dissenters of every character with what Vice President Agnew has more forthrightly called "rotten apples."

This reaction was so predictable, in fact, that Mr. Nixon must have known - or at least feared - that his remarks would increase the emotional content, if not necessarily the size, of the Mobilization demonstrations to be held in this city this weekend. Then it also became known that the Justice Department would deny permission for a march up Pennsylvania Avenue past the White House, on grounds that the threat of violence was too great.

SPURRING A CONFRONTATION

But there can be no doubt whatever - not for anyone who has tried to learn anything from the urban riots and student demonstrations of the past few years - that it was the Nixon speech and the Justice Department's denial of the Pennsylvania Avenue permit that really raised the possibility of some kind of a confrontation.

Denying the use of streets and public places to throngs of demonstrators, as Mayor Daley did last year in Chicago, almost inevitably makes an inherently unstable situation that much more dangerous. Loosing the police to retake by force buildings seized by college students has almost always made matters worse. Building up an atmosphere of toughness and hostility in advance of an incident merely increases tensions all around.

These are not theories but the conclusions that any thoughtful person has to draw from the troubled history of demonstrations in the last few years. Yet the Justice Department appears - not only by the permit denial but by making difficulties about parking, public buildings, restrooms, and the like - to be preparing for the possibility of violence in a way that increases rather than diminishes the likelihood that it will occur. If so, it is not only bad law enforcement, it is likely in the long run to be bad politics for the Nixon Administration.

AN UNWANTED EFFECT

Surely Mr. Nixon does not wish the world to see protesting Americans clubbed in the streets with the White House as a backdrop. That would provide the exact opposite of the impression of national unity he wants to give to the world; it would mock American pretensions to political and intellectual liberty; it would inflame those passions the President said he hoped to calm when he took office promising to "bring us together."

The Johnson Administration permitted the massive march on Washington in 1967, then maintained order in the city with relatively little violence. Mr. Nixon can hardly wish it said that he permitted less dissent, and more violence resulted; yet that is exactly what could happen if his Administration maintains its present attitude. And while tough action against the demonstrators might be momentarily popular with some of the President's supporters, that would be offset by the degree to which the antiwar forces would be further embittered and aroused.

In fact - aside from any pious rhetoric about the evils of violence - neither side has anything to gain from a violent confrontation. It would only dramatize the dissent Mr. Nixon wants to dampen and obscure the cause that inspires the marchers. So if a chance exists for accommodation, both sides ought to seize it out of sheer self-interest; and from the same practical political point of view, the Justice Department which has the power to initiate a compromise, would do well to use it swiftly.

The Real Price for Peace

Real UMie. Ugly Head Bringing Us Together

The real UMIE reared its ugly head last week. The fabled "silent majority" is becoming vocal, and in a most interesting way. As soon as the Student Senate passed a bill giving money to support the November Moratorium, the cry went up. Howdare the Senate act in such an unrepresentative action? Everyone knows that the average UMass student has better things to spend his money on.

The ten thousand dollars was left over from Homecoming, an adventure much more worthy of large expenditures. Upcoming is Winter Carnival and S E N D O F F. But of course, the thousands of dollars spent there is understandable. It's no wonder that we don't have any left to spend on endeavors like peace demonstrations. We can spend more than seventy thousand dollars on the INDEX. There is no limit when it comes to our own pleasure and selfishness.

This is the symbol of the silent majority: greed and selfishness. Nothing is too good for us - anything is too much for someone else. We're fine. We don't have to think of war and suffering, because we don't see it. All we see are our own bloated needs. We're gluttons!

The Senate, that same night, defeated a motion to give seventeen hundred dollars to fight prejudice and hate in Dorchester County, South Carolina. God help those poor unrepresentative representatives then. I can hear the cries for blood just thinking about it. But, I suppose we shouldn't be too hard on ourselves. After all, we are for peace and freedom.

PETER THIFFAULT
Editorial Staff

O Mr. Nixon, Mr. Nixon, Mr. Nixon. I'm going to Washington. It won't make any difference, of course, Americans will probably always hate and make war, but I'm going simply to show you my nausea. I never liked you. Understand, I can't hate you, you're too simple. I just dislike you intensely, and besides, you make a great scapegoat.

You asked us to pray for your plan, Mr. Nixon, and I'm praying, I'm praying hard, but not for your plan.....for you.

I sincerely hope you won't be persuaded by that "vocal minority". I know that you've chosen the master plan.

It sure was funny when the 10 PM blip blipped out your sentence about "moral standards".

Gee, Mr. Nixon, you even stumbled over Woodrow Wilson's name. Freudian slip, perhaps?

And when you said that if your plan was wrong, the critics won't say anything, was that because they might be dead?

Can you imagine my children coming home from school one day shouting gleefully, "Daddy, daddy, today we learned about the Nixon Doctrine!"

I'm awfully glad that GOD is on our side, but don't you think that it would be funny if all our fellow Americans were wrong?

Wasn't that a terrible thing Ho Chi Minh wrote back to you reaffirming his commitment?

Americans must never be defeated. We have never lost a war, and by GOD, we never will, at least not while Richard Nixon is The President.

It must really choke you up writing to the parents of all those brave American boys about their deaths. Why, one day, death might come to Tricia or Julie or even David.

You are one of the great silent majority, Mr. Nixon, the majority so stupid and conditioned that they worship you.

I agree that our country's prestige is in danger, but I am confident that you will never depart in this nation's tradition of dictator-supporting.

Threats are very aggressive, Mr. Nixon. I'm glad that we have policy instead of threats.

Mr. Nixon, you are one of the greatest Presidents this country has ever had. You're bringing us together.

Public Financing of Private Beliefs???

Senator Kentfield's letter of Nov. 8 shows an unwillingness to confront the real issue (s): whether or not the $10,000 should be spent and whether or not it is legitimate that the students should have a say in deciding upon it. His defense of this legislation is a mixture of emotional appeal, uncompromising pseudo-moralistic platitudes, and outright slander.

To begin with, we argue from the stand that student tax money should not finance the efforts of individual conscience. To go beyond this in this letter would be needless elaboration. What is alarming is the conclusion that is logically drawn from this letter: that people don't know what is good for them and hence must have such matters decided for them by their morally superior, unrepresentative Student Senators. Their whole argument centers around the evils of the war in Vietnam, and the assumption that this march is going to stop it; therefore any means of sending large numbers of people to Washington is legal by their own narrow definition of morality. Who can say what the immediate results of this march will be, though? The proponents of this legislation seem to be saying that theirs is the only road to peace, and hence should be financed in any way possible.

Now I come to matter of slander - a subject that I touched upon before in an editorial printed in the CENTRAL AREA VOICE on Nov. 6. Sen. Kentfield makes the sweeping statement that we are supporting the Nixon stand and "trying to cancel an attempt to end the carnage".

This is both absurd and irrelevant. On what we think of the war, I cannot presume to speak for the many students who worked to put $50 on this Wednesday's referendum. My own view is that while I believe that the moratorium activities have their good points, and while I support the right of legal and peaceful dissent, this is certainly not the only legitimate road to peace.

The question at hand is whether student tax money should be spent to pay for the travel expenses of a political pressure group. So far Sen. Kentfield's other sweeping generalization that this money would encourage the largest participation of any University activity has not materialized. At present only 180 students have signed up to make the trip, even at the low price of $8.50.

One final point: Sen Kentfield says that "some students" have seen fit to oppose the action of the Senate. When the Senate acts in an admittedly unrepresentative fashion, what other choice is there? Must one blindly accept the ultimatum that certain senators have a monopoly on wisdom? Such a statement, coming from a person associated with a movement that praises the right of dissent, does indeed seem highly contradictory. That statement is an insult to the intelligence of every UMass student. Now, despite certain senators' fear of your opinion, you will have a definite chance to voice it, by voting on the referendum. Remember, the vote in the Senate was a tie, broken by Pres. Balboni in the bill's favor, so one vote does count! Get out and vote to repudiate public financing of private beliefs by voting yes to rescind $50.

Vote No: Having Heard the Arguments

To the editor:

The taxpayers are outraged. How can that unrepresentative body which pompously calls itself the Student Senate dare to appropriate $10,000 to a political activists for a ride to Washington? Well, the answers are quite simple. To begin, the money was appropriated much in the same way $88,929 was given to the Collegian to produce a daily source of campus information, half of which is advertising; in the same way that $75,413 was given to the Index to produce a fat book of pretty pictures; in the same way that $26,816 was appropriated to Area Governments so that they could oppose the Senate on matters concerning Residence Hall self-determination (Southwest Assembly excepted) and present to the Board of Trustees a divided student front; and in the same way that a total of $5,941 was given to the Band, the Precisionettes, and the Flying Redmen to march around on a field. It should come as no shock to anyone that there are some taxpaying students on our campus who would rather not watch these groups march. This group of taxpaying students would also rather not watch their fellow Americans march into a war that is immoral, unjust and undeclared.

It would seem that those same students (who have no objection to appropriating $197,199 for organizations whose function has no relevance to what has been alleged to be a minority that is interested in saving some lives) would prohibit this alleged minority from using up to $10,000 of that same money. In fact, at this time, there is no reason to believe that anywhere near the $10,000 will be used, and the balance will revert back to the Senate so that the Students for Foster Furculo will have some hope for an appropriation if they decide to approach the Senate with a budget request.

The question of fairness arises. Why should one group of students be appropriated $88,929 and another group not be appropriated up to $10,000? Any group has the right to ask the Student Body to support them; the Student Senate is the body elected to make the decisions based on the knowledge of the facts relevant to the appropriation.

Certainly, it would be impractical for the students to be approached individually for their opinion on each budget proposal. A referendum on each budget request would be impractical. Why make exception? Concerned students must realize that there are arguments on each side of this question, and that the students who comprise the Senate have heard all of them. Having heard all the arguments, the Senate voted in favor of the appropriation for the March on Washington.

Support your student government. Vote "NO" on the referendum.

MICHAEL MACMILLAN
Commuter Senator

Ugly Foot

At a time when students across the country are speaking out for more meaningful representation in the nation's decision making process the recent action of the Student Senate regarding the funding of a trip to Washington without permitting a referendum on the issue is viewed by this writer as bureaucratic and hypocritical.

When as controversial an issue as using $10,000 of student funds to aid peace marchers comes to a close vote within the Senate and yet is prevented from being placed on a referendum ballot that would allow the student body to voice its opinion, the ugly foot of bureaucracy has nudged its foot in the door of student government.

If one considers that the Moratorium itself is a fight by the people for more control over the decisions which affect us all, one can not help but view the conduct of the Student Senate, which on one hand supports the Moratorium and on the other hand denies the students a referendum, as hypocritical!

Has bureaucracy and hypocracy gained a foot hold in student government? I sincerely hope not, but students might be well advised to keep a careful watch.

You'see, on "speed," you don't eat, you don't sleep, you don't feel you have to pay any attention to your health . . . because you feel so "up" all the time.

A Substitute for Logic

To the editor:

The column in Wednesday's COLLEGIAN regarding President Nixon's national address was amazingly inane. You stated that ". . .to believe that Communism is a monolithic force that is bent on destroying us is naive." Upon what do you base this bold statement? In DAS KAPITAL Karl Marx, the father of all modern Socialist and Communist thought, wrote that to hurry along "the inevitable process of social class struggle" revolution and force was entirely justifiable.

You also state that ". . .the North Vietnamese are winning the war on all fronts, militarily, psychologically, propaganda, and public opinion." The North Vietnamese are not winning this war. They alone do not have the resources or manpower to have remained in it for its present duration of eight years. They are obviously being supported by larger communist sponsor countries. Russian weapons have been found on North Vietnamese soldiers. Do you still deny that Communism is bent on destroying or embarassing us?

You attack patriotism and although it may be popularly outdated, it is still a valid cause when morally right. And in this case the cause is morally right, for North Vietnam has no right to force its government on South Vietnam.

What your editorial did prove is that although you do have a large vocabulary of our letter words; you are not equally proficient in your logic. You attacked the man but you made few points or validity. You have killed all reason and you use emotion as substitue for logic. Perhaps you are the one with ". . .no soul, no compassion, and no sense." Think about it.

Atty. Gen. Approves of Grass For Research on BU Students

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn Monday authorized Boston University to allow the use of students in a research study of the effects of smoking marijuana.

The study, Quinn said, will entail testing the psychological differences between heavy and casual users of marijuana and the effects of the drug upon these two types of users.

The study, to be conducted by three psychiatrists at the Boston University School of Medicine, calls for recruiting 16 males over age 21 to take part in the project.

Eight of the subjects will be heavy users (those who smoke marijuana every day) and eight will be casual users (those who smoke once a week or less).

The attorney general's permission for the study was needed since possession of and use of the narcotic is illegal under Massachusetts laws.

The permission was given in a letter sent over the weekend to Boston attorney Neil L. Chayet, counsel for the three BU psychiatrists. News of the action was made public yesterday by Quinn's office. The attorney general is on a previously unannounced week-long Caribbean cruise.

The 16 drug users chosen will be recruited from "the drug subculture," according to the BU project outline. The marijuana to be used will be supplied by the National Institute of Mental Health, an agency of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and the Federal Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs.

The project will be conducted by Dr. Roger E. Mayer, Dr. Seymour Fischer and Dr. Richard C. Pillard at the psycho-pharmacology laboratory in the medical school. The study will take four months to complete.

In his letter to Chayet, Quinn asked that the research findings be made available to him. The attorney general recently called upon the deans of the three medical schools in Massachusetts to conduct research studies on marijuana as an aid to officials in determining whether to change the state's laws on possession and use of marijuana.

Quinn said that he would have no objection to the research project as long as it was carried out within the law, a section of which makes possession and control of narcotic drugs lawful in certain circumstances.

Quinn added that he has notified various police authorities in the state of his decision. Officials at Boston University have given assurances that there will be a physician present during all testing and that the identities of the subjects will be kept confidential, according to the project outline.

Chayet, considered an expert in the field of medical-legal research on drugs, praised Quinn's decision. "The attorney general has helped to further one of the most pressing priorities of our society today." Chayet added that although some 12 million people in the country use marijuana, "there has been virtually no research in this area."

Chicago Riot Trial Nears Third Month

CHICAGO (AP) - More exciting than many stage show thrillers, and longer running, the Chicago riot conspiracy trial is now almost two months old and nobody seems to know when it will end.

The prosecution, which shows up daily at U.S. District Court with two large cartons of documents, hasn't yet finished presenting its case. The defendants, who arrive with press releases and Viet Cong flags, are still waiting their turn.

Eight persons were charged with conspiring to cross state lines with the intent to incite rioting during the 1968 Democratic National Convention.

But last week, one of the eight, Black Panther leader Bobby G. Seale, was removed in the middle of the trial. Judge Julius J. Hoffman, because of Seale's continuous outbursts in court, declared a mistrial in his case, then sentenced him to four years in jail for contempt of court.

The trial began with Seale, the only Negro defendant, playing a minor role compared to the antics of Yippie leader Abbie Hoffman and the sharp debate between Judge Hoffman and the defense lawyers, William M. Kunstler and Leonard I. Weinglass.

The exchanges came when the judge denied every defense motion including: one that he disqualify himself, another that the trial be moved to the International Amphitheatre and one that he declare a mistrial because of the inflections in his voice when he read the indictments to the jury.

"Your honor sounded like Orson Wells reading the Declaration of Independence," Kunstler said.

"I've never been compared to that great actor, Orson Wells," the judge replied, "but I deny the motion."

Seale's emergence as the principal actor in the courtroom drama came after Hoffman denied his pleas to defend himself. Seale contended that he was not defended by Kunstler, who had signed a legal document indicating he was Seale's lawyer.

Experienced lawyers have taken opposing positions on the judge's ruling. Several supported him and others said the refusal to grant Seale permission to defend himself would constitute a valid appeal.

Seale then began his interruptions after the ruling. If his rights were denied, Seale declared, "then Judge Hoffman is a fascist, racist pig!"

For four weeks of continued outbursts, Seale's language grew more vitriolic. The climax was reached Oct. 29 when judge Hoffman ordered U.S. marshals to "take him out and deal with him as he should be dealt with."

Seale was returned with a gag in his mouth and manacled to a chair. He stayed that way for three days.

The 10 women and two men on the jury appeared to ignore Seale's captivity. Only two of the jurors gave him more than a glance.

Seale, wrapped like a mummy, muttered muffled words through his gag. Judge Hoffman relented after the third day and ordered his gag and bounds removed.

But Seale continued his interruptions and Hoffman issued his contempt ruling Nov. 5.

Throughout the altercations between Seale and the U.S. marshals, lawyer Kunstler made several emotional objections:

"When are we going to stop this medieval torture? I am ashamed to be an American lawyer at this moment!"

Judge Hoffman, 74, who nurtures an intense dislike for any hint of insult toward the bench repeatedly reminded the defense that "the court has been called a pig!"

Once when Kunstler argued that the prosecutors should be admonished for calling his colleague Weinglass a phony, the judge said, "The word phony is in the dictionary."

"So is the word pig," Kunstler retorted.

The props in this trial have been unusual. The prosecution has the cartons of documents. The defendants have the press releases and Viet Cong flags.

Black armbands which the defendants have worn honored the anniversary of the death of Che Guevara, the Cuban revolutionary. Abbie Hoffman brought an assorted collection of drug store bottles filled with pills for his flu. There was once a birthday cake for Seale, even a box of jelly beans for the press.

Jerry Rubin, whose long hair was shorn during a 45-day jail term for disorderly conduct, now wears a wig made from locks of hair cut from Abbie Hoffman and another defendant, Lee Weiner.

On many occasions the defendants have refused to rise when the judge entered and left the courtroom. Each instance has been noted for the court record.

The defendants often hold noon hour news conferences. Sometimes they criticize the court or discuss future demonstration and peace parade plans. Twice, they have introduced persons who contradicted testimony given earlier by prosecution witnesses.

Kunstler and Weinglass have irked the judge in their cross-examination of the 36 prosecution witnesses thus far called.

They continually draw objections from the government attorneys. Almost each one is sustained by the court.

At the opening of the trial, four lawyers who previously signed to appear for the defense, failed to show up. They sent telegrams to the court announcing their intent.

The judge issued warrants for their arrest and jailed two of them without bond. An appeals court has since reversed his ruling.

Dr. Benjamin Spock, the baby doctor, appeared in court one day and Kunstler asked to introduce him.

Hoffman refused. He peered over the bench and said, "My children are grown."

The supporting actors have also shared in the good lines.

A blonde policewoman who worked undercover during the convention turmoil was asked to describe her clothing.

"Casual clothes," she said, "slacks, a blouse and a helmet."

Hull, Hawks Still at Odds

CHICAGO (AP) - The puzzling impasse between holdout Bobby Hull and the Chicago Black Hawks grew more complicated yesterday when the club chided the hockey superstar for publicly airing his contract dispute.

General Manager Tommy Ivan said in a prepared statement "negotiations for the return of Bobby Hull, although progressing nicely, are not fully ironed out."

The statement came only hours after the 30-year-old Hull, National Hockey League goal-scoring record holder, told a YMCA group he expected to have a new contract momentarily and "I will sign it."

Hull has missed the first 12 Black Hawks games, the last four in a row won by the club for a current 5-6-1 record.

Hull also told the YMCA group Monday night he hoped to play this weekend against Oakland and Montreal.

Ivan's statement, released because he felt "the public was entitled to an explanation because of the many stories which have appeared in various media over the past few weeks," said it was unlikely Hull will play this weekend.

Hull signed a four-year contract in 1968 which has three more years to run, said Ivan. "There was never any dispute on the terms of his contract. When and if he returns to the ice, he will be playing under this contract. The items in dispute are in no way connected with his functions as a hockey player."

NBA-ABA Negotiations At Complete Stop

KANSAS CITY (AP) - National Basketball Association Commissioner Walter Kennedy said yesterday discussions between his league and the rival American Basketball Association are at a standstill, declaring, "There are no intentions of a merger with the ABA."

Earlier this year there were informal talks between the two leagues with a merger the ultimate aim of some, but Kennedy said, "We are having no talks with the ABA and haven't had any for the past few months. We have no plans to get together with the ABA."

Asked if this might mean renewed warfare between the leagues for signing top college talent this coming basketball season, Kennedy replied, "We will not get into a bidding war for college players. I think the Lew Alcindor case proved that."

Alcindor, former UCLA star, signed with the Milwaukee Bucks of the NBA after asking Milwaukee and the New York Nets of the ABA to submit bids to him.

Kennedy was en route to California and stopped to help the Kansas City Chiefs of the American Football League on some local basketball promotion.

Frosh Harriers Win NE Crown; Varsity Fourth

Dulong Varsity Victor; UConn Retains Title

Through the mud and rain of Franklin Park, the UMass freshman harriers proved, Monday, what they felt all along- they were the best in New England. Outscoring second place University of Connecticut by 32 points, the Little Redmen coupled a quick start with a strong seven man effort to capture the title.

The Little Redmen sprinted out to a quick start as Rick Barry, Tom Swain, Tom Jasmin and Phil Riley were all running in the top 15 after only a half mile of the race. At this point, Mike Daly, Bob Sullivan and Gary O'Dell were running in the middle of the pack.

As the race stretched out over the next mile and a half, Wesleyn's Dan Monyihan began building up a lead over Paul McElroy and Tony Frontierro of Northeastern, who were second and third, followed by UMass' Swain and Jasmin. Rick Barry was running eighth.

With the race looking up for the Little Redmen, things began happening against them. Jasmin who has been top man for UMass all year, lost a shoe in the thick mud on the downhill after the one mile mark. He ran the remaining two miles of the race with a bare foot over some rough, rocky terrain but was able to hold on to his fifth position.

Barry, who was eighth, and Riley who was about 20th, began dropping back, but this was evened off somewhat as Daly, Sullivan and O'Dell began moving up.

As the race moved into the last mile, Frontierro and Swain went by McElroy and began moving on Monyihan. Swain pulled up alongside Frontierro near the finish but was just outleaned at the tape. Frontierro was given second but both runners were given the same time of 15:51, six seconds behind Monyihan. It was by far Swain's best race of the year as he turned in his best time on that course despite the conditions.

Shoeless Tom Jasmin was able to hold on and finish fifth in the race, with his hopes of winning crippled by the mud that now owned his shoe.

Rick Barry was able to take 17th and Phil Riley, who had been dropping back, rallied at the race's end to pick up a few places and take 27th. Mike Daly moved up throughout the race and finished a strong 33rd to close out the UMass scoring.

With all seven harriers running their typically strong races, the 9 win-one loss Little Redmen made it official that they were New England's best.

The varsity didn't fare as well in the awful conditions as they placed fourth with 125 points behind victorious UConn, 46 points, Providence 75, and Holy Cross 77.

With the already poor conditions made worse because the frosh had already run on the course, it became a battle to stay on your feet. Because of the poor conditions it was hard to pass many people or move up a lot, and once the runners got out, there were not many position changes.

UConn got out quickly and had four runners in the top ten by the two mile mark. UMass' Ron Wayne was running about tenth coming through the two mile, trailing the Huskies' John Vitale, Rick Spurling, Craig McColl and Steve Flanagan. Leo Duart, UMass' second man was running about 15th at this time.

Running third was sophomore Bruce Blackburn, who responded to the poor conditions in great fashion. He was just ahead of fourth man Larry Paulson. Dave Evans, was running fifth for UMass at the half way point.

Tom Derderian, who usually runs third for UMass, like frosh Jasmin, lost his shoe after a mile of the race, and had to run four miles without it. He couldn't move through the crowd and was only sixth man for the Redmen. Seventh man, Don Dunsky was also caught up in the crowd and was running in the middle of the pack.

The drenched and mud splattered runners trudged through the last half of the race without many changes in the positions.

Splashing across the finish line first was Holy Cross' unbeaten Art Dulong. The New England champ took the lead before the mile and moved ahead to win by a comfortable 26 seconds over second place finisher Vitale of Connecticut.

Following Vitale were two of his teammates, Craig McColl and Rick Spurling. UConn's fourth man, Steve Flanagan finished 8th, right in front of the Redmen's Ron Wayne.

Leo Duart held onto his position from the first mile and finished 14th. Larry Paulson moved up a little over the last part of the race and managed a very respectable 26th place finish. Bruce Blackburn showed he was a real midder, turning in the best race for the Redmen in taking 34th. Senior Evans closed out the UMass scoring when he crossed the finish line in 42nd place.

Auerbach Blasts Latest Cinci 'Deal'

BOSTON (AP) - General Manager Red Auerbach of the Boston Celtics called Cincinnati's latest proposed deal for activating Bob Cousy "ridiculous" and declined comment yesterday night on Cousy's accusation that he had applied pressure to block the plan.

Cincinnati had suggested a four-part plan to let the 41-year-old former Boston star, who is now the Royals' coach, return to playing status. Cousy hasn't played for several years but is still listed on the Celtics' voluntarily retired list and thus can play only for them unless a deal is made.

The Cincinnati plan calls for Cousy's immediate activation with a panel of four owners or general managers to meet with National Basketball Association commissioner J. Walter Kennedy after the season to decide what the Royals owe Boston for compensation. The Celtics would chose the panel and Cousy would not play in games against Boston.

"What they suggested is ridiculous," Auerbach said Tuesday night. "You don't make deals through the papers. And I'm not in favor of a panel of owners, or of the commissioner getting into the deal."

Auerbach said he has talked with Cincinnati General Manager Joe Axelson during the day and had agreed to get back with him on Thursday.

"We'll see if we can arrive at something satisfactory to both teams," he said. "If we can, we can. If we can't, we can't." Kennedy already had put a damper on the Cincinnati proposal when he said in New York Monday that he would not approve certain aspects of the plan, such as letting Boston select the panel, or saying Cousy couldn't play against the Celtics. It was this statement by Kennedy which drew Cousy's blast Monday night that "Auerbach probably put pressure on him."

Auerbach said Tuesday night he did not think he was the one to comment on Cousy's charge.

"I think the guy to call up on that is Kennedy," the Celtics' general manager said. "He'll be real happy with that."

CLAW HOLD! - Little Redman defender Mike Hall(45) snatches UConn's Elwood Herald in action during Saturday's game at the Stadium. UMass lost 26-20. Season's last game will be this Friday at home versus UNH.

Piggot Wins on Karabas In D.C. International

LAUREL, Md. (AP) - Lester Piggott, criticized in many quarters for his winning ride on Sir Ivor, gave a superb performance yesterday in guiding Karabas of England to a 1 1/4 length victory over Hawaii of the United States in the $150,000 Washington, D.C. International.

Criticism of Piggott's ride on Sir Ivor in the 1968 International stemmed from the fact that many observers felt the margin of victory should have been bigger than 1 3/4 lengths.

Piggott, the English champion and the third man to win two straight Internationals, would not discuss the race with U.S. turf writers, but did tell a Laurel representative:

"I had a good ride all the way. I always knew I would win."

Piggott sat very high in the saddle for the first 1 1/4 miles of the 1 1/2 mile race of the grass with Karabas fourth before moving third going into the final run as Czar Alexander, the other U.S. representative, battled for the lead.

Entering the stretch, Hawaii, inside of Czar Alexander, went wide, and Piggott shot Karabas through on the rail to grab the lead. The three battled it out until Karabas took command an eighth of a mile from home to win in 2:27.

Czar Alexander finished a half length back of Hawaii and 12 lengths ahead of Hitchcock of Germany.

Hawaii, making his last race before being retired to stud, and Czar Alexander represented the United States because they had been racing in this country. There were no American breds in the field, the first time this has happened in 18 runnings of the International.

The victory was worth $100,000 to Karabas and boosted his earnings to $182,613 this year.

UMass Ski Wants You!

Candidates for the 1969-70 Varsity Ski Team will meet with Coach Bill MacConnell at 7:00 P.M. tomorrow in Room 305, Holdsworth Hall, to organize the fall training schedule. Returning from last year's squad are six veteran racers who helped to compile a win-loss ratio of 43 wins and 20 losses in nine meets against eight colleges last year.

Last season the Redmen finished second in the New England Intercollege Ski Conference (NEISC). With Jim Garstang, Ted Martin, Jerry Curran, Chuck Walker, Pete Rosenthal and Steve Kurkoski, all strong, experienced racers, the prospects for this season look good.

Amherst, first in the league last year, but losing heavily from graduation, will not be as strong this year. Tufts, led by Don Marsh (top racer in the league last year) will be strong. The season shapes up as a three-way battle among Amherst, Tufts and UMass.

The Redmen have a rigorous dry land and on-snow training schedule planned to "get up" for the nine race NEISC schedule. Two winter training camps are scheduled: December 28 to January 2 and January 18 to 23 at Killington Vermont; and eleven practice days are planned at Thunder Mountain in Charlemont, Mass.

Referendum Rescinds Senate Decision

By DENISE MAGNELL
Staff Reporter

The referendum to rescind Bill S-50 was passed yesterday by a vote of 2,314 (yes) to 1,960 (no); 54% of the 4,279 voters (including 5 void ballots) favored the motion. Counting of the votes was completed at approximately 7:30 last night.

The proceedings took place in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union between 9 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Four lines (dividing students alphabetically by last names) stretched across the floor from the Colonial to the Main Lounge at all hours of the day.

Bill S-50 dealt with the Student Senate's appropriation of up to $10,000 to subsidize one-half the transportation costs of those U-Mass students planning to go to Washington to participate in the moratorium march, maximum of which would have to be 1200 people.

Petitions requesting a campus-wide referendum were circulated on November 6 and 7 by a group of students opposed to the passage of the bill. With an official count of 4249 names gathered, the motion was granted and arrangements to draw up the ballots were made by the Student Government Affairs committee.

At the time the referendum was granted, Senate Secretary Pat Beharry remarked that obtaining this motion will mark "the first time the student body has called to overturn and invalidate any action of the Senate."

Alan Gauthier, treasurer of the Senate, issued a check last Monday to cover the first 180 students (1530) who signed up for the trip. He intends to try to stop payment on that check immediately. The rest of the appropriated amount will remain in the general tax account.

As of Tuesday night, 300 students had signed for the trip to the capital. Those not among the first 180 will either have to pay the balance of the $17 fare or will be given back their deposit of $8.50.

Voters Express Opinions

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

The lines were long all day. The referendum was controversial. It was the students practicing democracy. The issues had been misconstrued by many. There were signs of polarization. Voting was nearly evenly divided.

The students waiting in line had their own opinions on the referendum. It was a widely debated issue.

The opinions of those voting "yes" ranged from anti-senate feelings to pro escalation of the war. Several students expressed the opinion that they were totally for the Moratorium but felt the students wanting to

Questions Arise in Wake of Vote, Senate Pres. Faces Court Complaint

By JOEL FOX
Managing Editor

Competition for votes in yesterday's referendum, produced posters, leaflets, and advertisements from both sides of the question. Answers on who was responsible and who was paying for these materials came to light last night.

The two foot by one and a half foot blue poster supporting the referendum was sponsored by SLAP a registered RSO organization. SLAP (Student Leaders Action Program) was formed last year when some students, in positions of student power, felt that the Senate was becoming too power hungry. The posters, 400 in all, cost $35 to print. The SLAP organization will pay this bill.

However, at present, SLAP's $100 RSO account is frozen because the Executive Order that they were operating under has expired. The only way for SLAP to get to the money is for them to have a constitution passed by the Senate, or for them to secure another Executive Order from the Senate President. Otherwise, persons in SLAP will have to pay.

Countering the SLAP posters, a group of students, including some senators, had made up approximately 9,000 leaflets which were distributed Monday night in the dorms.

Senate President Bruce Balboni, one of the persons responsible for the leaflets, said of their production, "They were done as a favor to a person on campus who has done work for the publisher." Balboni also said that there was no anticipated expease whatever, but if anything did arise, "the cost would be paid by those persons involved." Balboni thought it unnecessary to reveal the name ofeitherthe publisher or the person involved.

Senate Treasurer Alan Gauthier, who was not involved in the printing of the leaflets said, "The Senate did not and will not pay for those leaflets," thus putting an end to the rumor that student funds had been used.

March Organizers Worry About Rooms; Pentagon Officials Worry About Violence

WASHINGTON (AP) - The deployment of nearly 9,000 riot-trained Army troops Wednesday contracted with the optimism of public officials over the prospects for peaceful anti-Vietnam demonstrations beginning Thursday.

Planners hope the Saturday climax will be the biggest yet in the capital's era of demonstration.

Organizers had obtained a para de permit from a reluctant Department of Justice by the time first contingents of the 250,000 persons expected for the three-day rally trickled into town.

But the organizers were still locked in a harried, last-minute search for room to house and feed the participants. As of Wednesday, officials said they had only 22,000 of the 90,000 accommodations they'll need by Friday night.

The White House meanwhile announced President Nixon will be in the mansion Saturday night when the climatic Washington Monument rally takes place within sight of the White House South Portico.

But although the President might be physically able to view the rally, he has already declared his policies will not be affected by it. Vice President Spiro T. Agnew has denounced what he called the "carnival in the streets." And only Tuesday night Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell declared: "The foreign policy of this governme.." cannot and will not be formulated in the streets of Washington - or in any other street of this nation."

The first unit of the troops spreading around the capital was from the 82nd Airbourne Division from Ft. Bragg, N.C., which saw action earlier in the Detroit riots and the 1967 march on the Pentagon.

A Pentagon spokesman said the other units would be in position by Thursday morning. "This is a precautionary action only," he said.

He said the troops will enter the city only if called to assist the 3,800-man local police force and the 2,000 National Guardsmen due for duty over the weekend.

"I don't anticipate at this point any violence," Mayor Washington told newsmen at the White House.

The first scheduled affair for Thursday is a three-hour "Peace in the Park" affair at Farragut Square two blocks from the White House, where demonstration supporters will hand out literature and hold discussions on the war.

Shortly after sundown, participants begin what is planned as a 40-hour "March Against Death" from the Arlington National Cemetery end of Memorial Bridge across the Potomac.

Each person, moving single-file is to pass the Lincoln Memorial carrying the name of a Vietnam casualty, pass the White House then proceed to the Capitol up Pennsylvania Avenue, where workmen spent the day Wednesday removing the flags and star-spangled bunting left over from Veterans' Day Tuesday.

Seminars, speeches, rallies and memorial services take place throughout the three days at various locations, leading to start of the climatic march and rally at 10 a.m. EST Saturday.

If the 250,000 projected by sponsors show up, the demonstrators would outnumber the 200,000 who showed up for the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s 1963 March, the 100,000 who took part in the climatic rally for the Resurrection City Poor People's March in '68.

Another march and rally in consort with the Washington observances will take place in San Francisco.

D.C. Plans Clarified Tonight

Final plans for the bus trip to Washington D.C. in conjunction with the march on Washington, are now being finalized and will be announced tonight. Everyone who has bought a bus ticket and those who intend to drive to Washington to attend the march should come to the meeting to be held in the Engineering East Aud. at 8:00 p.m. tonight.

Tony Teso, the co-organizer of the Moratorium activities at UMass will be reporting on the Washington activities as they stand at the present time. Intended aspects of his speech will include:

Marshals and medical corps;
What to expect in Washington;
What is going on in the Nixon administration;
Facilities and the latest developments out of Washington;
The situation concerning the tickets and the system of picking up the tickets will be announced at the meeting.

Friday's Moratorium Events

The Moratorium Coordinating Committee of the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council is planning the following activities for Nov. 14:

Southwest Mall
8:30 - 9:20 - Rally and instructions for canvassers.
9:15 - 4:00 - Canvassing of Ware, Pelham, Soouth Deerfield and Belchertown.
6:00 - 6:30 - Motorcade to Ware.
6:30 - 7:00 - March and candlelight service in Ware.
9:00 - 12:00- (Appx.) Buses leave from Haigis Hall for Washington, D.C.

The Valley Peace Center is holding a 5:00 p.m. candlelight service at the Amherst Common tomorrow. There will be a ceremony following the service and a tree will be planted in commemoration of the area Vietnam war dead. Rabbi Martin Kowal will sing in honor of the war dead and Prof. Doris Abrison will read "war poems".

The tree is a gift from the town of Amherst.
All are invited to attend the service.

Canvassers To Cover Ware Area

Supporters of the November Moratorium will be canvassing the towns surrounding Amherst. Canvassing will take place Friday morning and afternoon between the hours of 9:00 A.M. and 6:00 P.M.

The "Peace Workers" will concentrate their efforts on the towns of Ware, Hadley, and Belchertown. Other towns that are to be covered include Pelham and South Deerfield.

Most of the emphasis for this month's activities will be on Ware. Besides extensive canvassing, there will be a march and candlelight service there at 6:30 P.M.

Canvassers will once again be supplied with "Peace Packets" which contain instructions and information relevant to their cause. Street assignments and maps will be given to workers going to Ware and Hadley. Workers going to the other towns will spread out from the centers of the towns and cover main population districts there. They will once again go door-to-door and speak with the people, asking for their support. Also, they will ask the people to send post cards to President Nixon calling on him to bring the troops home.

If you are a senior and are interested in working in the fields of personnel administration, park management, public information, and many more, you should take the New York State Professional Careers Test on Saturday, November 22, 1969. The exam will commence at 8:30 a.m. in 104 Thompson Tower. You should pick up an application for the exam in the Placement Office by Friday, November 14, 1969.

Congressmen Return Home for Moratorium

A dramatic effort to convince Congressmen to return to their districts will be a major activity of the November 13-14 Moratorium. Groups in every Congressional district are gathering public support for local forums with U.S. Representatives and Senators which will explore the opinions of these elected representatives on the question of ending the Vietnam war. The following is a list of meetings and forums already planned for November 13 & 14.

Recently elected Representative Michael Harrington will appear at a Peace Sabbath at Temple Emanu-El in Haverhill on Friday night, Nov. 14. Harrington will appear in as many other towns in his district as possible.

Rep. James A. Burke has been invited to a forum at the Quincy High School on the evening of Thursday, Nov. 13. Panel members will include Prof. Jerome Lettvin of MIT, Steve Fredericks of radio station WMEX, State Rep. David Ahearn, Father Thomas Mac Leod, and Braintree School Committeeman Dr. John Smart. Also appearing will be folk singer Pat Hughes.

Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. is being asked to attend meetings in Cambridge on Nov. 13 and in Brighton and Allston November 14.

Nixon Calls Lodge To Affirm Support

WASHINGTON (AP) - On the eve of antiwar demonstrations, President Nixon invited a bipartisan congressional delegation to the White House Wednesday to join him in a telephone talk with Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge so they could affirm their support of the Nixon negotiating position at the Paris peace talks.

Rep. Jim Wright, D-Tex., sponsor of a House resolution backing Nixon on Vietnam, told newsmen later at a White House arranged news conference that his measure "has attracted such spontaneous support from both sides of the aisle that we now have 300 cosponsors" - a clear majority.

House Speaker Bartley Terms Higher Education a "Struggle"

By BERNARD BLAIN

"Public higher education is a day-to-day struggle. This struggle goes on every day in the state house." David Bartley, speaker of the Mass. House, expressed this opinion at the JFK 19th floor lounge last night.

The cutting of the UMass budger was the major topic at the meeting, but Bartley pointed out that he has a strong committment to higher education and that finances for public higher education have risen 48% in the last 2 years which is 10% more than New York state has increased the budget.

Bartley also stated that there still exists a philosophy in Massachusetts which leads legislatures to de-emphasize public higher education. He feels that the strong tradition for placing public higher education in the hands of private institutions such as Amherst, Mt. Holyoke and Boston University turns legislators away from realizing the needs of UMass.

Answering a question concerning state government censorship of Yahoo and the Daily Collegian, Bartley felt that comments of a few years ago by state officials were of a minority opinion but that with a legislature of 280 there are bound to be a variation of opinions.

Describing himself as left center, Bartley said he is in favor of realizing reality and therefore lower both voting and drinking ages, but he is skeptical of the latter happening.

Welfare was another topic discussed by Bartley. He could not offer any solution to rising costs and said he expects them to continue to rise chiefly because of the increasing costs of hospital care brought about through medicare and medicaid programs.

As to hopeful Democratic nominees for governor, Bartley pointed to Senate President Maurice Donahue and Mayor of Boston Kevin White as top contenders.

Bartley was glad to hear about the program of residence hall automony. He said, "The reality is that young people ought to be able to control their destinies."

DVP Lecturer Jack Newfield To Speak on Moratorium Tonight

Jack Newfield, assistant editor of the Village Voice and noted author, will deliver a Distinguished Visitors Program lecture tonight at 8:15 in Mahar Auditorium. Newfield will speak on the Moratorium and student radicalism.

Prior to his talk, he will have dinner with campus moratorium leaders.

In 1966 he published A Prophetic Minority which The New York Times called, "The best single volume available on the new radicalism of the Left."

He has been most recently acclaimed for his probing analysis of the Robert Kennedy character and politics. "Robert Kennedy: A Memoir"

In his book, Newfield said Robert Kennedy was the one politician of his time who might have united the black and white poor into a new majority for change - and American liberalism hardly noticed."

Newfield has long been active in the Vietnam war protests and was a founder of the dump Johnson movement.

In the September 25, 1969 issue of The Village Voice, Newfield concluded an article entitled "Mobilizing the Campus: New Army of the Night" saying:

"This may be the season when the student movement goes back to its roots-participatory democracy, action without dogma, NSA, protesting the war. SDS appears stuck in a quagmire of bitter factionalism, Little Red Books, and street fighting. The YSA and YPSL remain irrelevant. The blacks are still on their own trip. The hippies are still exploring inner space.

"But that great middle mass of students (and young faculty) seems suffocated and ready to move against the war. The million of restless students with moderately long hair, who smoke pot bit don't drop acid, who were for McCarthy or Kennedy have never had their own organization, or their own leaders....Now....they have some spokesmen and an alternative activist program. They look like the new army of the night. And by next Spring, they may make Richard Nixon look like Lyndon Johnson. Or else, they just might help end the endless war."

Senate Holds Coffee Hour

The Public Relations Committee of the Student Senate is sponsoring a coffee hour between noon and 2 p.m. today in the Colonial Lounge. It will be the first in a series of weekly coffee hours.

This week's guest speakers will be representatives from the Senate and area governments to discuss their positions in relation to the students. Due to recent senate actions on proposals such as dorm autonomy, it has become necessary for these groups to clarify their roles in regard to the other councils.

The coffee hour is free of charge and open to the public; all are urged to attend.

Student Senate Acts On Numerous Proposals

The Student Senate last night heard President Balboni announce the results of the referendum to rescind the Senate's subsidization of the Washington trip ($50): a turnout of 4,269 students rescinded the Senate's action by a vote of 53.6 per cent (2,314) to 46.4 per cent (1,960). The appropriation was passed last week by a one-vote margin, the chair breaking a tied roll call vote.

The Senate proceeded to take speedy action on a large number of bills. Among the most significant was the approval in special business of a report by the Ad-Hoc Committee on Dorm Autonomy, appointed last week. The report recommended the establishment of four Community Relations Boards (one per area), the function of which shall be to provide general advice and assistance in the solution of the wide range of human relations problems confronting residence halls.

Further, the boards would provide a mediation service to settle any problems; the decision would be binding providing that all parties consent in advance to be so bound. These boards were seen by committee spokesman Terry Tirrell, undergraduate Head of residence in T-6, as a means to help insure smooth assumption and responsible exercise of dorm autonomy in a wide range of areas.

In other action, the Senate responded to a request from the Board Student Senate on the pending question of Trustees for the advice of the tion of high-level administrative reorganization by recommending that the Board create a new position of chief officer for the Amherst campus (likely to be called chancellor); and that such a position be filled after a tripartite committee has reviewed applicants and reported its recommendations to the Board.

The Senate expressed its belief that reorganization along these lines was made necessary by the contemplated change of role of the University President, towards an office that would exercise general supervision of the three-campus system, but would have little direct decision-making duties in the internal functioning of each of the campuses.

In other action, the Senate recommended to the Provost that students be allowed to preregister by instructor and section. Because of the favorable climate within the academic administration, the Series of War Debates Scheduled Next Week

A series of four debates on "War and the University" involving students, faculty and others will be held at the University of Massachusetts on Monday and Tuesday, Nov. 17 and 18.

The initial debate will be a broad exploration of the war and the university issues; the succeeding three will focus on the specific areas of ROTC, research and recruiting. The series grows out of a request to the administration by the Coalition, a student activist group, with arrangements made by a student-faculty-administration committee.

The first debate, "War and the University," will be Monday at 3:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Student Senate Vice-president Cythia Olken will moderate.

Speakers will be UMass President John W. Lederle, UMass alumnus Claire Moriarty, English faculty member John Nelson and Acting dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Seymour Shapiro.

The second, "War and the University: Focus on ROTC," will be Monday evening at 8, also in the Student Union Ballroom, with Mark Smith of the Student Senate as moderator.

Speakers will be ROTC cadet Peter Discenza, mathematics faculty member and retired Brigadier General Wallace Ford, Robert Kentfield of the Student Senate and business administration faculty member Isidore Silver Debate three will be "War and the University: Focus on Research," Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 in the Student Union Ballroom. UMass Associate Provost Robert Gluckstern will moderate.

Speakers will be Sidney Finehirsh of the Coalition, Howard Gadlin of the psychology faculty, Charles Hutchinson of the electrical engineering faculty and Guenther Levy of the government faculty.

The final debate, "War and the University: Focus on Recruiting," will be at 8:15 p.m. Tuesday in Mahar Auditorium. Glen Gordon of the department of government will moderate.

The speakers: business school graduate student Michael Alcivar, Milton Cantor of the history faculty, Gilbert Salk of the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council, and Stanley Young of the business administration faculty.

The public is cordially invited to all four debates.

Wells Fargo Robbery Gets $1,370,000 Cash

NEW YORK (AP) - Three armed men held up a Wells Fargo armored truck carrying receipts from Aquaduct Race Track to a Manhattan bank Wednesday, getting away with $1.37 million in cash. The haul was the second largest cash robbery in U.S. history.

The truck was stopped while one of its guards had lunch.

Frank Basil, president of the New York Racing Association, said the loss was insured, by Aqueduct and by Wells Fargo. The stolen money was part of the Veterans Day betting take at Aqueduct, held at the track until Wednesday, because of the bank holiday.

Police said the truck and its three-man crew left the track in Queens shortly before noon, heading for the Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. in Wall Street.

Later the truck stopped in Queens and the crew chief, Thomas Raftery, 35, a veteran Wells Fargo employe, went to get lunch. The driver, James Kerrigan, 50, and Barry Kateridge, 25, riding guard, remained inside the locked truck.

When Raftery returned, Kateridge opened the door of the truck and three men, all in their 30's armed-jumped the crew chief.

The trio pushed Raftery into the truck and, as Kerrigan went for his gun, they warned: "If you want to live to enjoy your pension, drop that thing now." Holding guns on Raftery, they added, "Don't make a move or we'll kill him."

The three robbers handcuffed Raftery to a railing in the back of the truck, then cuffed his two companions to him.

One of the three drove the truck two blocks to a residential area where a 1968 Chevrolet - later discovered to be a stolen car - was waiting.

The robbers transferred most of the bags of money from the truck to the car and drove away. Police said they got exactly 41,377,000. They left behind eight bags of coins and two bags of bills.

A resident of the neighborhood noticed the armored car was parked at an odd angle and spotted men not in uniform transferring the money. He called the police.

A car fitting the description of the getaway auto was spotted later heading toward downdown Brooklyn. Roadblocks were set up, but the robbers escaped. Police later put out an alarm for the trio along the eastern seaboard.

The largest cash robbery in U.S. history was the theft of $1, 551,277 from a mail truck in Plymouth, Mass., Aug. 15, 1962. The second largest - now third largest - was the Jan. 17, 1950 Brinks robbery in Boston where robbers took a total of $1,219,218.29 in cash.

prospects for approval of this significant change appear to be good.

The Senate charged: the Activities Committee with investigating the possibility of transferring the license for WMUA to a student body from the Board of Trustees; and the Services Committee with investigating the "abominable living conditions in Northeast Area."

Affirming the right of a student to budget his own time and assess for himself the affect of his extra-curricular activities on his academic performance, the Senate recommended that the rule denying a student on academic probation the right to belong to an extra-curricular organization be rescinded.

As the paper went to press, the meeting was continuing.

CAS Faculty Ballots On Curriculum Change

A run-off balloting was held recently in the College of Arts and Sciences, matching the Curriculum Committee proposal with the Quint-Hanke proposal. The Curriculum Committee proposal was carried, by a vote of 271 to 190. This means that the final run-off will match the Curriculum Committee proposal with the earlier June Proposal.

Balloting on preferred schemes for curriculum change in the College began late in October, with the faculty voting to adopt interim College requirements while moving towards a more final reformulation of the curriculum. A pro-tem revision of requirements has already been introduced; and a more final resolution of the curriculum question is expected for September 1970.

The June Proposal, favorite in the first curriculum balloting, would, if adopted, provide for appreciable reductions and loosenings in the College core and distribution requirements.

"Doctor in Spite of Himself" to Run In Bartlett, Then On Tour in Area

Friday night marks the opening of another UMass Children's Theatre season. The production is a loose adaption of Moliere's "A Doctor in Spite of Himself", with heavy emphasis on slapstick. In its present form, the play will have appeal for the very young as well as older children and their parents.

The plot revolves around Sagnarelle, a woodcutter, whose wife causes him to become a doctor in spite of himself. The photo at right shows a scene between Joe Arsenault, as Sagnarelle, and Barbara Lewis, his wife in one of their usual quarrels, the cause of Sagnarelle's change of profession.

A DOCTOR IN SPITE OF HIMSELF will be presented in Bartlett Theatre on Friday, Nov. 14 at 7:30 p.m., Saturday, Nov. 15 at 10 a.m., and 2 p.m. All tickets are 50¢, by reservation only. The UT Box Office number is 545-2579.

Professors Speak At Conferences

Three members of the history department, University of Massachusetts in Amherst, will contribute to programs at meetings from Canada to Mexico in coming weeks.

At the Third Annual Meeting of the Middle East Studies Association, scheduled for Nov. 14 and 15 in Toronto, Professor George Kirk will be chairman of a panel discussing "Revolutionary Politics in the Middle East."

Professor R. Dean Ware will speak on "Anglo-Saxon Studies and the Contribution of Robert Reynolds" at the Midwest Medieval Conference Nov. 15 at the University of Illinois.

Professor Robert A. Potash is in Oaxtepec, Mexico, during the second week of November for the Third Meeting of U. S. and Mexican Historians, an organization which convenes every ten years. He will read a paper entitled "Syntheses of Mexican History: the U. S. Writers."

Advertisements that spoke out against the referendum appeared on pages three and four of Wednesday's DAILY COLLEGIAN. The ad which appeared on page three told students: "Do you believe that our involvement in Vietnam should be terminated forthwith? If so. . .Vote your convictions. VOTE NO on the referendum." It was sponsored by the Student Senate Public Relations Committee with the authorized signature of Treasurer Gauthier.

The ad which appeared on page four said, "Do you consider 70¢ too much to pay for peace? Are two hamburgers more valuable than human life? Vote 'NO' on the referendum today to rescind $80." It was placed also by the Public Relations Committee, but it was signed by President Balboni. Balboni is not authorized to take out ads for the PR committee.

President Balboni said PR chairman Paul Dudash authorized him to take care of the ad for he was busy. Dudash, who resigned from his chairmanship and the senate yesterday, for academic reasons, was not available for comment.

Balboni, in defending both ads said, "The Senate took a position and had a right to defend it. The opposition could put forth its position and we could defend ours."

Treasurer Gauthier said that he agreed to sign one ad to defend the Senate's stand but he didn't think he should sign for both. Gauthier said that the second ad (on page 4 will be paid for by the President's Fund. The President's Fund is $300 put aside for the Senate President to use as he sees fit.

Several complaint forms against President Balboni and Chairman Dudash have been presented to the General Court of the University. One complaint was signed by Bob Twiss, Senator at Large, Class of '70, Belden Bly, a member of the SUG Board, Sander Ross, Chairman of the SUG Board, Joel Wilson, Class of '71, and Joe Piccolo, President of the Class of '71. This complaint reads:

"On November 12, 1969, two advertisements totalling $120.25 appeared in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. Both advertisements were funded out of Student Senate funds. Both advertisements advocated a "No" vote on the Referendum S50. Neither advertisement contained the name of the sponsoring group, the Student Senate. We feel that this is misappropriation of student funds, because nowhere in Student Senate Fiscal Policy or in Election Rules or in S.G.A. By-Laws is the Student Senate granted the right to advertise in favor of or in opposition to a campus issue."

It was not known when the complaint would be heard by the court.

Tank Leak May Postpone Apollo 12 Moon Launch

by DON MCKEE
Associated Press Writer

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) - A leak developed in a small fuel tank on the Apollo 12 spaceship Wednesday, but project officials were optimistic about launching man's second moon-landing mission on schedule Friday.

Technicians drained super-cold liquid hydrogen from the tank, and then flowed warm helium through it, to remove ice that had formed, so they could inspect the casing. To remain liquid, hydrogen must be kept under 423 degrees below zero.

The space agency felt it probably would have to replace the tank. So experts in a nearby assembly building removed a similar tank from the Apollo 13 spacecraft being prepared for a moon launch next March.

Another tank was flown from the North American Rockwell Corp. plant in Downey, Calif. It was estimated that a new tank could be in place late Wednesday night, and if there are no other problems, the launch schedule could be maintained.

The three Apollo 12 astronauts Charles Conrad Jr., Richard F. Gordon Jr., and Alan L. Bean, followed progress of the investigation, hoping it would not interfere with their planned blastoff at 11:22 a.m. Friday.

The liquid hydrogen in the spaceship combines with liquid oxygen to provide poler for the electricity-producing fuel cells. There are two tanks for each element.

The leak was not in the fuel tank itself, but in an outer casing. A vacuum exists between the two titanium walls to provide insulation for the cold liquid.

An official compared the tank, which holds 28 gallons, with a vacuum bottle.

"We are hopeful," he said, "that we can correct the problem in time to launch on Friday."

The leak was discovered during loading of the tanks, located in a service compartment at the rear of the main cabin section where the astronauts ride. Fuel was then unloaded and the examination begun.

Unless the problem could be corrected in time for the 11:22 a.m. EST Friday launch, the Apollo 12 mission would be delayed until Sunday at the earliest. The next acceptable launch date after that is Dec. 14.

A Sunday launch would change the moon landing site to 360 miles west of the original target and prevent the Apollo 12 astronauts from inspecting an unmanned Surveyor spacecraft.

One of the goals of the Apollo 12 mission is to perfect procedures for a pinpoint landing. If they are launched Friday, they hope to touch down within a few hundred feet of the Surveyor.

"march on Washington" should pay their own way.

Some students, going to Washington, felt that the $10,000 would encourage those people who just wanted a "good time" to go. One person backed up his yes vote with two reasons 1.) "There are a majority against spending the money" and 2.) "The Senate should not impose a political stand on the entire University."

One opinion was that helping more people go to Washington only increased the chances of violence. The students interviewed were afraid of the potential violence. Only one stated that he thought "violence might be good." Most thought that violence would be hard to avoid.

The opinions favoring the senate appropriation, the "no" votes, were less varied than the "yes" opinions. One very common response to the question "Why?" was "maybe it will help end the war." Most of the people who would vote no would go to Washington if they could. One person voting "no" said that it was a "very visible and dramatic gesture." Most of those voting "no" felt that the violence expected would not be widespread. Some people stated that they would leave Washington at the first sign of violence.

The arguments of Senate policies towards financial matters were discussed. There weren't many students talking about not wanting to give the money. They were talking of expenditures without student approval. Clearly, according to some students, the Senate will have to proceed more cautiously in such matters.

There was a sign over the voting room door. It read "a YES vote is a vote for the "silent majority" a NO vote is for an end to the war in Vietnam." It was ripped down. Certain persons misconstrued the purpose of the referendum. They were building it to an unrealistic poll of how students felt about Vietnam and the Moratorium.

Students interviewed voting both "yes" and "no" favored an end to the war. Some people voting "yes" will be in Washington. This referendum was probably the most honest gesture by UMass students in a long time. Most tried to separate the emotionalism, which continually plagues University movements, from the actual issue.

Veteran's Day: A Time for Brooding

To the editor:

Here it is Veteran's Day, and I'm brooding over four wasted years due to the Korean War ("search and destroy" prosperity fling of the 1950's), and I'm looking through a stack of accumulated Collegians, and your editorial page of yesterday is so good that I want to tell you so.

For one thing there's Bromery's "Nixon and Attacks" defending the literally "unspeakable" crime committed by Doug Packer last week when he denounced Nixon as "an ass-hole". I'd have preferred to hear Packer speak for himself, but I imagine him as chained to a chair somewhere with a tight gag around his tonsils. But is IS reassuring to see an executive editor stand by one of his staff who spoke the truth, albeit in somewhat Rabelaisian terms.

Regarding Packer's terminology, I do have, as a physician, a mild quibble to record: is it really necessary to defame a normal, useful - and indeed essential - part of the human body. Can't we rise above the symbolism of the "Bugs Bunny" level and refer to the bad men as eg. "an inflamed appendix," "a clogged coronary artery", or "a malignant tumor." Well, I leave that problem to the creative writers attempting to cope with "the sexual revolution" - according to which all parts of a healthy body are "good".

But the triumph of the page was Robert Kentfield's "70¢: Little to Ask For Peace" (Campus Comment). Here is a writer who cuts through all the jargon (about individual freedom and intrusion into politics) thrown about by our UMass "sunshine patriots" of 1969. Truly "these are the times that try men's souls", and Kentfield writes as lucidly and bravely as Tom Paine in 1776 (Common Sense) showing that the Senate subsidy enhances human freedom and embraces an inescapable political choice.

They shot Robert Kennedy. They've got Robert Seale tied up in a legalistic labyrinth. But here is Robert Kentfield. Go, Bobby, go! ! !

At Stake: One Question

To the editor:

Once upon a time, the Daily Collegian, ran a rather, shall we say, unfriendly appraisal of Richard Nixon's attempts to play president.

This appraisal fortunately or unfortunately contained one of those emotionally charged words that aren't supposed to appear in print especially about presidents. So the UMass campus and surrounding territories took off in a frenzied condemnation of the appraisal.

Some of the frenzy was caused by the belief that this type of attack shouldn't have appeared in the editorial column. However, this is a concern between the Editor in Chief and his Executive Editor. If the general community doesn't like it then it should show its concern to those who pick the Editor in Chief and the Executive Editor.

Other parts of the frenzy have to do with the appraisal itself. Unfortunately little has been said to me and I have heard of little criticism of the VALIDITY of the appraisal. The attack has centered around "poor taste," whatever that is. I am quite sure Mr. Nixon has been called such endearing things before even more endearing things perhaps by past and present members of the Congress, of course not in print. So much of the turmoil is the result of Mr. Packer's honesty and candidness.

Right now many people are causing many commotions over the matter, in an excellent example of overkill. The appraisal has become more powerful with its notoriety.

Therefore in an attempt to moderate debate and keep the discussion focused on what is the main issue of the appraisal, I ask all those who wish to respond to this event to deal with one question, the main question and one question only: Resolved: Richard Milhous Nixon, 37th President of the United States is an ass-hole.

ROBERT HANCOCK

Crap: This I Cannot Take

To the editor:

Doug Packer of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian is . . .? I think he can fill this space very descriptively. A few suggestions to help him . . . immature, ignorant, infantile. Fact. The editorial he wrote for Wednesday's Collegian is more of the same crap that the editorial staff has been trying to force down our throats. (Acknowledging that this editorial was his own effort.)

For any student to believe that the position of editor for the M.D.C. is one of leadership, maturity and awareness, is being taken, for ANY person to believe this is tragic. Doug Packer stated that the President of the United States is "an ass-hole". This I cannot take.

I have always liked Richard Nixon because he represents the sterile, patriotic, White Anglo-Saxon Protestant, and his speech delivered last Monday greatly enhanced my respect. Obviously any sixth grader can hold the worthless position of editor for New England's largest college funny paper. Furthermore, Packer, stay on the staff at least one more year so I can enjoy reading your trash throughout my duration here.

NIXON for President and Agnew demoted to the position of editor-in-chief of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Editorial Integrity: View from the Hatch

To the editor:

At this writing, I am sitting in the Hatch and have just read the "editorial" entitled "W.A.S.P. Down Our Throats." I am very distressed at the content of this slanderous outburst of raw hatred.

I oppose the WAR. I am dismayed by the fact that even while I am comfortably sitting here, coffee and pen in hand, men are dying for an unknown cause; a cause which a frustrated President has arbitrarily termed "honor". I agree with many of Mr. Packer's opinions and also disagree with many. However, I have chosen to base my objections not on political views, but on editorial integrity.

What I would like to know is exactly what is going on in those Collegian offices? How can an editorial staff that claims to be a "free and responsible press" allow such a grossly prejudiced piece to appear on its pages? Granted that Mr. Packer is "free" to express his opinions, but, in this case, it is the responsibility of a "responsible press" to prevent such an article, that so obviously drifts into the realm of impudence and slander, from being printed in its pages.

Mr. Packer is obviously frustrated but his frustration does not justify his referring to the elected President as "an asshole", "same old bastard", "his goddamn face." I may also point out that this flagrant lack of editorial integrity is reminiscent of the controversial article "I am Lederle yellow."

What is even more distressing is the fact that Mr. Packer is a member of the Editorial Staff. By what criterion is a person chosen for such a responsible position? It is obvious that Mr. Packer is radically biased. I do not condemn this attitude but I do condemn its influence on this particular article. Mr. Packer states "I have always hated Richard Nixon . . ." From this, it is obvious that whatever Nixon said, whether good or bad, would probably not change Packer's views. Mr. Packer was prejudiced before hearing the speech and this prevented the evolution of any OBJECTIVE CRITICISM on Packer's part. The concept of objective criticism is, I believe, fundamental to editorial journalism. A writer in an editorial position may hold opinions but he must be able to RATIONALLY and OBJECTIVELY justify his position and, in order to obtain the most effect, abstain from irrational, and therefore ineffective expression of his emotions. Failure to do so results only in inaccurate, and irresponsible outbursts, completely lacking any intellectual worth.

It is in this context of editorial integrity that Mr. Packer has displayed his incompetence, irresponsibility, prejudice, and lack of objectivity and rationality. An editor cannot fulfill his responsibility to his readers if his criticism is based solely upon irrational emotionalism.

Mr. Packer's mud-slinging emotionalism is inexcusable and it is the responsibility of "a responsible press" to see that further outbursts are either abolished or re-stated with some editorial integrity.

Collegian: Funds for Treason?

To The Editor:

I would like you to print a financial statement telling from where the Collegian receives the funds upon which it publishes treasonous articles against my country and its President. If I find that my own money is going towards this leaky thin meat wrapper, I shall demand my money back, and if I do not receive it, I shall not hesitate to take the matter to court.

Aside from the treason in Mr. Doug Packer's editorial, there is also a quantity of profanity which upon first glance obscures his theme, but not Packer's pre-college life. Mr. Packer, Did your mother or your father teach you those grown up words? Bet you were the big man and taught them to your kid sister and brother! Personally, I come from a W.A.S.P. home and never need profanity to make myself heard.

Also, Mr. Packer, I hope that you do not plan ever to apply for a National Defense Loan because you will have to affirm allegiance to this country and its President. Many happy returns.

Committee Explores Possible Amherst Child Care Center

The need for community child care centers for children three to six years of age has been recognized for some time. Lately many groups, both local and national, have spoken out in favor of the many advantages of such a service. On Sept. 28, at a discussion meeting at the First Congregational Church, a decision was made to explore the possibilities for Amherst.

A committee, consisting of Mrs. Adrienne Cozzolino, Mrs. Louise Harper, Mrs. Natalie Jarmon, Mrs. Barbara Takahashi, Mrs. Geraldine Templeton, Mrs. Emily Thies, and Mrs. Charlotte Weslhead, has prepared a questionnaire to determine the magnitude of the need in Amherst and the support a center might have in the community.

These questionnaires are being distributed in some of the women's groups in town and are available at the Graduate Office, Munson Hall, University of Massachusetts and in the local food markets.

A good child care center is based on the understanding of the needs and stages of the individual child. It is planned to promote optimum growth in the areas of intellectual, social, physical, and emotional development. Requirements for space, equipment, safety, and sanitation as well as size of groups of children and qualifications of the staff working directly with the children are outlined by the Mass. Dept of Public Health. The Amherst Board of Health is the licensing agency.

To meet the needs of Amherst the committee envisions a child care center which would have an educational program, and could be used part time (2 1/2 hours minimum) or full time 5 day week, approximately 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.) on a regular weekly basis.

It is unlikely that Amherst would be eligible for state and federal funds. The Amherst child care center would be non-profit but would have to be self-supporting.

Reader's Digest Article Gives Merit to ROTC

ROTC - the Reserve Officers Training Corps program on college campuses - is under attack as never before in its half-century existence. At least 50 colleges this year have seen anti-ROTC demonstrations; ROTC programs have been effectively terminated at Harvard, Dartmouth and Columbia, and downgraded at another half-dozen institutions across the United States.

But the radical students, faculty members and others calling for abolition of ROTC may be missing the point, a November Reader's Digest article suggests. Their challenge is based on two assumptions: (1) that ROTC "violates academic freedom;" and (2) that ROTC courses "do not merit academic credit."

"A careful exploration of the 'academic freedom' line of attack shows it to be glaringly unsupported by facts," says author Kenneth Tomlinson, a member of the Digest's Washington Bureau. "Probing the charge at eight universities in different parts of the country," he writes, "I found absolutely no 'thought control' in military classes."

Indeed just the opposite is often the case, he says. At least one student reported that his ROTC courses were the only place he could find a real give-and-take debate on the Vietnam war. Moreover, a number of universities have rejected demands to end ROTC on the basis of MAINTAINING academic freedom.

According to Herman B. Wells of the University of Indiana, for example, dropping ROTC would be "yielding to the same kind of pressures which have demanded that we cease teaching anything about Karl Marx, Russian history and Slavic literature."

As to charges that ROTC courses do not merit academic credit, Tomlinson points out the colleges can demand that the courses measure up to the institution's normal standards, and can insist on teachers of high quality.

Equally unfounded, argues Tomlinson, are charges that ROTC encourages militarism. "Without ROTC," he notes, "the Pentagon would be forced into a massive expansion of military academies," inevitably resulting in precisely the kind of militaristic atmosphere that ROTC critics claim to be opposing. Focusing the education of future military leaders on ACADEMIC campuses should prevent, not encourage, the development of an inbred officer corps.

ROTC has been "a critical cornerstone in our national defense for decades," writes Tomlinson. In World War II, for example, 60,000 of the 100,000 reserve officers mobilized were ROTC graduates. Their contribution led Army Chief of Staff Gen. George C. Marshall to call them "the most valuable asset we have had in this emergency." Today, some 200,000 young men in 365 colleges and universities are enrolled in ROTC programs. Army ROTC will turn out some 16,000 officers in 1969 - 21 times more than West Point. Thirty-five percent of Air Force officers commissioned this year will be ROTC graduates. More than half the Navy's regular line officers come directly from ROTC.

Nixon Admin. To Eliminate Most Use DDT

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration plans to phase out all but "essential uses" of the pesticide DDT over the next two years in a far-ranging attempt to clean up the nation's food and environment.

The program will be built around a coordinated campaign involving the departments of Agriculture, Interior, and Health, Education and Welfare for outlawing specific uses of DDT and eventually restricting other uses.

Secretary of Welfare Robert H. Finch announced the campaign at a news conference Wednesday.

Smith and Wesleyan Glee Clubs Combine Voices in Concert Tonight

The glee clubs of Smith College and Wesleyan University will combine for a concert of Italian Renaissance and Baroque music here Thursday (November 13).

Admission is free and open to the public for the event, to be held at 8:30 p.m. in the Helen Hills Hills Chapel on the campus. Miss Iva Dee Hiatt will lead the Smith Glee Club, Richard W. Donohue the Wesleyan Glee Club, and Wayne Johnson the Wesleyan Brass Ensemble. Music for brass, mixed chorus, and solo vocalists will be on the program.

Gretchen d'Armand, soprano in the Smith music department, and Donohue, alto and tenor, will sing the major solo parts of Carissimi's "Jephte, An Oratorio." They will be supported by the combined choruses, the brass ensemble, several student soloists, and James Pickering of the Wesleyan theatre department. He will read passages from the biblical story of Jephte, his triumph and tragedy. Miss Hiatt will conduct this work which comprises the second half of the concert.

Opening the program the Wesleyan brass ensemble will play several works by Johann Petzold and "Die Bankelsangerlieder." Three pieces by Giovanni Gabrieli, "O Jesu Mi Dulcissime," "Jubilate Deo," and "In Ecclesiis," will then be performed by the choruses and brass under Donohue's direction.

Gabrieli's pieces are all sacred symphonies, composed for services and special events in the Church of San Marco, Venice around 1600. "O Jesu Mi Dulcissime" illustrates the composer's most widely recognized style, a motet for double chorus plus a chormatic madrigal with a sacred text. "Jubilate Deo" and "In Ecclesiis" represent a more interesting technique of opposing tonal masses in a more completely Baroque style.

The doors of the chapel will open at 8 p.m., and seats should be occupied by 8:15 p.m. Tickets are necessary and must be obtained in advance. They will be available Thursday (November 13) from 1 to 2 p.m.

Library Construction is Both Immense and Exact

By ERNEST REIS
Staff Reporter

The area's biggest building is going up on the UMass campus. And it's using equipment that can lift tons and measures tiny fractions.

Sidewalk superintendents now view the substructure and two underground floors, of the new $16,8 million library.

Ground level will be approximately the level of the wooden bridge that passes in front of South College. Twenty-eight floors will be constructed from this level, with the top serving as an observation floor.

The new library will be 170 feet higher than the new Lincoln Campus Center.

Standing on the foundation provides a visitor with some curious emotions. He begins to feel he is in a jungle of tall trees with vines furiously intertwining overhead. But the activities of workers above soon bring back reality and the "trees" turn into columns of steel.

The foundation will support 32 triangular columns. The 108-foot square library tower will have eight of these columns on each side and then be faced with brick. Each column has 26, 2-1/2 inch reinforcing rods weighing 13.5 pounds per inch.

These rods, 41 feet long, are the largest made. They will extend inside the column for the height of the building. The individual rods will be joined by a Cadwell joint. The joint is a heavy steel sleeve filled with a thermite compound and then ignited. This provides a very powerful weld.

Assistant superintendent for the construction project, William Clark, considers the foundation the largest post tensioning job around. This concerns the 251 black cables that were woven into the reinforcing steel of the foundation.

The cables are many strands of steel colled around each other. The cables were laid in the foundation to form concave pattern facing upward. Now these cables are being tightened and secured by heavy bolts to compress the concrete foundation by approximately three fourths of an inch.

The tensioning provides an upward force to support the building and to allow for a smaller foundation. Added support will be added when the underground reading areas are constructed. Around the building will be a plaza measuring 324 feet in the north-south direction and 228 east-west.

The sidewalk superintendent viewing the library is also impressed by the Heede-Linden crane that sits impressively in the middle of all the construction. This crane operates at a radius of 115 feet lifting 4.4 tons. With a special adjustment it can lift eight tons.

This is an amazing contrast to on-site surveyors who workwithin a toleration of one eighth to one sixteenth inch in locating a 28-story building.

Stockbridge - Foundation of UMass

By ROSE L. MILLER
Staff Reporter

The interest of 45 students and of a man named Levi Stockbridge, helped establish Massachusetts Agricultural College, which laid the foundation for UMass.

Born in North Hadley in 1820, Stockbridge was a farmer who won acceptance from the State of the "Land Grant" college provisions of the Morrill Act. He subsequently became the first professor of agriculture of the college that he helped to locate in Amherst.

When the new college needed further financial backing from the State, it was Stockbridge's influence as member of the House of Representatives and as member of the Board of Agriculture that kept the school alive.

Stockbridge's presidency in the years 1880 to 1882 assured the college of further growth.

Tracing the growth of UMass parallels the growth of Massachusetts Agricultural College. Changes in the scope of education offered brought about the changes in course offerings.

In 1906, what was to become Stockbridge School, named for its founder in 1928, had four departments of Massachusetts Agricultural College to meet the needs of students entering an urbanized and industrialized society brought about a change of outlook and name, to Massachusetts State College.

The increase of departments kept pace with the increase of students in the Stockbridge School of Agriculture and the State College, turned University in 1947.

In 1940 total Stockbridge enrollment reached 280. Ten years later the figure rose to 438.

The year 1969 found 350 freshmen enter the Stockbridge School of Agriculture.

According to its present director, Fred P. Jeffrey, continual growth enables these students to choose specialization in any of 13 areas of study.

A two year associate degree program started in 1912 continues today. But there has been added an option of transferring to the four-year baccalaureate program offered by the UMass College of Agriculture. To transfer, a student has to maintain a 3.0 average, Jeffrey said.

An increasing number of students are going on to an baccalaureate degree. These students like the original Stockbridge students, have always had interest in setting up student activities.

The UMass Student Senate is an outgrowth of the Student Council of 1919. Today, Stockbridge has its own senate as well as being represented in UMass' Student Senate.

At the moment the ferment of change is evident in both Senates. The question of what Senate should have control over Stockbridge Clubs funds remains unanswered, according to Bill Forrest, Stockbridge's member-at-large to U-Mass Student Senate.

Forrest expects more discussion this month about amending the R.S.O. constitution to give Stockbridge exclusive control over their clubs' funds.

In the future there will certainly be changes in Stockbridge, and certainly some of these changes will affect the University; for it must be remembered, by all students of UMass, that Levi Stockbridge laid the foundation of both.

UMass Ski Club Offers Activities To Please Beginners and Experts

By JILL WALLACH
Staff Reporter

When the cry is sounded that the "Snow's Up", it means zero degree temperatures, long lines, cold seats and schussing over miles of packed powder.

The UMass Ski Club offers the ski enthusiast opportunities not only to schuss more often at lower prices but to meet others with the same interest. Day trips are held (when the snow comes) to such areas as Killington, Bromley and Stratton. Before Christmas, the Club can usually get reduced rates for these trips. Transportation for club members is free and usually only $1 or $2 for non-members.

During Intercession, the Ski Club offers week long trips. This year, like last year, the trips will be to Killington, Stowe and Sugarbush in Vermont. The trips last from Sunday night to Friday afternoon. The cost of $75-$80 includes room, board, five day lift ticket and five two-hour lessons. There is room for 35-50 people on each trip, depending on the accommodations.

Transportation to each area is by car.

This year, the Ski Club is also sponsoring a trip to Switzerland. Lasting ten days, the cost is about $312 for air transportation, room, breakfast, lift tickets and lessons. There are still many openings for this trip.

A $10-$15 down payment for the Vermont trips is required by early December to reserve a place. For the Switzerland trip, a $50 deposit must be paid between Nov. 12 and Nov. 19 to insure reservations.

The Club regularly meets on Monday nights, twice a month. Membership for the year is $3. For those interested in Ski Patrol, the Club offers a first aid program. For those schussers just beginning their career, free lessons will be held in Southwest after the first snow. Ski rentals are available at $1 a day for the ski-less and for beginners who are not sure they want to stick with the sport.

The Club also publishes a bi-weekly newsletter which contains the notes of the previous meeting, articles, and classified ads for ski equipment.

After the regular business of the meeting, movies are usually shown of what all schussers aim for--expert skiing on ideal slopes. All of which not only psyches everyone up for skiing, but brings members closer to the day they hear that the "SNOW'S UP".

Proposition Entertains At SU Friday

The Proposition, a series of satirical musical and non-musical sketches, will be presented at the Student Union Ballroom, Friday, November 14, at 8:00 p.m.

Recently the group changed their format to complete improvisations and, working on the basis of topics or situations suggested by the audience, and with no props except a few large blocks, the cast improvises their revue as they go along.

The members of the Proposition determine the situation (a domestic squabble, political talk show, or peace demonstration, etc.) and the audience recommends places and occupations. The results is a surprisingly high standard of entertainment.

The Proposition is an entertaining hour and a half for a price less than a movie. Their performance is aimed at a slick sophisticated liberal college town audience. So if you feel like an enjoyable evening, go to yell out for their skits.

Visiting Committee to Discuss Junior Year in Paris Program

The French Department of the University of Massachusetts, Boston, announces the 1970-71 session of its Paris program. Students admitted to this program spend the full academic year in Paris. This year three students from the Amherst campus are among the total of fifteen students admitted to the program.

The students and the program director travel to France by ship in early September. The first several weeks are spent in an intensive language and orientation program in Peyrehorade on the coast in Southwest France. In mid-October the students arrive in Paris, and with the assistance of the director select and register for their courses.

The program is not restricted to French majors, but two years of college French or equivalent is required. Students enroll in a variety of courses at different institutions of higher education in the Paris area: the Sorbonne for courses in French language and literature; Ecole du Louvre for history of art, impressionism, and other art courses; Institut d'Etudes Politiques for courses in government; Institut d'Art et d'Archeology for courses in archeology, art, musicology, esthetics; Conservatoire National d'Art Dramatique for study of drama. The academic program is supplemented by a variety of tours and excursions arranged by the director. These are optional for students.

In Paris students have the choice of living with French families or in student residences. The program is fortunate to have found exceptionally interesting and interested French families to accommodate some of the students. They have gone out of their way to take the students on trips, to special performances at theatres and concert halls, to introduce them to the mysteries of French cuisine, and even to offer them special tutorials.

The total cost of the program, including international travel and excluding incidentals, is $1,900. Sophomores and juniors, both men and women, who ar e in good academic standing may apply. In general a cumulative average of 3.0 is expected, although students with an average between 2.5 and 3.0 are not discouraged from applying. A committee interviews all applicants.

Students interested in learning more about the program are urged to meet with a visiting committee from the French Department of UMass, Boston, in the third floor lounge, Herter Hall, at 1:00 p.m. Tuesday, November 18. Information on the Paris Program is also available at the Office of International Programs, 235C whitmore and from the French Department Office, 314 Herter Hall.

Harvard and Tufts Protest Alleged Campus Employment Discrimination

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - About 75 students began a sit-in at Harvard University's main administration building Wednesday to protest the school's employment practices as they pertain to painters.

The students, led by members of Students for a Democratic Society, are demanding an end to the division of painting crews into "painters' helpers" and "journeymen painters."

They rallied priefly in Harvard Yard before beginning the sit-in, then filed into the office of Ernest R. May, dean of Harvard College.

The sit-in was orderly. No attempt was made to eject administration officials.

The students contend that while journeymen painters receive 43 cents to 86 cents an hour more than helpers, both do the same kind of work. They also say they're unhappy because Harvard purportedly has hired qualified black workers as helpers, rather than journeymen, even though the blacks have had several years' experience.

Harvard has 39 painters, 12 of them helpers and 27 journeymen.

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) - About 200 students, both black and white, began an orderly sit-in at Tufts University's Computer Center Wednesday as part of their continuing campaign to get more minority group workers hired at a campus construction site.

The students, led by the university's Afro-American Society and Students for a Democratic Society sat on the floor and did not obstruct entrances or exits, a university spokesman said.

The society is demanding that the Volpe Construction Co. hire more blacks and other minority group members at a dormitory building project.

A little more than 100 persons are employed on the project, and the demonstrators are demanding that at least 20 per cent of them be from minority backgrounds. At present, 11 are of minority backgrounds.

The students picketed the firm's Malden office Wednesday morning, then returned to the campus and staged the sit-in.

Tufts has sought a declaratory judgment from Superior Court to determine whether the Volpe firm is violating the equal opportunity clause of its contract wit h the university.

The university formed a consortium Tuesday with three other schools in the Boston area to insure equal opportunity for minority group workers in all future building projects.

Congressmen Propose Enviroment Teach-in WASHINGTON, D.C. - The date for next Spring's National Teach-In on the Crisis of the Environment being planned for college campuses across the country will be Wednesday, April 22, 1970, it was announced today.

The Teach-In objective is to mobilize the constructive energies of American youth in a massive effort to halt the accelerating pollution and destruction of the environment, according to Senator Gaylord Nelson, Wisconsin Democrat, and Congressman Pete McCloskey, California Republican.

Nelson and McCloskey, who will serve as co-chairmen of the non-partisan Teach-In effort, said that on the Teach-In day students, scientists, community and other leaders, faculty, and environmentalists will meet to discuss the environmental threat to America and to the nation's quality of life in a local and national educative effort.

The Teach-Ins will be shaped campus by campus by student initiative, and may take the form of symposiums, convocations, panel discussions or a combination of these.

Nelson and McCloskey reported that formation of a student-directed National Teach-In staff, committee and office in Washington will be completed within a week. The national office will serve as a communications and service center and as an organizational stimulus for individual campus Teach-Ins.

The co-chairmen pointed out that the success of the National Teach-In will depend on grass roots activities initiated by students campus by campus.

The goal by January, according to the co-chairmen, is to have active planning efforts for the April 22nd Teach-In underway on all of the nation's campuses.

The co-chairmen said that preparatory to the Teach-In, they are asking students to undertake a comprehensive inventory of environmental problems on their campus, in their community, and in their region.

The co-chairmen stressed the importance of student initiative and leadership to the success of the Teach-In. "It is the present student generation that inherits our rapidly deteriorating environment, and this generation whose commitment will determine whether we reverse the presesnt trends towards dirty water, air and a fouled landscape.

"Hopefully, our young people, in a day of nationwide environmental review, will set specific goals for the 70's, goals for a decade of national effort which will recognize that environmental quality deserves the same priorities of expenditure as did the moon-shot effort of the 60's," the co-chairmen continued.

"It is appropriate, by the 200th anniversary of the founding of this nation in 1976, that we be well on our way to solving the problems of population growth and the preservation of clean air, water and open space. The key to achievement of this result lies in mobilizing the idealism, the motivation, and the energies of this student generation. We are confident that they are ready, able and willing to do the job."

Nelson and McCloskey noted their conviction that environmental problems now rank with Vietnam and racism as the major issues on campus.

"The enthusiastic student support around the country for conservation is a dramatic indication of this," they said.

Nelson pointed out that since he proposed the Teach-In at a speech on September 23 in Seattle, Washington, his office has been receiving heavy mail and phone calls from around the country, mostly from students, expressing overwhelming support for the Teach-In.

As an especially meaningful endorsement, Nelson cited a $10 contribution to the Teach-In from an American teaching volunteer in Vietnam who said he wanted to do something for the quality of life in this country.

According to Nelson and McCloskey, it is hoped the teach-In will deeply involve communities, environmentally - concerned organizations, and high school and grade school levels, as well as college students.

"More than any other issue in this country today, the environmental concern cuts across generation, political parties, and attitudes, and we anticipate that a successful National Teach-In will involve more diverse elements of our society working toward a common goal than this country has ever seen before," the co-chairman said.

Nelson, an ardent advocate in environmental causes during his entire career in public office is a major spokesman in the U.S. Senate regarding policy on matters ranging from protection of Everglades National Park to ending automobile air pollution by requiring a substitute for the internal combusion engine.

Prior to entering Congress, McCloskey was a well-known conservation attorney in California, attracting national attention on a citizen fight against AEC power lines in the hills near San Francisco. In the House, he serves on two conservation subcommittees and has sponsored a variety of environmental legislation.

UMass Senior Seeks Bear Facts

The next time you encounter Euarctos Americanus in the Massachusetts woods, please let University of Massachusetts senior Wayne Lilyestrom know.

Euarctos Americanus is the American black bear. Working on the theory that the black bear is on the increase in this state, Lilyestrom has begun a study of the animal's status supervised by associate professor of wildlife biology Joseph Larson.

"The objectives are to compile a record of bear sightings, kills and damage in Massachusetts and to predict at what point bear numbers will be sufficiently high to require some action by the state Division of Fisheries and Game," according to Lilyestrom.

One thing he'd like to know is about recent sightings of black bears in Massachusetts. Anyone having such information is asked to communicate it to Lilyestrom at the department of forestry and wildlife management, Holdsworth Hall, University of Massachusetts Amherst.

Soccer Team Sinks Coast Guard, 6-2
Redmen, Now 5-4, Face UNH in Finale

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

The UMass soccer team came up with its' highest scoring day of the season in downing the Coast Guard Academy, 6-2, yesterday afternoon. The win put the Redmen's record at 5-4 with the seasons finale coming up Saturday when they travel to UNH.

UMass showed no effects of a ten day layoff due to the cancellation of the Springfield game last week. Three minutes into the first period, Lindo Alves put them ahead with a well placed penalty kick. The kick was a result of an interference call against CG goalie on a corner kick by Augie Calheno. Alves lofted the shot into the upper left corner of the net as the goalie dived in vain. The Redmen kept the pressure on throughout the period and their efforts were rewarded when Duane Brown scored on a breakaway pass from Larry Defelice.

The Bears closed the gap to 2-1 early in the second period on a forty foot shot by Bills which sailed in over the head of goalie Tom Malone. The two teams battled back and forth for most of the period until UMass broke the game open right before intermission. Larry Defelice, who played a fine game, headed in a pass from Alves to lift the Redmen to a 3-1 lead. About a minute later, Tony Nunziante set up Gus Penon in front of the net and Gus scored on a shot to the opposite corner. DeFelice scored his second goal in the space of three minutes on a shot which the goalie saved but inside of the goal, to give the Redmen a 5-1 halftime lead.

The second half proved to be much less exciting. The only opportunities in the scoreless third period came on shots by DeFelice, but the CG goalie thwarted him twice. Yales scored the second goal for the Coast Guard on a long shot from in front into the upper corner of the net. Duane Brown scored the final goal for the Redmen when he headed in a corner kick by Augie Calheno. Coach Peter Broaca took the opportunity to use his bench in the final minutes and rest the starters for the trip to New Hampshire this weekend.

Conf. Notes

Connecticut quarterback Rick Robustelli, New Hampshire linebacker Dick Gordon and Rhode Island flanker Chris Hess have been chosen as the top offensive defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Robustelli, a 5'11 185-lb. junior, set 7 UConn records and tied two in the Huskies' 28-22 win over Rutgers. Robustelli completed 26 of 45 passes for 283 yards and two TD's to establish new career and game marks.

Gordon, a 5'10 190-lb. senior, made 11 tackles and a defensive standout as New Hampshire toppled Springfield 14-8. The win made UNH's record 3-4.

Hess, a 6'2 170-lb. sophomore, caught 6 passes for 90 yards, including two touchdowns as URI dropped a 27-13 decision at Boston U. Other nominations were: Offense - end Gene Benner (Maine), fullback Dave Sullivan (New Hampshire), halfback Bob Rodger (Vermont) and quarterback Bob Ehrhardt (Rhode Island); Defense - linebacker Mark Richardson (Maine), end Ralph Tiner (Connecticut), middle guard Jerry Elliott (Vermont) and end Warren Negri (Rhode Island); Sophomores - defensive tackle Dick Todd (Maine), defensive back Gene Massa (Connecticut), quarterback Bill Murdoch (New Hampshire) and defensive back Paul Walker (Vermont).

Redmen Venture to UNH for Yankee Conf. Finale

Wildcats, Despite 3-4 Record, Could Upset UMass' Perfect Conf. Slate

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

"With their full compliment of players, they're as tough as anybody." These are the words UMass assistant coach Bob Graham used to assess Saturday's football opponent, the University of New Hampshire.

The Wildcats beat Springfield last week, 14-8, to bring their record to 3-4. A victory over UMass before the Durham crowd in the season's last game would be the crowning achievement of a so-so year.

In Graham's opinion, such an upset is within the realm of possibility and he cites the UConn game, which the Wildcats won, 14-6, as an example. UNH pushed the Huskies all over the field at a time when UConn was at its best.

At one point, with UConn on the UNH three yard line, the Wildcats stopped three attempts by Vin Clements for the score. Clements is considered by many to be one of the top pro prospects in New England.

So, the Redmen are cautioned not to take this opponent lightly. On paper, UNH shapes up as a fairly well-balanced team.

The Wildcats employ a ball control offense that will set in a wing right or wing left formation. UNH will not overpower an opponent with its scoring but is the type of team that can make two or three touchdowns stand up for a win.

The quarterbacks don't throw much but because of this, the element of surprise is in their favor and they have been effective. Soph Bob Hopkins, 6'1-180 will start. He's completed 45 passes for 670 yards and five touchdowns. He's knowledgeable and knows how to pick a defense apart. Bill Murdoch, 5'11-185 will also see action. He is effective on the belly option series.

Dave Sullivan, 6' 208 is the fullback. He doesn't get the ball as often as the other backs as he is primarily a blocker. Halfbacks Art Randlett, 6'-185 and Carl De Filippi, 5'7-185 are the chief running threats.

Randlett, who usually comes out at wingback, has gained 212 yards for a sterling 6.1 average. He's also a top receiver and is directly responsible for two of the three UNH wins.

DeFilippi is the top rusher with 222yards for a 3.8 average and is the workhorse back.

The Wildcats have good ability in the line, particularly at guard and center which are manned by lettermen.

Co-captain Dan Drewniak, 5'11-190 and Chuck LePisto 6'1-200 are the guards. Both are quick and have received credit for solidifying the Wildcat ground game. Mike Burlage, 6'-190, is the center.

The tackles are big. Jim Koshko, 6'3-230, and Phil Confer, 6'4-240, are both rugged one-on-one blockers.

The ends are Kyle Kucharski, 6'1-195, and Bill Degan, 6'2-175. Both are sophomores who concentrate on blocking as passing is not a major aspect of the UNH offense.

Defensively, the Wildcats who are second to UMass in the Conference, employ a 5-2-4 setup. They will stunt and blitz from both sides in an effort to confuse the offense.

The line features some fairly good size. The middle guard, who is appropriately named Edgar Savage, comes in at 6'3-247. Savage is particularly tough on the inside running game. Cliff McDonald, 6'2-220, and Nelson Cassavaugh, 6'-210, are the tackies. Cassavaugh has been impressive.

The linebackers are solid. Norm Powers, 5'11-185, and Dick Gordon, 5'10-190, are both quick and fast. Gordon was named Yankee Conference defensive player of the week in recognition of his stellar performance against Springfield. He has a good "nose" for the ball.

The secondary, though small, is quick. There have been no long bombs completed for touchdowns to the present.

The key man is safety Reno Regis, 5'11-170. He is exceptionally quick and is adept at anticipating the play. Bill Cross, 5'10-155, is the other safety.

The cornerbacks have a little more size. Roger Weibusch, 5'10-173, and Bob Robichaud, 6'1-180, are tough on the run. Both are sure tacklers and are rated among the three or four top sprinters on the squad.

John Kenney will handle the punting chores. Hampton Ballard is the place kicker. Neither has been outstanding statistically.

On paper, UNH shapes up as a team capable of giving UMass a tough test. The Wildcats have several factors in their favor. For the first time in several weeks, the offensive backfield is intact. There is the added incentive of going all out before the home folks in the season's last game. In addition, injuries will be no problem because, as Graham said, "They can heal all winter."

UMass has its own incentive. Following last year's 2-8 debacle, the Redmen would like nothing better than to close out their Yankee Conference slate with a 5-0 record. The odds are in their favor.

Killebrew Voted MVP In A.L., Powell Second

NEW YORK (AP) - Harmon Killebrew, a quiet baldish man who led the major leagues with 49 home runs and 140 runs batted in for the Minnesota Twins, was named Wednesday the Most Valuable Player in the American League for 1969.

The muscular Killebrew, who bounced back strong from an injury in the 1968 All-Star game that threatened to end his career, was a decisive winner over John "Boog" Powell of the pennant-winning Baltimore Orioles. Powell batted .304, hit 37 homers and knocked in 121 runs.

Killebrew, 33, received 16 of the first place votes by the 24-man committee of the Baseball Writers Association of America, two from each league city. The voting, completed before the beginning of the playoffs and thus restricted to performance in regular season games, was tabulated and announced by Jack Lang, secretary-treasurer of the writers' group. Minnesota won the league's Western Division before losing to Baltimore in the playoffs.

Frank Robinson of Baltimore, who had won the MVP in the American League in 1954 and in the National League with Cincinnati in 1961, received the two remaining first-place votes. Robinson hit .308 with 32 homers and 100 RBI.

The writers mentioned 37 players in the balloting and 10 of the 12 clubs were represented. Only Chicago and Cleveland failed to draw a vote.

The point score, based on 14 for a first-place vote, nine for second, eight for third and so on down to one for tenth gave Killebrew 294 points, Powell 227 and Robinson 162.

Frank Howard, the Washington slugger who was runnerup with 48 homers, finished fourth with 115 points and Reggie Jackson, Oakland's homerun hitter who threatened in mid-season to top both Babe Ruth and Roger Maris and wound up with 47, was fifth with 110 points.

Denny McLain, last year's MVP unanimous winner who shared the 1969 Cy Young pitching award with Mike Cuellar of Baltimore, had the most points of any pitcher, 85, for sixth place.

SMASH!! Who says rugby is a rough sport? With action like this, there's no wonder why it is also a popular spectator sport. Although the UMass rugby team has had some tough games, it has succeeded in providing much excitement. (MDC photo by Ken Stevens)

Notre Dame to Consider Possibility of Bowl Game

(AP) - Notre Dame's ban on post-season football games is beginning to wear this under rumor and speculation and university officials are not completely ruling out the possibility of a bowl game.

The Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame Tuesday said, "There is nothing on it yet in any way because our old policy holds. If we get around to it, we'll announce it."

Notre Dame's policy has been no bowl games since 1925 when the Irish made their only post season appearance. Notre Dame went to the Rose Bowl that year and defeated Stanford 27-10.

Irish football Coach Ara Parseghian is all for Notre Dame accepting a bowl bid but adds, "I have accepted Notre Dame's policy against bowl games and have endorsed it."

A week ago Parseghian revealed Notre Dame has received a bid in each of the five seasons he has coached at Notre Dame and that each year the athletic board reviews the bid and turns it down.

"I'm sure we'll receive another bid this year and again the board will review it," Parseghian said Tuesday, "and the board meets around this time of the year. At this stage there is no agreement to my knowledge."

Reasons for a possible change in Irish policy against bowl games are financial. Notre Dame recently completed a multi-million dollar sports and convocation center and would like to cover its football fields with synthetic turf.

Senate Bill Would Give Stockbridge Equality

By RICHARD C. HANSON

A bill was introduced at the Wed. night Senate meeting to give the students at Stockbridge an equal voting status in Senate matters, such as the referendum rescinding S-50.

The bill, S-78, would change the Constitution, Section 1 Article 1, to read "Undergraduate students of the University and students of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture", thus making the Stockbridge students members of the Student Government Association. The Bill will now come up before the Senate Constitutional Convention, Wed., Nov. 19.

Many students attending Stockbridge became angered after standing in the voting line only to be denied their vote. Student Senate Pres. Bruce Balboni and Sen. Dawn Dudash, sponsor of S-78, decided that it would be unconstitutional to allow Stockbridge students to vote. Their argument was based upon Article 1, Section 1 (Membership) stating "All undergraduate students of the University shall be members of the Student Government and shall have the right to vote." Stockbridge students are not considered part of the University.

However, there appears to be a breach in the constitution. The Stockbridge students living in the Dorms have always voted in senatorial elections.

Dean Jeffrey of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture expressed the opinion that since the Stockies were completely immersed in University social and dormitory life, they should be considered members of the Student Government Association. The School of Agriculture does have a separate curriculum and classes, and its own Student Government and senate.

Mr. Demers of the R.S.O. office cleared up the matter of whose money would have made up the defeated $10,000 senate allocation. $5400 would come from Homecoming receipts. $3600 would come from the Student Tax Account 802A.

The rest would be gathered by the Student Senate Financial Committee. Technically there was Stockbridge money within the $3600 from account 802A. According to RSO figures, the Stockbridge senate should receive a $558.00 rebate, from money left over from the expenditures of the previous year. This $558.00 is now in account 802A. There is no provisions made for the formal return of the money, according to Mr. Demers.

The proposed new constitution which failed to gather enough votes to become effective in the last referendum, during the Senatorial election, guarantees the rights of the Undergraduates of Stockbridge. The amendment S-78 will update the present Constitution.

Newfield Slams Vietnam In D.V.P. Lecture Here

By JILL WALLACH
Staff Reporter

The second DVP lecture of the year was precluded last night by the burning of a "mock war machine tank" by Eric "The Rat" Walgren.

Following this demonstration, Jack Newfield, assistant editor of the Village Voice and author of "Robert Kennedy: A Memoir", spoke out against the Nixon Administration and the Vietnam War.

On Vietnam, Newfield said that those who got us into the war were the "best liberals and intellectuals of the time: JFK, LBJ, HHH, Walt Rostow, and Mc Namara." Later in his speech, Newfield said that the "men responsible for the war should be in jail, not those who are trying to stop it."

Newfield said that there were several lessons to be learned from our involvement in Vietnam. The first was that the "U.S. has no moral justification for intervening in the revolutions of small nations. We have become the greatest arm of counter-revolution - we who grew out of a revolution."

Secondly, the "Military-industrial-labor complex" has too much power and the institutions of this complex have caused the "history of the last decade to be one of the blunders of three institutions." Newfield also said that we have already lost the war --"the fly has caught the fly paper."

Remarking on the Moratorium, Newfield said that "pressure is a pre-condition of change." He said that in the last year the pressure hasn't been great enough. "We have to have a very strong program based on an idea rather than a leader." With this stronger program, "We must build a new majority of change."

Newfield said that he was opposed to violence, but "we must commit massive civil disobedience." Another method of protest Newfield suggested would be an income tax strike next April 15. For our "economy is one based on death rather than on liberation," said Newfield.

Newfield then levelled his caustic quips at Pres. Nixon. He said, "Nixon is giving plastic a bad reputation. Nixon is a total product of Madison Avenue - the archtypal plotter, the manipulator with no program."

Turning to Nixon's speech of Nov. 3, Newfield said we must stop allowing the President to hood-wink us with "Alice in Wonderland rhetoric." Nixon's speech said "nothing, carefully." It was like "a summer rerun of Dean Rusk." He thinks repetition is the same as reason.

Student Strike Against War Stages Small Picket Lines

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

A group of 30 students representing the "Coalition for Moving the War Machine Off Campus" yesterday formed picket lines in front of Bartlett and Herter Hall buildings. The pickets were part of a planned student strike to protest the administration's refusal to officially close down the University during this week's Moratorium.

Carrying placards which read "On Strike", "No Business as Usual," and "Strike for Peace," the picketers were silent and unobstructive to those students who entered the buildings. The picketers remained for about two hours, breaking up shortly after 12:30 p.m.

UMass graduate student Eric ("The Rat") Walgren, spokesman for the picketers, stated that he originally expected "more students as the day wears on" to take part in the picket and that Bartlett was only a "starting point" for the picket lines. But previously planned "targets" buildings such as Morrill, Hasbrouck and Whitmore, were never covered.

When asked why he was picketing, one student told the Collegian that "I support the Coalition and the Moratorium." "By remaining open and conducting defense research, ROTC and other such programs, the University is political. I would like to see it change its politics on this war," said another picketer.

Spokesman Walgren commented on the relatively small turn out of picketers by saying that "While we didn't have a big picket line, class attendance seemed to be low. Few people seemed to be going in and out of the buildings." He thus felt that the strike "seemed to be quite effective in Bartlett and Herter."

It was not known just how many students did actually stay away from classes. Walgren said that he hoped people would "participate" in the strike and "not simply take the day off." And though he felt the strike and picket lines helped to get recognition for the Moratorium, Walgren also speculated that today's canvassing in surrounding towns might not be as large in size as previously planned. People are "using the Moratorium" for individual reasons, just as they did the strike he said.

Coalition member Sidney Finehirsch stated that the strike was less successful than planned because "there is only so much Moratorium activity you can conduct in one week."

"The University was in a sense on strike today, he added. It appears to be a success in the sense that kids stayed away from classes.

Walgren topped off the day's strike activities by setting fire to a wooden model "tank" in front of Mahar Auditorium shortly before DVP speaker Jack Newfield began his speech.

As the DVP audience looked on, Walgren stated: "Someone asked me if I have a permit to start this fire. I said, 'Do we need a permit to get the war machine off this campus? No!'"

Garage Embezzler Found On New Jersey Street

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) - George Lewis Brady, 63, who had been sought for six years in connection with a $784,468 larceny of the Massachusetts Parking Authority was arrested on the street here Thursday.

Brady, wearing blue denim overalls and a black leather jacket, was returning to his hotel room with a bag of groceries when he was arrested by FBI agents and investigators from the office of the Massachusetts attorney general.

He lived in a 60-a-month apartment at the Hotel Charleston at 118 South Carolina Ave., about a block from the boardwalk in the resort city.

The FBI said he had $500 in his possession when he was taken into custody about 5:15 p.m. in front of the hotel.

He was seized on a fugitive warrant issued six years ago Wednesday after Brady failed to appear in Suffolk Superior Court in Massachusetts for a hearing on a question of his mental competence to stand trial on larceny charges.

Brady had served as chairman of the Massachusetts Parking Authority.

Brady was arraigned before U.S. Magistrate Robert Neustadter. He waived extradition to Massachusetts and was held in $400,000 bail at Atlantic City Jail pending a U.S. District Court hearing Friday in Camden.

"Do you have $400,000" Neustadter asked the defendant.

"Heavens no," Brady replied.

The FBI said Brady had been registered for about three weeks at the Charleston under the name of Israel Hard.

Brady appeared tired and his knees shook as he appeared before the magistrate.

He had recently been traced to Asbury Park by the FBI and a Massachusetts detective. But when investigators went looking for him they found he had fled a beachfront apartment there.

Brady's wife, Lucy, a former assistant attorney general in Massachusetts, lives in Fort Lee in the northeastern part of the state. She works for a New York publishing house.

He was allowed to talk to her by telephone. He was heard to say, "Don't get too upset by this thing."

Brady, a former newspaper editorial writer in Boston was appointed to the Massachusetts Parking Authority by Democratic Gov. Foster Furcolo who named him chairman May 2, 1959.

Brady resigned Nov. 17, 1961, and after an investigation of the finances of the garage constructed under Boston Common, Brady and several others connected with the project were indicted.

250,000 Expected for D.C. March

WASHINGTON (AP) - Specially trained troops equipped with the weapons of war stood at the ready around this nervous city yesterday as antiwar forces massed for the start of their "march against death" to the U.S. Capitol.

The three-day protest, culminating Saturday in a march of perhaps 250,000 on Pennsylvania Avenue, was launched as the centerpiece of a nationwide series of weekend antiwar demonstrations.

The avowed aim of what the New Mobilization Committee called history's greatest peace demonstration is to persuade President Nixon that the great American majority - and not a silent one - wants an immediate end of the war in Vietnam.

Plainly worried over the potential for violence, the administration air lifted 9,000 soldiers and Marines to Washington Wednesday.

Crack, riot-trained troops, they were deployed around the city overnight and this morning. Another 28,000 men in nearby military installations already were on alert.

The protest organizers - called the "New Mobe" or just "The Mobe" renewed their vow that peace and order would prevail. All participating groups, including some of the nation's most militant have pledged to heed the discipline of nonviolence and legality, a spokesman said.

In fact little chance of disorder was seen during the "march against death" a 40-hour, single file procession of 45,000 men, women and children, each bearing a placard with the name of a Vietnam war victim.

The placard-bearing marchers, using the sidewalks and obeying traffic lights, were routed across the Memorial Bridge over the Potomac, around the Lincoln Memorial, past the White House, and on to the peace memorial at the foot of Pennsylvania Avenue, just below the Capitol.

There a row of black plywood caskets rested on the ground. Each placard was to be dropped in a casket. On Saturday the filled caskets - between 35 and 40 of them - were to be delivered to the White House, according to the Mobe's plans. But few believed the White House would accept them.

Each marcher was instructed, as he passed the Northeast corner of the White House, to call out the name of the dead serviceman on his placard.

But merchants and residents spoke apprehensively as the numbers of newcomers increased on the streets, convoys of military trucks interrupted traffic, signal corps vehicles were stationed in the courtyard of some government buildings, and armed sentries appeared at key points.

A riot command center was being set up in the District of Columbia building, captained by Mayor Walter E. Washington.

No regular troops were to enter the city unless called by the mayor, the Pentagon said. The keeping of law and order was entrusted to the 3,800-man Metropolitan Police force and 2,000 national guardsmen. The Mobe planned to have 2,500 of its own marshals along the Saturday mass march route.

Lederle to Join Debates On UMass. War. Next Week

President Lederle will participate in the first of four debates in a series entitled "War and the University", involving students, faculty, administrators and others. This marks the first time Lederle has ever appeared in a public debate. The debate will be a broad exploration of the war and university issues. This initial debate will occur Monday in the Student Union Ballroom at 3:30 P.M.

The others who will speak there are: UMass allumnus Claire Moriarty, English faculty member John Nelson, and Dean Seymour Shapiro. Student senate Vice-president, Cindy Olken, will moderate.

Debate number two will focus on ROTC. and will take place in the Ballroom on Monday evening at 8. Mark Smith of the Student Senate will act as moderator. Speakers will be R.O.T.C. cadet Peter Discenza, mathematics faculty member and retired Brigadeer General, Wallace Ford, Bobby Kentfield of the Student Senate, and Business Administration faculty member Isadore Silver.

The third debate will be "War and the University: Focus on Research," Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 also in the Student Union. UMass assistant Provost Robert Gluckstern will moderate. Speakers will be Sidney Finehirsh, Howard Gadlin, Charles Hutchenson, and Guenther Levy.

The final debate will have to do with recruiting and will be presented in Mahar Auditorium at 8:15 on Tuesday. Glen Gordon of the Department of Government will moderate. The speakers in the last debate will be Michael Alcivar, Milton Cantor, Gilbert Salk, and Stanley Young.

March Slated for Fri.

On Friday evening, November 14th., in observance of the November Moratorium, there will be a one-hour candlelight march around Amherst Common. The procession will begin at five p.m. and will be accompanied by the reading of the names of one thousant Massachusetts war dead.

The march will be followed by a very brief ceremony to culminate in the planting of a tree in memory of the dead. Rabbi Martin Kowal, University of Massachusetts chaplain, will sing a prayer and Professor Doris Abramson, of the UMass Speech Department, will read some anti-war poems.

Candles will be available at the Common and the funds for the tree, to be presented as a gift to the Town of Amherst, will come from the proceeds of the candles. All Western Massachusetts residents are welcome to participate.

Brower Speaks On Environment

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

"We are the enemy!" said leading Ecologist, David Brower, speaking at Thompson hall last night, to a capacity crowd. "We" are the people destroying our environment.

In a lecture sponsored by the Sierra Club and Government department David Brower told people to "help" our political system save our environment. He spoke of writing congressmen, of giving support and ideas to the politicians. He spoke of a new Organization called the FRIENDS OF THE EARTH becoming activists for environmental change through political action.

Speaking about the environment itself, Mr. Brower quipped, that "We are speedily trying to make the earth like the moon." He went on saying that there won't be anything to manufacture or sell on a dead planet. He emphasized the fact that the earth is like a spaceship hurtling through the universe. "This is the only place where life can exist." He made the analogy of man's currect destruction of the earth to traveling at 120 MPH on a highway. In ten years there will be about twice as much destruction. Man can't survive at 240 MPH. He is tempting destruction at 120 MPH.

The most shocking example of destruction he offered was the fact that there is more DDT found in mother's milk, than is legally allowed in cow's milk. Brower quoted, "If if (the milk) were in any other container, it wouldn't be allowed across state lines." Such is the far reaching effect of our environmental dilemma.

Brower listed as some of the "enemies" of environment as; the population explosion, " Every cause is a lost cause with the population bomb", the Energy companies, trying to build some 140 nuclear reactors, the "Road Gang", including the oil industry, Detroit manufacturers and the high way builders, and the greatest enemy, ourselves. He spoke of what would happen if we stopped throwing away the apples with a worm and eating the one with DDT that you can't see. He talked about the popularity of big engined cars. "The only obscenity I found in playboy was the two page car advertisements." Brower pleaded, "How much better to stop now before life becomes totally repugnant, while there is still some beauty."

Brower emphasized that we must "get the decision making process.. to use the system to maintain the system. He told of court decisions favoring environment. People have to help the politicians, to force the politicians to work quickly.

At UMass a new group called ACTION FOR QUALITY ENVIRONMENT is working for the same goals of good environment, David Brower spoke of. The first official action sponsored by A.Q.E. will take place next Thursday, November 20 at 8:00 p.m. It is a Teach-in on Air Pollution.

All that is at stake in the next few years is our environment, hence our survival. As Brower said, "If our environment is bad enough to kill off the pelicans, a species some 90 million years old, maybe we're next."

Trustees

The Board of Trustees will consider at their meeing this weekend at SWAP the Senate's security proposal in relation to residence hall self-determination with respect to visitation. The security plan was received by the Student Activities Subcommittee of the Board, but it was forwarded to the full Board without a formal recommendation as to disposition.

The Senate President has already expressed the belief that the Board will formally implement self-determination. Just as at the subcommittee level, adverse reaction to the actions of the Senate subsequent to the September 22nd meeting are expected. Under the legislation adopted by the Senate, a number of residency halls have adopted security plans, forwarded them to the Student Matters Committee, and subsequently implemented their own policy with respect to visitation. Those who will represent the Senate at the Board meeting are confident that, once the situation has been adequately explained to the Board, there will be a general understanding of the reasons for the Senate's actions.

Senate Wrapup

President Balboni announced at the Senate meeting Wednesday night that the election commission appointed by the Governor to establish procedures for the seating of a student on the Board of Trustees has decided that in the interim between the present and the establishment of a post of student body President, the President of the Student Senate shall serve as the student Trustee. The decision is not yet final, as it awaits the approval of the Governor.

President Balboni did not discuss his attitude towards the appointment. When the bill was initially signed by the Governor, Mr. Balboni denounced it as tokenism.

In other action, the Senate reacted to complaints, stemming principally from the Central Area, concerning the cumbersomeness of R.S.O. and the unreasonableness of R.S.O. financial policy by establishing a special committee to hear the complaints and recommend revisions in financial procedures. Senator Albert saw this legislation as a necessary "token of our good faith."

After hearing protestations from Treasurer Gauthier that he had always received close co-operation from the Treasurer's Office, the Senate nonetheless voted to recommend that all of the Treasurer's books be open to public scrutiny.

Twice over the course of the evening, supporters of a bill to place the Senate in support of the November 13th and 14th strike of classes failed to achieve the necessary two-thirds vote to consider the motion in special business.

Shultz to Propose Bill On Lenthy Labor Problems

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Labor George P. Shultz said Wednesday that President Nixon will soon propose new legislation to deal with such emergency labor disputes as the current one threatening a railroad strike.

At the same time, Shultz announced that the railroad industry and four rail shopcraft unions have agreed to resume bargaining, probably Thursday.

Shultz said in an announcement that he had stressed to both sides the importance of achieving a settlement through collective bargaining before a White House delaying action expires Dec. 3 and frees the unions to strike.

Shultz, in a speech to a group of lawyers, cited the railroad case as "a perfect example" of what is wrong with present federal labor law dealing with public emergency strikes.

President Nixon named an emergency board Oct. 3 under terms of the Railway Labor Act to avert a threatened strike against six railroads by the unions and a retaliation threat by the industry to shut down all other lines.

"Very little collective bargaining takes place until after the emergency board makes its report," Shultz said.

The Railway Labor Act provides 30 days for the emergency board to make its report and recommendations to the White House and another 30 days for further negotiations in an attempt to settle the dispute.

The railroad dispute involves some 48,000 workers now earning 3.59 per hour who are demanding a one-year 10 per cent pay increase and other benefits.

The railroads have offered a total of 5 per cent in two stages, which the union contends averages out to only 3.5 per cent for the year. The dispute has dragged out since last Jan. 1 under delaying procedures of the law.

The unions have flatly rejected the emergency board's recommendations that they accept the industry's wage offer. The board also recommended that the industry accept the unions' demand for 20 cents extra per hour for more highly skilled men.

Union sources have indicated their strategy would be to strike only one or two railroads if the dispute is not settled peaceably by Dec. 3, in an attempt to avert a new federal declaration that the national interest was threatened.

After the 60-days expire Dec. 3, it would take a special act of Congress to halt any new strike threat. The unions have been working under a wage settlement imposed by Congress to avert a similar nationwide railroad shutdown in 1967.

Shultz gave no details of Nixon's planned new law to deal with emergency strikes.

Senators Speak On Nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two more senators quit the thinning ranks of the undecided Thursday, one coming out for the Supreme Court nomination of Clement F. Haynsworth Jr. and the other against.

Republican James P. Pearson of Kansas said he will back President Nixon's nominee although "I do so with some concern."

Democrat Stuart Symington of Missouri said he will vote against because "the feeling of hostility and frustration which this nomination has evoked could only be exacerbated by honoring a jurist who does not have the highest sense of ethical considerations."

The declarations, neither totally unexpected, came as the Senate moved toward opening of the formal debate on the nomination made by President Nixon last August. Haynsworth currently is chief judge of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court at Richmond.

The debate expected to climax sometime next week in a close vote, was scheduled to begin around noon but was delayed by a surprise visit to Capitol Hill by Nixon.

The president had lunch with 13 members of the Senate, then gave an eight-minute speech in the Senate chamber.

Although Nixon made no mention of the impending debate in a speech devoted mainly to his hopes for peace, there were signs it was on his mind.

Twice he told the 70 or so senators present that he respects their right to vote as individuals.

Most of those who lunched with the President belonged to the Democratic or Republican leadership, except for Republican Ralph T. Smith of Illinois.

Smith, who holds no leadership post after less than two months in the Senate, is among the dwingling number of uncommitted senators who appear to hold the balance of power.

He is regarded as an important vote because he once declared his opposition to Haynsworth but has since shifted.

According to an Associated Press tally, the declarations of Pearson and Symington leave 23 senators who have not definitely committed themselves one way or the other. The AP count shows 40 who have definitely committed themselves against and 37 who say they will vote for confirmation.

Harriman Challenges Nixon

WASHINGTON (AP) - Former Ambassador W. Averell Harriman challenged and the State Department affirmed Wednesday President Nixon's contention that a letter in August from Ho Chi Minh rejected a Nixon bid to "move forward" the Paris peace talks.

"To me it was a wide open invitation for further discussions," Harriman said of the North Vietnamese president's letter to Nixon. "President Johnson and I would have been highly criticized if we had not recognized and taken advantage of the correspondence."

Nixon disclosed the exchange of mail between himself and Ho in his nationally broadcast Vietnam policy speech Nov. 3. Nixon said at the time the response from Hanoi had "flatly rejected my initiative."

Religious People
Let Us Unite

A segregated faith tends to shut its own truth in and other truth out. Its center of gravity is itself.

We need one another. Let us unite and supply that need!

So long as we remain segregated into many faiths we deny the very spirit of religion and deny ourselves its full benefit.

There has never been a time when there was greater need for religion to bring its full united strength to bear.

Segregation is bad emotionally. It tends to cramp our we-feeling within the limits of fellow segregated sectarians rather than to include all religious people.

Segregation is bad intellectually. Through the ages, segregated faiths have demanded implicit—even blind — obedience. "Thou shalt!" and "Thou shalt not!" were not to be questioned.

History condemns segregation which limits, blights and pits faith against faith. A faith, emboldened by its sense of certainty, has fought other faiths with even greater zeal than it has fought irreligion.

Sects split communities, nations and the world into self-centered groups who disrupt society and make it hard to work together. Sectarian preferences and prejudices spill over into politics, education, business, the employment office, medicine and other fields as manipulators appeal to prejudice and play one group against others.

By contrast: One Religion of Brotherhood would pool the Religious Experiences of all in the enjoyment of a common Religious Life of Service and in the search for greater Religious Truth. It is a Unity of Purpose — The Practice of Brotherhood.

The faiths have shown little inclination to merge. It became evident that if an inclusive religion were created in our day, individual One Religionists would have to create it. Numerous local One Religion groups are needed. Such a grass roots movement is likely to be more vital, dynamic and meaningful to its members than one organized and controlled from above.

The Space Odyssey Continues

All "Go" for Launch; Landing Set for Wed.

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) - Declaring "We're ready to go," the Apollo 12 astronauts Thursday got the all-clear to sail moonward Friday aboard their "Yankee Clipper" for the first major attempt to cash in scientifically on America's $24 billion Apollo investment.

"All is proceeding satisfactorily, and we foresee no problems meeting an 11:22 a.m. EST lift off Friday," a National Aeronautics and Space Administration official said after workmen successfully replaced a leaky fuel tank that threatened a month's delay in this $375 million mission.

Apollo 12 astronauts Charles Conrad Jr., Richard F. Gordon Jr. and Alan L. Bean got a bird's eye view of their 363-foot-tall Saturn 5 rocket Thursday while flying formation over the moonport in three T38 jet aircraft.

"We're ready to go when they are," said Bean before the trio took off on their 40-minute training flight.

Bean said he and his two crewmates flew loops and rolls because "it helps get your inner ear acclimated to zero gravity." Also, "it makes you feel kind of sick," he said rubbing the midriff of his blue flight suit. "That's the object - to build up your ability to fight off any uneasy feeling in your stomach."

Apollo 12 commander Conrad said he was feeling "pretty good" and Gordon complimented the workmen who replaced the hydrogen tank that developed a leak Wednesday.

"They did a great job. I knew they would," Gordon said. "We had all the confidence in the world. It's fixed. It's even got hydrogen in it like it's supposed to."

Weathermen said conditions would be satisfactory for a launch attempt Friday, despite overcast skies Thursday.

Thursday afternoon, Conrad and Gordon climbed into a command ship simulator on the ground to practice launch and re-entry maneuvers, while Bean rehearsed in a landing craft trainer how he and Conrad will lift off from the moon.

With thousands of people and VIP's headed by President Nixon, Vice President Spiro J. Agnew and the Aga Khan looking on, the Apollo 12 launch crew will have until 2:27 p.m. to start Conrad, Gordon and Bean on their 10-day expedition to the moon's Ocean of Storms.

If problems delay the lift off past that time, another favorable launch opportunity will not occur until Dec. 14.

Nixon, who plans to fly to the Cape Kennedy area from Washington about an hour before launch and view the lift off from a VIP bleacher area, Thursday named George M. Low, former manager of the Apollo spacecraft program, to be NASA deputy administrator.

Most of the excess "pad" time built into Apollo 12's countdown was used up Thursday so workmen could load liquid hydrogen aboard a new spacecraft fuel tank. The tank was substituted for a similar container that developed a leak.

"Time is tight, but we're confident we'll make it," a NASA official said. If all goes well, Conrad, Gordon and Bean will first thunder into a circular earth orbit 118 miles high, then reignite the upper stage of their Saturn 5 rocket after 1-3/4 circuits of the globe to kick them out of orbit toward the moon.

With the lunar landing craft they call "Intrepid" hooked to the nose of the command ship named "Yankee Clipper," the three astronauts are to swing into moon orbit Monday at 10:57 p.m.

Late the next day, Conrad, 39-year-old veteran of two Gemini flights and Bean, 37-year-old rookie astronaut, are to crawl into Intrepid and land on the eastern "shore" of the Ocean of Storms Wednesday at 1:53 a.m. Gemini veteran Gordon, 40, is to remain in moon orbit taking care of the Apollo 12 command ship.

On Intrepid is a television camera designed to show earthlings the first live color telecasts from the moon's surface.

Apollo 12's planned landing site is within walking distance of the unmanned Surveyor 3 spacecraft which landed 150 feet down the slope of a lunar crater 2-1/2 years ago. Conrad and Bean hope to ease down the 15-degree slope, snipoff pieces of the Surveyor and return them to earth so engineers designing moon bases can learn how materials wear on the moon.

Altogether, the two astronauts plan two moon walks lasting 3-1/2 hours each during a 31-1/2 hour stint on the moon's surface.

Five major goals have geen assigned to the Apollo 12 astronauts, including:

-Bringing back photographs and lunar material.

-Deploying six scientific experiments on the lunar surface, including a sophisticated seismic station to listen for possible moonquakes, volcanic action or meteors impacting; several instruments to measure atomic particles in the lunar "atmosphere, and a device to reveal if the moon has a magnetic field like earth.

-Developing techniques for a pinpoint-landing capability. If Conrad and Bean successfully land within several hundred feet of the Surveyor, they will have proven future astronauts can touch down in rugged, mountainous regions where volcanoes may have tossed lunar material onto the surface which originated deep in the moon's interior. This would give scientists new insight into how the moon was born.

-Develop man's first close-up photograph of three landing sites being considered for future missions, including the shallow crater Fra Mauro where the Apollo 13 astronauts hope to touch down next March.

THE THREE ASTRONAUTS took the mile long ride from their living quarters at Cape Kennedy to their Saturn rocket early this morning, as they prepared to become this nation's second moon-landing team. They are slated to land on the moon early Wednesday morning. (NASA photo)

Get Out and Act!

There will be many moratorium type activities going on and around the UMass area today and tomorrow. Much work and many hours went into the planning of these events by concerned student activists.

Last October 15th, many people participated in the events scheduled for the moratorium of that date. The campus turned out for something that they considered worthwhile, and much was accomplished for peace.

For the next two days similar activities will be taking place to protest the war. With the organizers of these scheduled events, we, too, urge mass student participation.

Nixon has come out and said that the vast numbers of American people support his program in Vietnam, and he has called upon this so-called "silent majority" to show him the support that he so badly needs. Today and tomorrow, let's show him that he was wrong in his naive assessment of his following.

It is projected that by the end of November the casualty figures in Vietnam will be approaching the World War II mark of around 300,000. If for no other reason this would seem to be enough to participate. We all have a vested interest in the War. Think about it. Don't you personally know someone who has been adversely affected by the war. Get out now and participate so we can get out of the killing business.

The Referendum Vote

The voting is over and UMass students have decided that the Student Senate should not pay half of the transportation bill for those students travelling to Washington this weekend.

The matter involved concerned every undergraduate. It was probably the most talked about campus issue since class of '68 President Richard Wood tried unsuccessfully to spend $60,000 to hold senior week at Grossinger's in New York.

The Senate, in passing S-50 last week by one vote (37-36), erred by defeating a proposal calling for a referendum. The Senate was afraid to take the matter to the campus at large. This first mistake, attempting to bypass the students on such a controversial issue, turned a number of students against the proposal.

Overnight 4000 students signed petitions demanding a referendum. Hundreds of students, who have all along supported the Senate spending the money, signed the petitions calling for the campus-wide vote. They honestly felt that putting the question up to a vote was risky (as to the final outcome) but was definitely the right thing to do.

Those in the Senate who openly favored the "NO" position also "blew their cool" in publicizing the referendum. They attempted to alter the nature of the debate over the referendum. Instead of discussing the question of whether or not the Senate should spend SATF money to pay for the transportation of students to the Washington march, they spoke of the morality of the war. They attempted to persuade the campus that a "YES" vote on the referendum (not allowing the money to be spent) meant that the person was pro-war in Vietnam, and a "NO" vote meant anti-war.

One leaflet read in part: "Properly put, the question that you will be answering by your vote on Wednesday is not 'Do you approve of the appropriation', but 'Do you approve of our continued massive presence in Vietnam."

One of the newspaper ads read: "Do you believe that our involvement in Vietnam should be terminated forthwith? If so....Vote your convictions. Vote NO on the referendum."

Using this tactic to cloud the issue was an insult to the intelligence of the average UMass student. Many students voted not anti-$10,000, but anti-Student Senate. If the Senate had debated the real issues of the referendum instead of trying to persuade the student body to vote "NO" to end the war, the results of the referendum may have been different.

Men's Room. A Better Local???

To the editor:

We read with some interest Mr. Packer's message in the Nov. 5 issue and would like to express a few views of our own on it. Once past his dramatic opening, one begins to be assaulted by some rather questionable "facts." He speaks of this war as being the first one in which the U.S. has not come out on top. May we call his attention to Korea, where the UN (principally U.S. represented) is still negotiating. He blasts Nixon for appealing to emotions and using over simplifications, then uses the same techniques for his own purposes. If the former is an example of the "same shit" which he speaks of as being forced down his throat, then surely this entire article is only a regurgitation of a slightly different type, since he makes no apparent effort to rise above the level of that which he attacks. One wonders if the "editorial staff" below his name refers to the MDC, since the style is reminiscent of "Mother of Voices," while the intellectual content approaches (from below) that of the "Record American."

He speaks of Nixon as being naive, believing as he does about Communism. Surely events in Hungary Czechoslovakia and other countries indicate who is the naive one here. It is patently obvious that Mr. Packer does not care for the President. I think we could assume that he voted against him (or at least not for him) if he voted at all. But Tricky Dick won that election despite your hate, didn't he?

It is possible that Nixon uses Spiro to establish his image as a middle of the roader and to loose some verbal diarrhea on certain elements. Is the MDC making use of a similar ploy, with Mr. Packer as the scapegoat?

The "Collegian" has run a number of editorial statements of this type so far this year and we feel that somehow the paper could find something better thought out and written to print, leaving this type of tirade to be promulgated in some location better suited to its content and style. How about a stall in the livestock labs or a Bartlett men's room?

A Little More Respect

To the editor:

We were appalled at this display of crude name calling and total lack of taste of the part of someone who purports to be an intelligent college student. No matter what your views on President Nixon's foreign policy, Mr. Packer, you at least owe him the courtesy to speak of him in a civil manner, for the simple reason that he is a human being just as you are. And the fact that Mr. Nixon is our elected President demands even more respect on our part. Your criticism would have been more effective if you had not tried to sensationalize it with crude language. Are you trying to disguise poorly thought out views? When you are ready to present your opinions as such, and validate them, we will listen to what you have to say.

Banal Drivel?

To the editor:

If Doug Packer's "W.A.S.P. Down Our Throats" was written for therapeutic reasons, then perhaps it makes sense. If no other avenues are available for Mr. Packer's infantile expressions, then by all means fill the pages of the Collegian with his banal drivel. If, however, it was written as serious comment, as a hope for converting fence-sitters, as a shot in the arm to the peace movement, as a POSITIVE aid in the efforts to get the U.S. out of Vietnam; then Mr. Packer is sadly misguided.

His article serves only to reinforce the spirit of the "Silent Majority," while embarrassing those who are seriously dedicated to the peace movement. It takes an extremely static and smug self-concept of one's own purity to so assuredly assault that of another. One wonders whether Mr. Packer's anatomical analogy concerning the President followed introspection.

America - Love It or Leave It?

To the editor:

I wish to thank the silent majority of my fellow students, (all 2,314 truly representative students out of a body of close to 18,000) who turned out in support of the ancient tradition of this school in refusing to allow student funds to be allocated for "political pressure groups."

In the first place the question of Vietnam, and when and how peace is achieved is a purely political argument. There are no moral issues at stake, and the personal lives of young men at this university and all over the globe are not affected by the outcome of our political decisions.

Even if it can be proved that there are humanitarian goals involved in the march, we should not be forced to pay 70¢ each to finance these "private beliefs." The best position for the university to take in times like these is the same one exposed by Whitmore and John Lederle - straddled across the fence.

To speak out publicly against an administration which attempts to placate the nation with lies, and foist upon us the slogans, "WAR IS PEACE" and "OBEDIENCE TO THE LAW IS FREEDOM," is a matter of individual conscience and an individual who takes a stance in opposition to the administration in support of the true meaning of peace should not expect to be supported by his fellow student, particularly when the 10,000 dollars can be better spent on the more important social events of the college such as Winter Carni, Homecoming, dances, class trips, etc.

This university should continue to resist future attempts to take political or moral stands or to expose humanitarian goals. Instead we should concentrate on the main purpose of education at UMass which is to turn out the greatest number of qualified teachers, engineers, nurses, technicians, etc., who will merge with the silent majority when they graduate, by refusing to take their own political and moral stands, and instead adopting the conscience of those in power. However the great social atmosphere UMass provides should be more than an adequate background for the partying and drinking, and socializing in later suburban life.

I wish to personally dedicate this letter to you my fellow student, to Nixon and to Agnew, and to all those owners of bumper stickers, entitled, "America - Love it or Leave It" who are helping me to make my choice.

Right of Dissent: Not Universal

To the editor:

On the eve of the November effort to stop the war I want to implore you to participate, in your own way, in the peaceful effort to stop the insanity which is forced on this hapless nation. As a member of the military I am denied the right of dissent, but you have that right. Speak up, we will hear you. The people of Vietnam welcome your efforts as well.

Horace is a Very "Punny" Person

Horace turns people off. He says the corniest things. The most polite reaction he gains from people is a groan.

Last Friday is an example. Horace met a neighbor who was suffering from an aching finger.

"See how swollen it is," he sighed.

Horace looked and said, "Oh yea, you can tell it was Mattel, it's swell."

The neighbor promptly departed, saying that he had "suffered enough for one day."

Or take last Saturday night's dance. Horace tried to charm his way into the heart of an attractive librarian. "How long have you been a librarian," he asked.

"Ten years," she replied.

"Gee," Horace perked, "you must know your business like a book."

"I think the dance is over now," the girl abruptly remarked.

Or take last Sunday's National Guard meeting. While preparing for an inspection of the barracks, Horace's sergeant told him to get some wax and to place it on his (the sergeant's) bed.

"Would you prefer blondes or brunettes," Horace asked.

"That'll be two weeks extra duty," the sergeant snapped.

And so it goes with Horace. Yet he persists in coming up with puns regularly in conversation. He is a dedicated punster.

He even spends part of his spare time practicing the art of making up puns. He thinks and reads about various topics or creates his own life-like situations and then dreams up a punch line that contains a pun.

Take, for example, the topic of teenagers preferences in modern music. He'll think about it and conclude with something like, the great taste that sounds terrible.

Or take the topic of speech. He'll read in a speech textbook something like this: "The breath stream is the path of speech. Good projection of speech requires properly spaced breathing and effective use of the diaphragm." And conclude: Speech is a gut course.

Or take the life-like situation of two college students seated together. One of them feels sad because he has just switched his major from business to history and is doubtful about whether or not he made the right move.

Trying to cheer him up his friend says, "Look Jack, anyway you look at it you'll still have your degree."

Jack replies, "Yea, but how would you feel if you just went out of business."

Why is Horace such a persistant punster? And why does he practice such an art in his spare time?

At a social gathering recently, one of Horace's neighbors finally asked him this question.

"Because it's fun," Horace enthused.

"But," his neighbor interjected, "is it fun when all you seem to get are moans and groans from everyone?"

Horace replied: "No, that part of it isn't fun at all. But I guess that's the price I pay for enjoying my pun-ishing sense of humor."

Peace Corps Extends Unique Program

The officials of the Peace Corps and the State University of New York College at Brockport announced completion of arrangements for continuing and extending the unique Peace Corps/College Degree Program to admit a fourth group of candidates in June, 1970. The members of the first contingent completing the fifteen-month program which combines the upper division undergraduate education with Peace Corps preparation are now serving on bi-national educational development teams in the Dominican Republic; the second group is now serving in similar assignments in Peru and Honduras; the third group is now in the academic year phase of this joint project and is slated for overseas assignment in Latin America in August, 1970.

The candidates will be selected from the ranks of students in good standing at an accredited college who are completing their sophomore or junior year by June 1970. Those selected will be able to earn an A.B. or B.S. degree and be eligible for a Peace Corps assignment in one academic year flanked by two summers of fully subsidized and integrated academic courses and Peace Corps training. They are expected to major in mathematics or the sciences; those who have completed their junior year prior to entrance into the program have the opportunity for a double-major.

At the end of the second summer armed with the degree, a teaching license, in-depth cross cultural preparation and fluency in Spanish the graduates as Peace Corps Volunteers will be off on their Latin American assignment. As members of the staffs of teacher training institutions and/or consultants to secondary teachers of mathematics or science, they are important participants in the educational development efforts of their host countries. During their two year sojourn they have the opportunity to earn up to twelve semester hours graduate credit.

Peace Corps and college officials pointed out the several features which make this joint program unique including: academic credit for Peace Corps training, two fully subsidized summer sessions totalling thirty semester credit hours.

Turn Me On, Dead Man

Paul McCartney is dead! Or is he? Believers of the demise of the famous Beatle have offered clues as evidence to support their gloomy theory. And yet, the whole thing seems ridiculous. How could such a famous musician die without the rest of the world having so much as an inkling of his death? This furor has revived the mass hysteria of 1964 when "Beatlemania" demonstrated the fantastic hold four young Englishmen have on the youth of today.

The Beatles' entrance upon the music scene has, from the start, been marked with glib scorching comments as part of the devil-may-care attitude they profess. An immediate influence on music, hair-dos and fashions; the mop-tops have had a less obvious influence on the subjects of drugs, living patterns, and Indian philosophy. Their every move, whether marriage for Ringo, George or Paul; or the production of home movies by John, has made the front pages of every newspaper on three continents.

Asked for opinions on virtually every subject, they usually had answers . . . sometimes in less than polite terms.

Their most famous was John Lennon's statement that they were more famous than Jesus Christ. Radio stations immediately banned Beatle records as everyone from Archbishops to housewives denounced the blasphemy. The fact was that Mr. Lennon was not claiming to be better than the Christian Messiah but that the means of communication and numbers of people spread notoriety. Because a Beatle had made the statement, however, the world had sat up and taken notice.

The world again stirred when hints at the best looking Beatle's death began cropping up. On two of their album covers, for example, a hand is held over his head which is the Greek symbol for death. A left-handed guitar on a grave is prominant on one of those two albums, as is an arm patch with the lettering O.P.D. (a hospital term for officially pronounced dead). On three of the latest albums, Mr. McCartney is pictured differently than the other three Beatles; a contrasting flower, an out-of-step stride, and a back-to-the-camera pose.

Besides these visual clues, lyrics of songs on the albums point to Paul as a dead man. "The walrus was Paul" sings John on one tune. Walrus is a Greek term for corpse. "I buried Paul" moans a voice at the end of one song. "Turn me on dead man" repeats mechanically if one of the songs is played backwards. Mouthed under the end of one song is the passage on untimely death from "King Lear".

These clues are among hundreds that were discovered by Beatle fans all over the country. While feminine fans were in a frenzy, their cooler male counterparts scorned the theory as they scoured their albums for new information. Radio stations, newspapers and television sorted fact from fancy and embrolled themselves in the conflict. The world was again captured by Beatlemania.

"Whether or not he is dead is not the issue," said one fan, "the issue is: why are the Beatles putting in all these horrible hints in their albums?"

Neither are these "horrible hints" of McCartney's death the issue either, but the very fact of its impact is tribute to the hypnotic hold the Beatles have over their followers.

Mystery Surrounds Players On Wyoming Football Squad

(AP) - When black players were dismissed from the Wyoming football squad last month, all of them had books containing the Cowboys' plays.

Only one of these has been returned to Coach Lloyd Eaton. What has happened to the others is a mystery.

Eaton confirmed this Thursday. The Wyoming coach also said that although 14 students are named in a suit filed in U.S. District Court at Cheyenne, only 13 football players were dropped from the squad.

"The only book turned back to us was by Ted Williams, a tailback," Eaton said. "What has happened to the others I have no idea."

He said he has heard a rumor that one or more of the play books found their way into the hands of Wyoming opponents. He added as far as any knowledge he has, this is strictly a rumor.

The players, including six starters, were dropped from the Wyoming squad on Oct. 17, the day before Wyoming's Western Athletic conference game with Brigham Young.

The gridders had worn black arm bands on their street clothing when they visited the athletic office. They said they wore the bands as part of a protest against race policies of the Latter-day Saints Mormon Church, which operates Brigham Young.

Wyoming beat Brigham Young easily 40-7 with an all-white lineup, then defeated San Jose, Calif., State the next Saturday 16-7.

But the Cowboys took a 30-14 thumping from Arizona State University on Nov. 1 for only their second conference defeat since 1965. A week later they lost to Utah.

New Breed of Conservationists Become Militant

To the lexicon of militancy - black militants, campus militants, militant new leftists - add "militant conservationists."

They're a new breed, who could be symbolized by the woman who tied herself to a tree to prevent the city from cutting it down. They're a growing breed too, feeding on the new public awareness that man and technology are combining to destroy the environment.

While creeping suburbia laps up green belts, land developers plunder the wilderness, industries pollute rivers and streams and, everything from autos to airplanes pollutes the air, the new breed taken on a new aggressiveness in demanding priority for its cause.

The epitome of the militant conservationist is David Brower.

At 21, Brower joined the Sierra Club and for 15 years was its executive director.

POWERFUL LOBBY

Few will dispute the fact that he is the man who made the Sierra Club. Under his direction, the club grew more than 1000 per cent and changed from a posy picker's hiking society into a powerful lobby for conservation.

When Brower took over as executive director in 1952, the membership of the Sierra Club was 7000, and the budget was $75,000. In 1969, the membership was around 70,000 and the budget nearly $3 million.

More than that, the list of battles fought and won became prodigious - among them fights to save the redwoods, the Grand Canyon, the Everglades and numerous parks and wilderness bills pushed through Congress.

But in May of this year, Brower was forced to resign from the club, after losing a vote of confidence in a nationwide club election for board of directors.

The fight to oust Brower was messy. There were charges and counter-charges, including one that Brower misappropriated funds by placing a $10,000 ad in The New York Times without the approval of the board.

PHILOSOPHIC SCHISM

Not the least of the issues was a philosophic schism within the club between militants and moderates.

To the moderates, the Sierra Club had enough problems in its own country, without expanding beyond the borders. And those problems could best be attacked with gentle persuasion, i.e., take an industrialist to lunch rather than take him to court. Set priorities - don't fight every battle as a last-ditch stand. Avoid conservation for conservation's sake.

To the militants and Brower, this was heresy. "DDT knows no boundaries, neither does pollution," Brower is fond of saying to back up his contention that conservationists should go international. For Brower, the issue is "cirrhosis of the environment," and the disease can't be fought too strenuously. If enemies are made along the way, and Brower has made some powerful ones, it can't be helped. At one time or another Brower has taken on the Army Corps of Engineers, the Bureau of Reclamation, assorted congressmen and the Internal Revenue Service.

Brower is the complete crusader. He has the zeal of an evangelistic missionary, enormous intensity and total dedication.

Magazine articles have compared him to the Archangel Gabriel, the Biblical Gideon, Captain Marvel, Disraeli and the White Tornado.

For six months this year, Brower was a conservationist without a club. A few weeks ago, he announced the formation of two new organizations, the Friends of the Earth Society (FOE) and the John Muir Institute, both of which he will head.

The John Muir Institute will be a tax-exempt organization devoted to the study of ecology and conservation. Through it, Brower will again seek to publish the series of books which he started in the Sierra Club and which became a bone of contention since they cost about $1 million to publish and weren't financially profitable. Brower feels they're necessary to educate the public.

FOE will press the fight for conservation in the political area. It will not be tax exempt.

FOE will lobby in state capitals and Washington, create a task force on issues and try to make conservation a major issue in the '70 and '72 elections. A subsidiary, the League of Conservation Voters, will try to effect political campaigns in favor of candidates who are "right" on environmental issues.

"FILLING VACUUMS"

Brower wants to devote the John Muir Institute to "filling vacuums of information."

"No one is really studying the problem of conserving the wilderness. No one is looking for alternatives. No one knows what the patterns for a return to equilibrium should be."

Perhaps Brower, whatever his faults, will succeed in turning his goals into realities.

Certainly the man lives by his creed, which he takes from a couplet by Goethe:

Whatever you can do, or dream you can, begin it.

Boldness has genius, power and magic in it.

Sidney Kaplan, a UMass English professor, believes scholarly writers are highly concerned with criticism of their work.

In an interview with a COLLEGIAN book reviewer he said, "Writers want their scholarship to be meaningful and valid criticism of their work is highly important in assaying its success on meeting this criterion."

Professor Kaplan added that scholarly works should not necessarily be reviewed by other scholars, except in cases where the subject matter is a very specialized body of knowledge.

He has published many scholarly articles and edited several books on American history. His latest book was the subject of a recent COLLEGIAN review.

B'nai B'rith Supports Weekend Moratorium

Student leaders of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations this week endorsed the Nov. 13-15 Vietnam Moratorium and March on Washington as an affirmation of their "desire to expedite the end of the war."

The 23 students from campuses throughout North America, holding their first meeting as the National Hillel Student Consultative Committee, also called on local Hillel units at 240 American colleges to give consideration to "their individual involvement in local Moratorium observances."

The consultative committee was created this year to give students a greater voice in Hillel policy actions. Four of the group also serve as full voting members of the Hillel Foundations' national commission, the organization's highest policy board.

The committee also offered student assistance to Hillel's national headquarters for its cooperative program with other Washington-based Jewish organizations "to provide housing, religious services, kosher food and relevant programs" for Jewish students who will participate in the upcoming Moratorium observance.

The student commissioners are Daniel Friedman, Yale University; Byron Kohl, Northwestern University; Phyllis Levanthal, Stanford University; and Arnie Rachlis, University of Pennsylvania.

Other committee members are Roberta Fefferman, University of Minnesota; Leesa Freedman, Radcliffe College; Alan Gelfand, George Washington University; Daniel Goldman, University of Chicago, Jonathan Groner, Columbia University; Janet Heller, Oberlin College.

Also, Gary Jacobs, University of Texas; Martin Kanner, Brandeis University; Zoltan Kemeny, McGill University; Ted Knupp, Hunter College; Mark Okrent, University of Toronto; Howard Peskoe, Brown University.

And, Dina Rosenfeld, Brooklyn College; Louise Schonfeld, UCLA; Howard Schulman, University of Florida; David Sharon, University of Rochester; David Szonyi, Rutgers University; Janice Weber, George Washington University; Ronald Wolfson, Washington University, St. Louis.

FROM WOMEN'S LIBERATION:

A Projected Change

Since 51% of human beings are women, then by pure chance, in any given group of people, there should be roughly half and half men and women. I have looked at University of Massachusetts population statistics and found that there is an uneven balance. The percentage of women undergraduates is almost statistically normal - 43%; the percentage of women graduates drops drastically to only 22.5% however; and the percentage of women faculty at the university is a mere 13%! (There are only 4 women who are full professors and 158 men.) So it seems that as the professional rank increases, the number of women decreases drastically.

(Here's a field for women who want to really contribute to human understanding--the study of women's and men's physical, hormonal, chemical make-up, the differences and similarities. Women are different, not inferior!)

In this society the belief of women's inferiority has affected the economic system and caused women to remain dependent on men. Women are considered to be less intelligent, weaker, more emotional, etc. and therefore are discriminated against when seeking employment. Women get less money for the same job with the same experience!* They also are not allowed into certain fields (i.e. they are ridiculed and discouraged from entering them.)

In Women's Liberation we are beginning to examine the reasons why women drop out of education programs; why they feel inferior to men; why they defer to men in most situations requiring thinking; why they stop growing as human beings. The reasons seem to fall into three interconnected and overlapping categories: social pressures, economic oppression, and stereotyped biological roles.

These reasons (cultural values, morals, etc.) are given to women from early childhood through the socialization process. Remember how the girls were denied the right to get dirty?; to try their physical strength?; to be aggressive and active?? They were taught, in most cases, to be quiet and passive and "ladylike". As a result women grow up feeling they must be dependent on male approval for their own existence. All the games of making up and wearing "sexy clothing" are meant to attract men. Once this poor self-less woman gets her man she becomes in effect a servant or companion who must live her life according to her Man's occupation, decisions, etc.

It seems that this subordinate role for women has evolved because of the biological differences between the sexes. However, much of this role is pure myth--invented and kept up by men because the roleplaying builds their egos (at the expense of the women's). Some of the myths of women's biological role are that women should raise children because they bear them, that women are physically and mentally inferior to men, that women are emotionally unstable and illogical, etc. NONE of these so-called truths of life have ever been proven physiologically.

Look at these facts about UMass:
* "Women students, although presenting critical financial need and notably higher academic records then men, receive less financial aid from UMass."

There should be no reason why a woman cannot enter any field she desires!!! But of course there are reasons -- fear of ridicule, fear of not catching a man, fear of always being alone. But these reasons must be overcome and replaced by ones which include the happiness and well-being of every human being. I do not believe that women are actually happy being inferior and insubordinate!

Women have not been trying hard enough to overcome the old myths about inferiority, weakness, lack of logic. It is very comforable to let a man run one's life, isn't it? Very easy to get married, stay home, be supported, never learn to think, feel, experiment, grow.

We must stop these games!! Women ARE capable of changing themselves and society, and if they start the process of growth and change, the whole system will be affected. Women's Liberation is discussing and experimenting with alternatives to the present life styles and institutions. When an alternative is suggested we discuss how it affects the other parts of the system and how those can be changed.

It seems to me that change is in two parts: giving up old habits, and trying on new behaviors and attitudes. Old habits are ones which are no longer conducive to growth (in fact they probably are preventing it,) This could mean refusing to conform to the beauty standard in fashion and make-up or more important, refusing to conform to mother's and girl friends' ideas about marriage and pinning etc.

The other part of changing ourselves and society is trying on new behaviors. It's amazing how afraid women (and men) are to experiment with new life styles -- or even to change one little thing in their lives. Examples of new experiences might be things like physical strength, exertion, power (how strong are you really? I never thought I could paddle twenty miles straight in a canoe, but I did.); new learning experiences like a difficult course or major that usually men only take, or like reading some really good books instead of just novels; and control of your own body regardless of society's disapproval (the pill, abortions, knowledge about one's own physical make-up).

Women do not have to be directed or hearded into certain roles. They let themselves be led.

Why not step out of line?????

"Harrowing" Side Effect Often Overlooked

NEW YORK (WMNS) - In evaluating various methods of contraception, the most frequently overlooked "side effect" may well be an unwanted pregnancy.

A Boston gynecologist, Dr. Robert Kistner, points out that only the combination-type of birth control pill is virtually completely effective. A population expert, Lawrence Lader, warns that every method but the combination pill carries with it "the constant and harrowing possibility of contraceptive failure."

A survey made for Mccall's magazine reveals that six out of 10 women carrying unwanted babies had been using some form of birth control at the time of conception. Although human error accounted for some of these pregnancies, the contraceptive itself was apparently at fault at least a third of the time.

Lader estimates that perhaps two out of every five conceptions are unintended and quotes studies showing that one out of every five couples has an unwanted child.

facts not fallacies

in a new book, "THE PILL: FACTS AND FALLACIES ABOUT TODAY'S ORAL CONTRACEPTIVES," Dr. Kistner reports that if 100 women take a combination pill (containing both estrogen and progestin), virtually none will become pregnant. But if 100 women faithfully use a diaphragm, 12 will find themselves unexpectedly expecting within a year, and, if foam or jelly is used alone, 20 will suffer the same fate. If those same 100 women rely on rhythm 24 will become pregnant within 12 months. With condoms, 14 pregnancies will result.

These facts must be taken into account, Dr. Kistner believes. Not only because unwanted preganncies are undesirable, but because the very state of pregnancy can be life-threatening. Deaths during pregnancy from all causes are 22.8 per 100,000 in the 20 to 34 year age group and 57.6 per 100,000 women between ages 35-44, he points out.

TO ERR IS HUMAN

"In actual practice, of course, the gynecologist cautions, the effectiveness of a contraceptive depends upon the patients as well as the method. Some women forget to take the Pill, some do not tolerate the heavier periods with an intrauterine device, some dislike the untidiness of a diaphragm and jelly, and some object to the diminished sensation associated with the condom."

Lader's survey confirms the observation that contraception is highly individualistic and subject to human vagaries. Over one third of the women questioned admitted they were using no birth control method at the time of their last, unwanted conception - a conception so unwanted that the women were requesting abortions. Some believed it was the "safe" time of the month, some were "too emotionally aroused" and some were merely lazy and careless.

Fine Arts Council Sponsors Dance Co.

Long before (ten years to be exact) multi-media became the dominant trend in theatre productions, the Alwin Nikolais Dance Theater Company was successfully performing dances which inventively integrated modern technology and movement.

The company will be in residence at UMass Amherst, Nov. 18 through 20 under the auspices of the UMass Fine Arts Council. Their constant exploration of total theater has resulted in a dazzling compound of electronic sound, complex lighting and movement. It could be said of some of the Nikolais' productions that they are the best light and sound show around.

However, it's that and much more, and audiences in Berlin, London and New York have been overwhelmed by them. In fact, the austere London Times devoted an editorial of praise to the company.

Mr. Nikolais' dancers don't move in obvious "dance-like" fashion as they are mainly interested in the abstract qualities of the body, foremost among them being design. One marvels at the sheer variety of patterns and designs that result from the exact computer response of the dancers to the various media making up the production; some of them are awesome and others absurdly hilarious.

There is a timeless quality about the work of the Alwin Nikolais Company. Yet, in its abstractness, its work beautifully captures the absurd "now" of our everyday lives.

Perhaps the Alwin Nikolais Company isn't doing what some people feel that "dancers" should be doing, but no one can question that it is total theater at its best.

Student tickets are priced at $1. Teachers of dance and other teachers are being offered tickets at $2 and the general public at $3. Reserved tickets are available now through the Fine Arts Council, UMass, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202.

UMass Accepts Madrid Applications

The University has begun accepting applications for its 1970 Madrid Summer Seminar.

The summer seminar will run from June 18 to August 13, operating from the International Institute in Madrid. All courses will be taught in Spanish.

The program offers six credits, either two seminars or a course and a seminar for graduate students, and two courses for undergraduates. The program is open to undergraduates in their last year only, except by special recommendation.

A lecture series on Spanish music, the theater of the absurd and other course-related topics, intergrated weekend trips to such centers as Avila, Salamanca, Segovia and Cuencia, and an optional ten-day port-study tour of Andalucia are featured aspects of the program.

The fee of $875 ($905 for non-residents of Massachusetts) includes room and board in private Spanish homes, round-trip air fare tuition, and various trips, lectures and social functions. The fee doesn't include living expenses after August 2--students may either make arrangements for independent travel or join the post-study tour of Andalucia cost approximately $100.

Deadline for applications is February 1, 1970. Further information may be obtained from Professor Blanche DePuy, Madrid Summer Seminar, Spanish Office, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

SWAP Conference

Trustees and Students "Come Together"

Many hopes are being pinned on this year's SWAP conference. Students, faculty, administrators, and trustees are no doubt spending these last few days before the workshop studying their respective positions on such critical issues as social regulations (dorm autonomy, alcoholic beverages, curfews, etc.), and the academic policy (core curriculum, inter-departmental programs, grading, advising, etc.), and the structure of the decision making process (government) at UMass.

The hopes are mainly that a reasonable and understanding atmosphere will surround the discussions. This means that all alternatives to any problem are seriously and intelligently entertained. It is pretty safe to assume that emotions will play some part in the proceedings, as the issues are important to all, but overemphasis here could stifle an excellent opportunity to make a serious start toward resolving basic differences. In other words, a shouting contest will only prove who can make more noise. In the long run, our money is on the trustees.

It appears that up until now, little personal contact has been made between most trustees and administrators and students. A quick survey of the current rumors, accusations, and denials winging around the campus demonstrates this.

A basic reason that these charges and counter-charges aren't being brought to the surface and debated is the undeniable lack of faith or trust between the different sectors of the campus community. Some of this could probably be justified. But through a lack of communication in the past, an ignorant silence has been allowed to exist where intelligent dialogue should have been. This silence, aided by quotes taken completely out of context, has brought the present serious "confrontation" about.

This situation has been growing for a long time and covers many issues. The credability gap has only helped to shunt meaningful discussions. A quick solution cannot be expected immediately.

The SWAP conference could be a meaingful and productive start. What it could do is almost staggering.

UMass to Sponsor Course In Automatic Assembly

UMass is offering a five day course in automatic assembly, bringing together leaders in the field from both England and America at the Howard Johnson Motor Lodge, Route 9, Hadley, Nov. 17 through 21.

The principles and techniques of automatic assembly have been developed into a new five day course by three professors who have done considerable research and published numerous papers on this subject.

Dr. Geoffrey Boothroyd of the UMass department of mechanical and aerospace engineering is an authority in the fields of metal processing and automatic assembly, and has been involved in research in these subjects in both England and the U.S.

Dr. T.O. Prenting of Marist College, New York, was director of the advanced assembly methods program at the Research Institute of the Illinois Institute of Technology. Dr. A.H. Redford of the University of Salford, England, is visiting UMass this year and thus is available for participation in this course. Dr. Redford has done considerable research in vibratory feeding devices and assembly problems.

The program will deal with the principles involved in the design, performance, and economics of such equipment as transfer systems, feeding devices, and assembly mechanisms, and provides an opportunity for consultation with experts in the area of automatic assembly.

The course is a project of the Massachusetts Technical Services Program, administered by COMTECH, the Commonwealth Technical Resource Service at the University of Massachusetts.

Further information is available from Dr. Boothroyd, Department of Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts, 01002, tel. 545-1660.

An Interesting Proposition

The Proposition, the country's youngest satirical revue and only musical improvisational show, will appear at UMass in Amherst in the Student Union Ballroom today at 8 p.m.

In their improvisations, the young performers take a phrase, a location, or a situation suggested by the audience, and turn it into a five-minute drama, a mini-opera, a Streisand ballad, or an Irish drinking song. The revue is satirical, and its aim is to strike at the foibles of middle-class, middle-brow America.

The company is composed of college students or graduates who are regulars on Dave Garroway's Tempo Boston (WNAC) and Boston's FM rock station, WBCN.

Tickets for the Proposition's performance, sponsored by the Student Union Program Council, are available at the Student Union Ticket Office.

New Head Appointed To Sociology Department

T. O. WILKINSON

Dr. Thomas O. Wilkinson has been named head of the UMass department of sociology, it has been announced by Dr. Seymour Shapiro, acting dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

A UMass faculty member since 1953, Dr. Wilkinson has served as associate head and acting head of the sociology department. As department head, he succeeds Dr. Everett S. Lee, who will remain in the department to teach and do research.

A native of Macon, Ga., Prof. Wilkinson is a graduate of the University of North Carolina. He received his M.A. from Duke University in 1950, and his Ph.D from Columbia University in 1957.

Jobs for Social Change Organizes

Jobs Toward Social Change is a clearinghouse for information on alternative kinds of occupations, from work in vocational areas outside of established institutions to work with mentally retarded children in state hospitals.

Handling the average weekly load of ten inquiries at the Southwest office is Miss Anna Singletary. "What I'd like to see is a place where anyone can get information about working with or for people, or working toward institutional change, whether it be a summer-type project or a fulltime job," said Miss Singletary who is a full time worker for the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council. At this point, she said, most of the information the office has is on volunteer work and low-paying jobs within established institutions such as the YMCA, Vista and various community action groups.

Jobs Toward Social Change was started last year under auspices of the Southwest Assembly. "The vocational counseling is one of the counseling services Southwest has set up for its residents as part of the total residential college program," Miss Singletary said. At the end of last semester, the King Council decided to help the Southwest Assembly in starting up the project by paying the salary of the office worker. It is not directly affiliated with any of the University counseling or placement services.

Jobs For Social Change is located in the lobby of George Washington tower in Southwest and is open Tuesday and Wednesday evening from 6:30 to 8:30.

Little Redmen Tangle with Little Wildcats This Afternoon

Frosh Gridders Seek To End Year with Win

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

Injury riddled and coming off two straight losses, the UMass frosh football team will attempt to conclude their season with a win against the University of New Hampshire freshmen this afternoon at Alumni Stadium. Kickoff is 1:30.

The game is very important to both teams; UMass' record is 2-2 while New Hampshire is 2-3. A win for the Little Redmen will give coach Dave Kelley another winning year, but the Little Wildcats would very much like to even their season's record and give first year coach Jim Goodfellow a successful maiden season.

Kelley attributes his team's losses to breakdowns on assignments, inconsistent play by the offensive line, penalties and an inability to capitalize on scoring opportunities. This point is highlighted by last week's loss to Connecticut when the Little Redmen had 71 offensive plays while UConn had only 49. UMass receivers dropped 7 passes, three of which were scoring opportunities, while they had 140 yards in penalties.

A close knit group, the frosh have pleased Kelley with their aggressive play, all-around ability and versatility, but most importantly a never say die attitude.

Even though the frosh are 2-2, they have given 100 per cent for every minute of every game this season.

Brian Murray will start at quarterback this weekend while Len Matuza moves over to defensive safety. Kelley hopes to play everyone this week, giving him the chance to note the progress individuals have made since the beginning of the year.

Kelley's game plan will be to run the ball, run the ball and run the ball right at and through New Hampshire. Noting the team's attitude this week, it is an obvious sign that the Little Redmen really want this one.

HOW LONG CAN HE BEAR THAT GRIN? - This grinning URI freshman(33) is being chased down by two Little Redmen, Dave Flynn(86) and John Sperandio(55). The UMass frosh host New Hampshire today at 1:30. (MDC photo by Bob Christmann)

Boilermakers-'Spoilermakers' Challenge OSU

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) - Another opportunity to upset a top-ranked team pops up Saturday for Purdue when the "Spoiler - makers" of college football take on No. 1 Ohio State.

Although 10th ranked and 7-1, Purdue goes into the nationally-televised ABC Big Ten show - down a 17-point underdog against the Buckeyes, who are on 21-game overall and 16-game league winning streaks.

Purdue has been cast in this role before and seems to reach unexpected heights in such situations.

The Boilermakers have knocked off eight No. 1 teams since 1950 and are gunning for their fourth top-ranked victim in the last five years. Purdue stunned No. 1 Notre Dame in 1965, 1967 and 1968.

The Ohio State winning streak is another target of the Boilermakers. They stopped Notre Dame's 39-game string in 1950, Michigan's State's 28 straight triumphs in 1953 and Notre Dame's 13-gamer in 1954.

Ironically, Purdue came to Ohio Stadium as No. 1 after whipping Notre Dame last year. The Buckeyes scored a 13-0 victory and went on to the Big Ten and national titles and the Rose Bowl.

Another crowd of 86,000 giving Ohio State the college attendance title for the 12th straight year, will see a battle among three Heisman Trophy candidates. Purdue quarterback Mike Phipps, now with 5,462 yards in 26 games, needs 243 yards to move into fifth spot on the NCAA all-time career yardage list.

Redmen Battle UNH Away Tomorrow

UMass Aims for Clean 5-0 Yankee Conference State

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Sports
VOLUME XCVIII, ISSUE 48
FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1969

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Assistant Sports Editor

With hopes of putting the lid onto a perfect 5-0 Yankee Conference season, the UMass football team travels to Durham, New Hampshire for a Saturday afternoon tussle with the UNH Wildcats starting at 1:30.

The Redmen presently own a 4-0 Conference mark and are 5-2 overall. They already reign as Conference champions after having dumped Vermont, 48-7, two weeks ago. A win over New Hampshire will make UMass' possession of the Beanpot more complete and more satisfying.

Coming off of a week layoff due to the cancellation of the Holy Cross game, questions have been raised concering a letdown on behalf of the Redmen. Head coach Vic Fusia quells all doubts with one distinct statement. "We haven't let up since late August."

In support of his team he points out that "as far as the mental aspect of the game (is concerned) if it is a good football team, as its record proves of the moment, they'll approach it as a big game.. Good football teams are always ready."

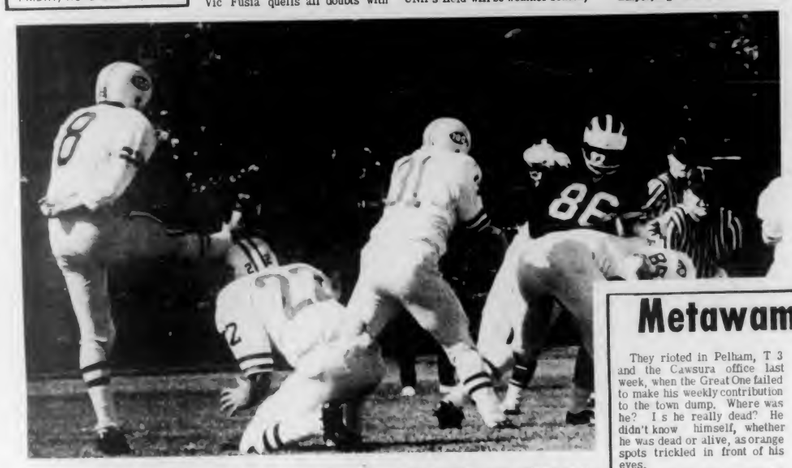
In spite of the crazy weather of the past several days, the Redmen have been able to log valuable practice time. Aware of the fact that UNH's field will be weather beaten, UMass practice sessions have been held on the worst possible playing areas that the coaches could find.

The Redmen will not only have to cope with a poor playing field, but they must also cope with a deceptively good New Hampshire squad. The Wildcats are physically ready for the first time since they beat UConn, 14-6, several weeks ago. They are entering their last game with a 3-4 record and, as coach Fusia warns, "This could make their season."

Employing the same starting lineup that has brought them four straight victories, the invaders will be led by the senior quarterbacking duo of Ken Hughes and Tim Adams. Hughes will start but both will see plenty of action in keeping with the plan that has met with so much success recently.

The UMass injury situation, in striking contrast to last year, continues to look favorable for Fusia's forces. With a tone of thanks he can report that, "We should be in good physical shape." A crisp, hard-hitting game is the promise of the afternoon.

SIDELINE SCRIBBLES - Redmen placekicker Dennis Gagnon, whose extra point string of 18 straight was snapped by Vermont, will attempt to start a new one against the Wildcats. . .Mike Shaughnessy, a UNH fullback, is the only New Hampshire player of major status who will not see action. . .Metawampe, during a moment of peace from the tensions that have beset him, wanted to thank Jim Trelease, staff artist of the Springfield Daily News, for including his name among the other notables whose names were very niftily caricatured on the cover of the UMass-Vermont football program.



TO START FROM SCRATCH - UMass placekicker Dennis Gagnon(9) must embark on a new extra point string against UNH after his streak of 18 straight was broken by Vermont. Other Redmen in on this action (against Maine) are Jerry Grasso(22), Ed Sarno (31) and John Hulecki(85). (MDC photo by Ken Stevens)

As he wrote this, he still was recovering from personal attacks, donnybrooks, and was seriously considering joining the Student Senate so that he could draw up petitions against peace. O, the filth and slander he has endured the past week.

And to make matters worse he spent half his week looking for a doctor willing to treat the mysterious illness of the redoutably Sleazy Al.

He has fought executives, editors, deans, turkeys, fascists, incompetents, Afghanistanians, monkees and gypsy women, for all his waking days. And even though he has come out of the woodwork for this brief appearance, he really does not know how long he can continue. After all, a guy can puke just so much and not have anyone clean it up for him.

Soccer Redmen Battle UNH, Too!

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Staff Reporter

Coming off one of their biggest wins of the season, the UMass varsity soccer team will be trying to finish with a winning record as they travel to the University of New Hampshire this Saturday for their season finale. The Redmen now have a 5-4 record and would like to finish above .500.

Coach Peter Broaca was obviously elated over his club's 6-2 drubbing of the Coast Guard Academy but he was especially "pleased with the offense." "After all," Broaca continued, "it was the most goals scored against them all season."

He also felt that the defense did a good job considering that Coast Guard's second goal came at the end of the game when the outcome was no longer in doubt.

However, the Redmen may have it a little tougher this weekend as they go against a UNH club which is especially strong on defense. They have defeated BU, 3-1, Bowdoin, 1-0, and Maine, 1-0. Maine, incidently, has already defeated UMass this season. UNH carries a deceiving 6-5 record into the contest and Broaca expects a tough game.

Adding to the difficulties, Co-Captain Dick Meyer will be out of action due to a reinjured knee. Also missing from the UMass lineup will be wing Larry DeFelice.

Besides Meyer, who will not see any action, two other seniors will be finishing out their varsity soccer careers on Saturday. Goalie Tom Maline and full back John Mercury will both be trying to make their last effort for the Redman squad a winning one.

Bobby Hull Returns

CHICAGO (AP) - Superstar Bobby Hull rejoined the Chicago Black Hawks Thursday as his contract squabble with the National Hockey League club was settled.

Settlement of the dispute which caused the NHL goal-scoring champion to miss the first 12 Hawk games was announced at a news conference attended by Hull and Tommy Ivan, club general manager.

Hull, who scored a record 58 goals last season when the Hawks finished last in the NHL East Division, had been publicly reprimanded by Ivan Tuesday for airing his stand in the news media.

Hull issued a statement in which he said, "I have abondoned my desire to retire from organized hockey and I wish to rejoin the Chicago Black Hawk team as a player in good standing."

Hull is expected to practice with the Hawks Friday but Ivan said it was unlikely that Bobby would be in shape to play Saturday against Oakland and Sunday against Montreal.

Hull said: "My wish is that the whole episode will soon be forgotten and I pledge my utmost efforts to helping our club to a playoff berth and winning the Stanley Cup for Chicago.

"I still have a four-year player contract with the Black Hawks which has three years to run," Hull said. "There never has been any dispute between the club and me as to my players contract."

Hull's holdout since the Hawks began practice in September centered on his complaint that the Hawks failed to satisfy financial agreements he claimed were made beyond the contract provisions when he signed the four year pact prior to the 1968-69 season.

MORATORIUM A.C.

Threats of Violence Cancels Ware March

Prof. Dottie Abreson read poetry at last Friday's candlelight service and rally on the Amherst Commons.

By Richard Lane
Senior Reporter

A special Moratorium candlelight march and service planned for the town of Ware Friday night was cancelled due to threats of violence from some of the community's citizens.

While participating in another candlelight service at the Amherst Common earlier in the evening, a Moratorium crowd of over 200 was told by one spokesman that continued anonymous phone calls threatening the use of "chains", "rocks", etc., on any war protestors who came to town forced cancellation of the Ware activities.

MLK leader Gil Salk stated that some of the threats came from members of the American Legion and VFW (Veterans of Foreign Wars) "operating independently of their organizations."

Salk said that the threats included the use of BB guns, rifles, rocks, chains, and that Ware merchants reported the town's supply of eggs had been "sold out."

The MLK spokesman and other November Moratorium leaders had thus concluded that "almost definitely there would be an atmosphere of violence," and that the only way to stop it would have been by "a massive show of violence," on the part of the police. It was also felt that this violence would "divide the Town of Ware" and Salk did not want to do this.

In addition to the closing of all package stores and bars at 4:00 p.m. on Friday afternoon and urging all citizens to "stay at home", Ware police officials had called out 50 part time officers to help maintain order according to Salk.

"He (Ware police chief) was not willing to call in the state police, however," Salk continued. And it was felt that these would be the only forces strong enough to deal with possible violence.

Although feeling "not too surprised, really,"(about the whole incident) Salk did say he felt "disappointed in the townspeople of Ware for not rallying to protect free speech in a free society."

He did add, however, that two of the town's three selectmen and the police chief among others were "very interested" in setting up public panel discussions and dialogues on the war in the future.

300 Gather on Amherst Commmons

By JOHN STAVROS
Tuesday Issue Editor

A solemn procession of 300 candle bearing citizens encompassed a section of the Amherst Common Friday in observance of the Moratorium against the war in Vietnam.

The assembly, termed by the Moratorium Day Committee as a memorial service, heard the names of the servicemen who had been killed in Vietnam read by several participants in the service. As the names were read, the majority of the persons attending filed slowly and silently around the sidewalk of the green.

The service, held in an icy mist, took on a solemn air as the citizens reading the name would repeat, "These are the names of those men from Massachusetts who have died in Vietnam." The reading over the public address echoed off the surrounding buildings and was emphasized by the quiet procession amidst the heavy Friday evening traffic. The service began at 5:00 p.m.

After the long list of names was read, the people were asked to gather around the podium and the meeting was turned over to Rabbi Martin Fowal of the University Chaplain Service.

Rabbi Fowal began by stating, "Those who have fallen are our brethren.", and then began to chant several religious prayers while asking the crowd to accompany him on the last.

Next to the podium was Prof. Doris Abramson for the reading of several anti-war poems. Prof. Abramson began by quoting Emily Dickenson on the thoughts of war, and stated, "War puts me in an oblique place." She continued to explain the word oblique as meaning devious or underhanded, stating that these words were appropriate description of our present situation.

In closing, a tree was planted on a section of the green near the water fountain. As the tree was being tipped into place, Dr. Abramson said, "This tree is being planted to create not destroy, to foliate not defoliate." With that the service was ended.

Southwest Canvassing Rally

A steady downpour of rain and confusion as to the rally's location contributed to the limited turnout of about fifty students for the Friday morning peace rally in Dining Commons #7 at Southwest complex.

Canvasing was delayed until after 9 a.m. because the peace packets were delivered late.

Huddled together under umbrellas, the group was instructed to begin canvasing in Belchertown. Other towns to be canvassed were Pelham, and South Deerfield. Some seventeen cars were acquired to facilitate the canvassing in the rain.

The canvassing was followed by a peace march in Ware, Mass. Friday night.

The Nixon administration reaffirmed that its Vietnam war policy would not be determined by marches on the streets and asserted its course continues to have the support of most Americans.

And leaders of the anti-war movement looked toward Christmas Eve for a possible third moratorium demanding an immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops from Vietnam.

500,000 Call for Peace

By KEITH M. BROMERY
MDC Washington Bureau

Approximately 1/2a million people decended on Washington for the two day moratorium which according to one official was the highest number of young people ever to come there for a single event. Police Chief Jerry Wilson of the Washington Metropolitan Police Department said that the official estimate of 1/4 million persons was very "modest".

The protest began Friday night with the March of Death around the White House. There was so much of a turnout for this event that moratorium officials had to turn people away. This march consisted of a candle light procession, each individual carrying a lighted candle and a placard with the name of an American soldier killed in Vietnam printed across the front.

The protestors in 30 degree freezing temperatures gathered in front of the Lincoln Memorial and proceeded down Constitution Ave. turning up past the front of the White House. There was a solid line of marchers from the White House to Lincoln Memorial all night long. The distance between the two locations is approximately 2 miles.

Earlier Friday night, there was a brief scuffle between several of the demonstrators of the Yippie faction and police after the group had attempted to march on the South Vietnamese Embassy. The demonstrators massed at Dupont Circle, a local "hippie" hangout about two blocks from the Embassy and began their march down Massachusetts Ave. to the Embassy from there.

Approximately 50 of the Metropolitan Police Department Tactical Squad used tear and "pepper" gas along with their riot sticks to break up the demonstrators as they tried to storm the Embassy. Police refrained from the use of excess force and the power of arrest. There were approximately five minor injuries to police and demonstrators as a result of the scuffle.

From early Friday morning to late Saturday evening carloads, busloads, and bike loads of young people were literally streaming into the city causing massive traffic backups at all of the inbound roadways. Traffic was backed up 20 miles along the Baltimore Washington Parkway Friday night and into Saturday morning.

Friday night Mayor Walter E. Washington, mayor of the District of Columbia, made a televised appeal to the people of the District to help provide housing for the many thousands of demonstrators who were without a place to stay the night. He made a similar plea Saturday night as groups of milling young people coming from the day's planned events caused numerous minor disturbances at various stops throughout the city.

Protestors began massing for the Saturday morning march late Friday night. The march began at 10:00 a.m. Saturday morning down Constitution Ave. to the Washington Monument where folk singers performed and various religious and government officials gave speeches till 5:00 p.m. Saturday night.

Trouble started late Saturday afternoon around 5:30 p.m. after most of the planned speakers had given their speech and the day's events were coming to a close. A radical student division, the Yeepies, carrying Viet Cong flags and shouting, "On to the Justice Building" started marching from the Washington Monument down Constitution Ave. to the Justice Department.

At the Justice Department, the demonstrators took down the American flag from the pole in front of the building and attempted to replace it with a Viet Cong flag. Police moved in when the flag was half way up the pole and took it down. Minor scuffling developed between police and the demonstrators.

At this point various members of the crowd which by this time had grown to about 15,000 started throwing rocks and red paint at the building. There were several men dressed in business suits standing on the balcony of the building about 25 feet over the heads of the crowd, which incited the crowd to throw things and shout obscenities at them.

Members of the Metropolitan Police Departments Tatical Squad began moving in from two sides pushing fragments of the crowd back down into the center of where the demonstrators were massed. Police began using tear and "pepper" gas to move the crowd.

More missiles were thrown by the demonstrators at police and the Justice building. Several windows in the building were broken. At this point the police decided to box the demonstrators in on four sides to keep the violence from spreading and then according to one demonstrator, "All hell broke out".

Having contained the crowd so that they couldn't dispurse even if they wanted to, the police fired a barrage of tear and "pepper"gas, smoke bombs, and combinations of the three into the one block area. After thoroughly saturating the area with the gases for a period of about 20 minutes, the police withdrew and massed a few blocks from the riot area to allow the demonstrators to disperse. They did.

As the violence at the Justice Department subsides, groups of young war protestors started the long trek back to their various modes of transportation. Along the way there were several store windows in the down town area broken largely by angry members of the demonstrators who had been gased at the Justice Department.

Routes leading from the city were clogged for a couple of hours Saturday night, but it was no where near as bad as it was Friday night coming in.

As things settled back to normal Sunday morning workmen were left with the massive task of picking up the many hundreds of reems of placards, posters, handouts, etc., left by the marchers around just about all of the government buildings in downtown Washington.

News Analysis

A Change in Priorities

By HELEN KENSICK
MDC Washington Bureau

"A change in priorities" encompasses the objectives of everyone participating in the Washington moratorium. From the militant tactics of the Weathermen to the quiet, dignified participation of the veterans from previous wars, the desire for peace and subsequently a more humane government became the ultimate goal of their combined efforts. The split between the more radical factions and the "effete crops of impudent snobs" who comprised the main part of the demonstrations was evidenced by the degree of emotional control shown in confronting the frustrating, complex problem of effecting a change in governmental policies.

The confrontation between the Weathermen and the police in Dupont Circle Friday night was horrifying. The demonstrators who marched on the nearby South Vietnamese embassy drifted back to Dupont Circle and began congregating there.

Frustrated in their attempt to reach the embassy, they returned to Dupont Circle even more aggravated and more inclined to provoke trouble. Small groups ran wildly up and down the streets smashing store windows while others threw Molotov cocktails and bottles at police. In the midst of this terror and confusion, a seemingly endless line of wailing police cars poured into the area. They converged on the largest group forming several incredibly long rows of white helmets and grotesque gas masks.

Many of the demonstrators were also equipped with gas masks, helmets, and clubs. They continued to smash windows and throw bottles at police, and finally after repeated warnings, the police released tear gas. The amazing thing about the tear gas was that in spite of its painful effects, few people were driven away by it. Instead, marshals from the mobilization committee provided help to those overcome by the gas. At times during the rush the heavy clouds of gas and the gas masks and helmets made it difficult to determine the police from the marshals rushing around to help people.

Surprisingly few people were actually hurt, and those who were were immediately taken care of. There was one boy whose head and face were bloodied by a head wound, but even he wasn't sure exactly how it happened because of the mass confusion.

The songs and speeches at the rally brought the enormous crowd to their feet many times. Dick Gregory captured the crowd's feelings regarding Vice-President Agnew: "He must be putting us on -- I can't believe any one human being could be born that dumb." Leonard Bernstein appeared briefly on stage to express his support of the moratorium. One of the most moving speeches was given by Mrs. Martin Luther King Jr. who praised the impressive dignity of the peaceful march. The philosophies and attitudes of the majority of the crowd were eloquently expressed by the Broadway cast of "Hair". As they sang the most popular songs from the show, doves were released. They flew over the crowd, and everyone began singing, swaying together, and waving their arms as they showed the v-symbol for peace.

Saturday's march and rally successfully incorporated the militant factions into a peaceful dignified and incredibly beautiful demonstration. While the majority of marchers were students, there were many elderly people, middle-aged adults, teenagers, and children there. One elderly veteran joined hands with several students and sang "Day is Done" along with Peter, Paul, and Mary while they walked up the hill to the Washington Monument.

300 Make Up UMass Delegation

By MDC Washington Bureau

Approximately 300 UMass students traveled to Washington this weekend in eight busses. The busses, which left the University at 8 P.M. Friday, arrived at the demonstration staging area in front of the Capitol building at 8:30 a.m.

It was estimated by King Council Executive Secretary Gil Salk that another 300 University students went to Washington in private cars.

"It was almost impossible for the entire UMass delegation to stay together once in Washington," a UMass coed said, "there were just too many people."

A small number of UM students joined the Yippies later Saturday afternoon in their march on the Justice Department building to protest the Chicago conspiracy trial. Although it appeared that no UMass student participated in the actual attack on the building, those present suffered the effects of the tear gas and pepper gas used by the D.C. police to clear the area.

Several UMass medics, students specially trained to handle any medical problems during the mobilization, rushed from the Washington Monument rally to the Justice Department to aid victims of the confrontation.

A small number of University students missed the busses which left Washington at 8 p.m. It was speculated by leaders of the U-Mass delegation that these students were tied up by the confrontations near the Justice Department.

THE SWAP STORY

Catalyst for Reform

By BERNARD BLAIN
Staff Reporter

"The questions are the same, but the answers are always different."

These questions and answers were examined at the Student Workshop on Activities Problems Conference last weekend at Lee, Massachusetts. Present at the meeting were students who were chosen by the SWAP Committee from applications received, various faculty members, the Board of Trustees, administration personnel, and state legislators.

The purpose of SWAP is not only to discuss, but also to serve as a catalyst for future action and reform on the UMass campus. With this purpose in mind the SWAP Committee structured group discussions which concerned themselves with academic problems, external problems and internal problems of both communication and student life.

The keynoting speech was delivered by Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Joseph Healy. Chairman Healy explained to the conference why it is necessary to have a board of trustees. He believed it necessary as an objective structure to outline the broad scope of University policy and to co-ordinate the various departments which many times have conflicting interests. In 1955, the University was liberated from control by the state legislature; it is the job of the Board of Trustees to protect UMass from political control and thus maintain their fiscal autonomy. Another function of the Board is to act as a buffer between the legislature and the public so that they can understand the needs of public higher education. Finally, the Board supplies the continuity needed in an overview of the educational system in order to project the future of the University.

Chairman Healy pointed out to each person present at the conference that not one single member of the Board receives pay for his efforts which are tedious and immense.

Chairman Healy realizes the Board is not perfect. He said, "Obviously, we make mistakes in judgment, but our basic problem is to make sure we do work together." He encouraged all the faculty and those designated students to participate in solving UMass problems.

REORGANIZATION A MUST

Chairman Healy said, "We can't run the University as we have in the past." The University is going through a restructuring which would require a president absent from both the Boston and Amherst campuses but who has a chancellor for each University campus.

At present the Board of Trustees can't delegate their power to anyone because of Chapter 75 Section 3 of the General Laws but Chairman Healy would like to see this changed.

Chairman Healy representing the feelings of the Board spoke to the students saying, "We need a great deal of help and you, the students, must take a real live part in the University of Massachusetts."

DISCUSSION - THE KEY

The individual groups designated by the hard working SWAP Committee met to exchange views and discuss various crucial topics.

Internal affairs groups examined questions concerning open housing, ROTC, war research, area governments, communication techniques and dorm autonomy. Where does the Student Senate's power stop and the area government begin? Are area governments functioning as best they can? Is open housing a legal policy? What will parents and the general public think of open housing? Will dorm autonomy hinder or aid dorms in developing the welfare of students? Will students abide by the rules of their dorm if given autonomy? How can students be reprimanded when they violate their dorm's rules?

Each group was assigned personnel from each area of the educational environment in order to ensure the student, faculty and administrative aspects of our present educational system was presented.

Other groups discussed academic affairs. Topics of discussion were student evaluation of faculty members, student voice in policies of hiring and firing of faculty, presently faculty are hired for their production ability and not their teaching ability, and also a proposal which would set up a new bachelor's degree with individual concentration in the College of Arts and Sciences.

The other area of discussion involved external affairs. Essentially this group investigated the need for implementation of policies and procedures which will inform those outside the environment of the University of exactly what is taking place and why. The public must be made aware of what it is like to be a college student at UMass, and must understand most of all what a college student is.

UMASS & THE COMMONWEALTH

The second day of the conference was highlighted by a panel discussion between state legislators George Rogers from New Bedford, John Oliver from Amherst, Trustee Dennis Crowly, Graham Taylor, Director of Academic Planning, Robert McCartney, and Secretary of UMass. The main topic of the panel discussion was how can the University relate more effectively to the state government and the public.

Speaking first was trustee Crowly who expressed a desire to see more of activists, that is those people who are interested in the future of UMass and what he termed the "great dream of a better University of Masschusetts." Although happy with the tremendous growth rate of UMass, Trustee Crowly felt that students as well as faculty and administrators must seek to develop the University until the legislature and the citizenry can speak with the utmost pride of UMass.

State Representative Rogers invited the SWAP conference members to New Bedford for next year before expounding his ideas concerning the educational "money problem" of UMass. Representative Rogers colored a dark picture of some members of the House. He remarked that one of the reasons the House was unwilling to support an additional one million dollars to the UMass budget last year was because of the admissions office at UMass. Representative Rogers felt that the inability of legislators to influence admission of their friends and political payoffs into UMass made legislators resent and vote against UMass budget requests.

Representative Rogers astounded most of the conference when he sharply criticized and laid all the blame for UMass's budget problems on the chairman of the Senate Ways and Means committee, Senator Blackie Burke. Representative Rogers described Senator Burke as "the nemesis of higher education" because he has always voted against education, used his chairmanship to minimize appropriations to educational institutions. He recommended to the students that they do all they can to rid state government of Senator Burke if they want UMass to realize its educational goals.

Mr. Taylor agreed with Representative Rogers. He stated, "Education is an underfinanced system." He observed that Massachusetts has one of the lowest per capita expenditures on education and is walking on shaky ground with the budget it now allows for support services.

The panel noted two main goals of the University. One, it is the obligation of UMass to grow and allow as many as possible of the 145,000 students waiting to enter UMass each year a college education, and two, to rid the legislature of anti-education membership and provide it with effective pro-educational leadership.

THE STATE IS THE BENEFICIARY

In an after dinner speech, Gerald Scanlon, SWAP Assistant Dean of Students, addressed the conference. He criticized the legislature for feeling UMass costs too much when UMass benefits the state. Each year more Massachusetts residents are able to receive a college education. Many UMass students are involved in helping with state poverty programs, welfare, education and government services and most of them remain in Massachusetts after graduation adding to Massachusetts' greatest asset of highly educated people.

He would like legislators to recognize the positive side of UMass student's programs such as the Belchertown and independent actions of students in collecting funds for the needy, and their great desire to live in a peace loving world are ignored by the legislature. Scanlon said that colleges and universities are in trouble today because of a lack of involvement of society.

CHANGE IS MANDATORY

The SWAP Committee members worked through the night readying a thirteen page report of recommendations from each committee. Among the proposals outlined were recommendations to: (1) Recognize student rights through effective communication between administration and students. (2) Evaluate the effectiveness of individual residence hall counselors. (3) Promote better public relations through the University State Communications Council. (4) Organize a community relations board which would work with problems of dorm autonomy, open house policy security, and emphasizing sensitivity to student responsibility. (5) Change the present grading system which operates on the principle of punishment for failure rather than personal motivation by dropping the grade of "F" and replacing it by not recording a grade or credit. (6) Create more opportunities for independent study. (7) Provide an ombudsman to serve as an information center which would guide students to the proper place to find solutions to their problems. (8) Decentralize the university into a cluster of small learning colleges. (9) Construct a system which would allow students to offer opinions concerning the hiring or firing of faculty personnel.

Many have moved... but the Paulists Stay On...
The Paulists arrived on the West Side of New York City in 1858. In 1895 they moved into San Francisco's Chinatown and into the fringes of Chicago's Loop in 1904.
They're still there.
Times change. Neighborhoods change. Sometimes they go up. Sometimes they go down — but through it all the Paulist stays. As long as there are people to be served the Paulist will be there.
The Paulist may be in the same old place but he constantly does new things. That's one of the characteristics of the Paulist order: using their own individual talents in new ways to meet the needs of a fast-changing world in the colleges . . . in communications . . . in the ghettos.

Open House Stand Upheld by Board

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

SOUTH LEE - The University's Board of Trustees opened this year's SWAP Conference by reaffirming their stand on open house, and by revising part of the alcoholic beverages regulations, which in effect makes UMass a "wet" campus.

The Trustees stood by their ruling of a few months ago which stated that dorms can set whatever open house hours they desire, as long as "appropriate security provisions exist." They appointed Provost Oswald Tippo as the man responsible for "determining when each house develops adequate security provisions."

"Because of the confusion surrounding open house," the Trustees declared, "no violations of this policy committed prior to this meeting shall be pressed."

There had been some speculation that the meeting might turn into a confrontation between Senate representatives and the Board, in light of the Senate's stand that students should have complete control over regulating their life styles.

However, this never came about.

Chairman Joseph P. Healy stated at the beginning of the debate on open house, "We recognize the rights of students to decide how to order their lives, but the Board has some responsibilities delegated by State law."

"We are looking for the right answers in this complex area, and need your (the students) help."

Student Senate President Bruce Balboni said that he was generally satisfied with the Trustee's decision, but objected to an Administrator, Provist Toppo, being given the responsibility to decide when dorm security plans are satisfactory.

"I really don't see why a student group can't be given this responsibility," Balboni said.

Healy responded that there was no way, at this time, for the Trustees to get around the State law, and added, "It is now up to the students and administrators to work together on this subject . . . the Trustees can't get into the fine print of implementation."

On the alcoholic beverages matter, the Trustees, on the recommendation of Louis Lyons Student Activities Committee, approved Provost Tippo's plan to make University regulations conform with State law.

This means that all students who are over 21 may now store and drink alcoholic beverages in University dorm rooms and in Fraternity and Sorority houses.

Also, special permission may be granted for a social group to serve alcoholic beverages on campus, as long as a University official (presumably the President) approves it.

The Trustees added that penalties for violation of the new policy would be a State criminal matter.

The Board is expected to discuss putting in a rathskellar in the new Campus Center at its meeting in Amherst next month.

The Board, throughout their meeting, stressed their intention to listen to student ideas about all aspects of University government. Chairman Healy said at the start of the meeting, "The fact that we are meeting here, at SWAP, indicates that the Board understands that students have a right to decide certain things while they are at the University. We are happy to listen to students."

Making his third Board meeting in a year, Trustee Martin Swig said, "Student responsibility should go along with student rights."

Swig, formerly an aide to U.S. Speaker of the House John Mc Cormack, is currently under investigation by the Federal Securities Commission and the FBI.

MEETING IN A SPIRIT OF COOPERATION AT SWAP - The UMass Trustees reaffirmed their position on open house, and revised alcoholic beverages regulations. Coming as a surprise at the meeting was the news that the UMass Medical School may not open on time because the State's Bureau of Building and Construction is negligent in living up to its committments. Med School Hurt By Construction

Another in the long series of crisis which have plagued the creation of the UMass Medical School cropped up at Friday's Board of Trustees Meeting, as Dean Lamar Soutar announced that the school's goal of admitting a first class of 16 next fall is in jeapordy, because the State Bureau of Building and Construction is having trouble living up to its committments.

Soutar explained, "We cannot, in good faith, admit any students unless we are sure that we will have adequate facilities ready in Worcester by next fall. And, at this point, we can't delay looking at applications much longer."

The School, according to Soutar has received several hundred inquiries for the 16 openings next fall from qualified applicants.

The Building Bureau, Soutar reports, will probably not be able to complete renovations at the temporary facilities in Worcester which the school must use next year, before the summer. He also doubts that the refurbushing of the school's power plant building, an essential for the school, will be done on time.

It is expected that University President John W. Lederle and Board Chairman Joseph P. Healy will put some pressure on the State House this week, in an effort to get some assurance that the Building Bureau will step up its pace.

Lederle commented, "This is just another dissappointment in an area where we have been forced to be dissappointed before. I'm very sad and concerned over this development."

Wash, wet, soak, hunt, squint, wash, soak, wet, cry a little
Contact lenses were designed to be a convenience. And they are up to a point. They're convenient enough to wear, once you get used to them, but, until recently, you had to use two or more different lens solutions to properly prepare and maintain contacts. You needed two or three different bottles, lens cases, and you went through more than enough daily rituals to make even the most steadfast individuals consider dropping out.
But now caring for your contacts can be as convenient as wearing them. Now there's Lensine, from the makers of Murine. Lensine is the one lens solution designed for complete contact lens care . . . preparing, cleansing, and soaking.
Just a drop or two of Lensine before you insert your lens prepares it for your eye. Lensine makes your contacts, which are made of modern plastics, compatible with your eye. How? Lensine is an "isotonic" solution. That means it's made to blend with the eye's natural fluids. So a simple drop or two coats the lens, forming a sort of comfort zone around it.
Cleaning your contacts with Lensine fights bacteria and foreign deposits that build up during the course of the day. And for overnight soaking, Lensine provides a handy contact canister on the bottom of every bottle. Soaking your contacts in Lensine between wearing periods assures you of proper lens hygiene.
Improper storage between wearings permits the growth of bacteria on your lenses. This is a sure cause of eye irritation and, in some cases, it can endanger your vision. Bacteria cannot grow in Lensine. Lensine is sterile, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic.
Let your contacts be the convenience they were designed to be. The name of the game is Lensine. Lensine, made by the Murine Company, Inc.

APOLLO 12

Astronauts Approach Moon

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - More than halfway to target, the Apollo 12 pilots gave their spaceship a rocket-kick ahead yesterday, surrendering a safety factor that guaranteed their return to earth if trouble bars them from the moon.

Under the eye of their color television camera, Charles Conrad Jr., Richard F. Gordon Jr. and Alan L. Bean fired their main rocket motor for 8.8 seconds at 6:15 p.m. EST.

It tightened their aim on the moon, cutting the miss distance to just 69 miles from more than 800 miles.

But it will also put them on a "no return" course that will require rocket power to bring them home again. Their previous course would have brought them home automatically after a long loop around the moon. The new course, if not altered later by rocket firings, would carry them out into the solar system.

But as much as it spoke for the confidence in the Apollo 12 engines, the new maneuver was also necessary if the astronauts are to land where they want to, some 200 miles south of the lunar equator on the eastern shore of the Ocean of Storms.

"The burn had a slight wobble," Conrad reported.

Their chosen target for the landing early Wednesday morning is near the remains of an unmanned spacecraft, Surveyor 3, which soft-landed on the moon some 2-1/2 years ago.

It's the first time in any Apollo flight that a free return course has been abandoned. But such a course, even if safer, permits landings only at the lunar equator.

If the main rocket engine aboard the mothership, Yankee Clipper, fails in an emergency to give them a new course to earth, there is power enough in the descent engine aboard the lunar lander-Intrepid to do the job.

With the television camera beaming the pictures back home, earthlings were able to see the action first hand. It was a dramatic moment as the astronauts worked the controls and monitored the flashing lights on their spacecraft dashboard.

Their voices, calm a few moments earlier, picked up the staccato tones of checking figures agains t figures, panel readouts against panel readouts.

The pilots shot past the halfway point at 4:39 p.m. when Apollo 12 was precisely 129,833 miles equidistant between moon and earth.

That moment came less than an hour and a half after they woke up after eight hours sleep in a 10-hour sleep period.

Before the rocket burn, Conrad told Mission Control what they would be doing in the immediate hours afterward.

"After the burn," he said, "we're going to clean up the spacecraft and I think the three of us will shave, and then we want to do some exercise on the exerciser. And I suspect that will occupy most of the rest of the day."

They turned the television camera on the clouds of ice crystals flying along with the spacecraft on the way to the moon. They are created by water dumped overboard through vents, frozen and crystalized in space.

When they did awake, yesterday began as a lazy day. Mission Control read the men a news report on their launch, told them much of the world saw their launch live on television, and relayed the congratulations of the Soviet Union. They were also read football scores, and Conrad heard that his alma mater, Princeton had lost an Ivy League game to Yale, 17-14.

Mission Control started to raise the Apollo 12 crew at about 3:15 p.m. but found them already awake. Conrad reported "Everybody's up." They had a satisfying rest.

They needed it. Friday had been a hectic 23-hour day, programmed deliberately long to help the pilots adjust their sleep periods to a "night people" schedule for the moonwalks of next week.

The three fliers, all Navy commanders, pressed Mission Control to make calls and keep tab on what their families were doing.

"Appreciate that every day, if you could," they said.

NASA Insists Launch was Safe

CAPE KENNEDY, Florida - Why was the Apollo 12 crew launched in a driving rainstorm?

POWER FAILURE

The question raged all through Cape Kennedy Friday night, even as the space agency denied it had risked the astronauts or their moon-landing mission by sending them skyward in the worst weather in the history of manned flight launchings.

The big reason for all the debate was the power failure in the Apollo spacecraft just after liftoff, seemingly caused by lightning that might have been the result of natural forces or a huge, flaming rocket charging through an electrically-charged atmosphere.

Whatever the cause, it knocked out communications between the spacecraft and the ground for almost a minute. Even worse, itforced the temporary failure of the spacecraft's prime navigation system, the complex electronics that guide it from liftoff into earth orbit.

The space agency has come a long way from the days when it couldn't launch men in anything but good weather. Lack of experience and the insistence that engineers be able to photograph the first phase of flight dictated that rule.

But today, the agency has a lot of experience launching men. It also feels that groundbased radar and on-board beacons give them enough information on how the rocket is flying to let it go in cloudy and even inclement weather.

WEATHER CRITERIA

"We designed the Apollo spacecraft and launch vehicle" Launch Operation Director Walter Kapryan said Friday, "so that we could launch in the rain. We had always intended to launch in the rain if that was necessary to meet our window."

This brings up the first question. What Kapryan meant by "Meeting The Window" was launching from Earth to get to the right place on the moon in time. The trouble with that is, Friday's "window" went all the way to 3:48 p.m., but the launch crews decided they'd better get off exactly on time at 11:22 a.m. when the weather seemed at its worst.

Less than 30 minutes after launch, the sky brightened and the rain stopped. Fifty-eight minutes after launch, the sun was shining.

Still, Kapryan insisted they had to go on time.

"We had unpredictable weather conditions," he said. "When you go into a hold, it's a lot harder to get going again. We had no assurance that the weather would be any better."

Launch rules forbid launching if the cloud ceiling is less than 500 feet, Kapryan went on.

It's Time for Ware to Understand

By RON LABRECQUE
Senior Reporter

There is a nearby mill town, small and isolated, which was rudely awakened last week to social and political currents which had been bypassing it for quite some time.

The town of Ware, nestled in the hills between here and Worcester on Rte. 9, found the peace movement knocking on its front door last Friday and as a newsman reported, "didn't like it."

Residents responded to intended use of their "contented, happy and satisfied town" for a march and rally against the war by preparing a spontaneous vigilante defense to greet "those peaceniks".

The King Council, which was sponsoring the march, called it off late Friday for fear of violence after numerous threats against the demonstrators had been received. The town of Ware prepared to defend itself anyway.

The town seemed paralyzed in fear Friday night, as if it were awaiting destruction by gigantic monsters emerging from nearby Quabbin Reservoir.

A sign which greets visitors entering the town from the West reads; "Welcome to Ware, Nationally known as the town that can't be licked". The town was not about to be licked by a bunch of "long haired hippies."

The town's 12-man police force and 60 member auxiliary had been dispatched. There were uniformed policemen on every corner. More police rode up and down the five blocks of the main street. Town maintenance trucks had been mobilized to carry the large force.

The immediate threat was not an unfriendly small town police force however. The threat was in the vigilante groups.

Walking down the Main Street of Ware Friday night the reporter felt somewhat like Captain America and his friends entering the Southern lunch counter in "Easy Rider."

There was animosity on the faces of the people on the street, and fear, a fear bred out of ignorance.

The men who huddled and talked about "them" from Amherst and anxiously looked about were not really sure who these peace marchers were. They could only envision a dirty long haired screaming maniac who was their stereotype and known only by the name "hippie."

They were the men who had fought in World War II, did not know a college education, but worked in the local factories to make a decent living. They know mortgage payments and car payments and church and the flag and loyalty to their President.

Their values are of a different time and generation and it is difficult if not impossible to give that up to change in any degree or form.

They just couldn't understand why the demonstrators had to march in Ware. "What are they coming around and bothering us for?" they said of the marchers.

Complementing this older group was a large group of high school males.

They grouped in front of the Acropolis Pizza House or they played pinball machines or they rode up and down the street in their cars. Their demeanor was almost as humorous as if they had seen too many reruns of "Blackboard Jungle". The effort was on manliness. No long hair, no bell-bottoms, just toughness.

They were anxious for a fight. It was the only reaction they knew. They were being threatened by something they didn't understand.

A girl in the drug store was asked what was happening;

"They're having a peace march."

"Is that why all the police are out on the street?"

"Well, there's going to be trouble."

"Why are the police and townspeople going to cause trouble?"

"No, not us, them, the peace marchers are going to cause the trouble."

The peace movement was headed for Ware last Friday and a little bit of fear and a little bit of ignorance stopped it. It's not hard to understand why the town reacted in the way it did.

Unfortunate, but understandable. But for the town "that can't be licked" it seems to be time for a little understanding and listening on the part of its residents.

The Dangers of Apollo 12

SPACE CENTER (AP) - Never have men so far from home been so dependent on machines.

To avoid a sure - and bizarre -death, everything must work to near perfection on Apollo 12, more so even than on the precarious, first flight to the moon.

Apollo 12, unlike previous moon flights, is on a path which, unchanged, would lead to death tens of thousands of miles from the safety of the earth.

It also faces the frightening seconds of decision that confronted Apollo 11 in the bullet-like descent to land on the moon.

At these two times in particular, disaster poises, awaiting a mechanical failure, a human error, a mathematical mistake.

There are safety margins, backup systems, but the more ambitious flights, such as Apollo 12, test and strain the safety margins.

In Apollo 12's flight to the moon, the lunar gravitational pull grabs the ship and ares it around the moon's backside. The spacecraft picks up speed and whips to within 69 miles of the lunar surface.

Charles Conrad Jr., Richard F. Gordon Jr. and Alan L. Bean turn their spacecraft around and point the powerful service propulsion engine in the direction they are traveling. Moments later the spacecraft goes behind the moon and out of touch with the earth.

By themselves, cut off from the guidance of Mission Control, the astronauts fire the service propulsion engine.

If the burn goes well, the spacecraft slows and settles into an orbit of the moon.

If the rocket fails, Apollo 12 will continue around the moon, accelerated by lunar gravity until it whips around the front side and away, angling, not toward the earth, but outward into space.

Then the astronauts would have to fall back on their safety margin - the descent engine on the lunar module which is docked to the command module. Using this engine would wipe out any possibility of landing on the moon. The question now would be one of survival.

As the spacecraft swept outward from the moon, the astronauts would fire the descent engine to place them on a path toward earth. The engine must fire for 8 minutes, 18 seconds, almost its full limit.

Should this burn fail, Apollo 12 would be lost, with enough exygen for only a few days.

Officials believe the odds of this happening are very small. The service propulsion engine has proven itself over months of tests and on three previous moon flights. And the chances of both the service propulsion and the descent engines failing are minute.

If all goes well, and Apollo 12 goes into an orbit of the moon, possible disaster moves close again Tuesday night when Conrad and Bean board the lunar module and start the riskiest maneuver of the flight - the descent to the moon's surface.

Conrad first fires the descent engine to leave moon orbit. The rocket slows the spacecraft until it begins to fall in a long curve toward the moon.

Conrad and Bean ride toward the moon on their backs, facing out into space. To guide their descent, they depend on radar signals bounced off the moon and flashed on a control panel.

At an altitude of 42,426 feet, the spacecraft rotates and the moon's surface comes into view for the first time during descent. The lander speeds over closer to the moon, its engine throbbing.

At 7,000 feet, Conrad starts looking for the landing site, that smooth plain memorized weeks before in hours training. He has six minutes to locate the precise landing point. A computer guides the spacecraft toward the point.

It was a poignantly moving display of the affinity of the crowd that was evident throughout the death march and the peace march. This alliance of feeling carried over even into the confrontations where the marshals helped the people who instigated the trouble. As Dellinger put it: violent reactions like smashing windows are the result of a frustrated but desperate hopes."

This moratorium did effectively express a united hope for peace and change. It did so in such a way that made Nixon's troops seem drastically out of place in this city filled with hopeful people.

Washington

Whether it was my morbid training as a march medic, learning about gas and smashed, bloodied skulls, or the violence at the Saigon embassy on Thursday night, or just my general feeling of futility, I went to Washington expecting Chicago. Even the bus, traveling on monotonously-lit roads, passing by black and silent Plasticvilles, homes of the silent majority, by the millions of cold spots of the lights of the Megalopolis, past Springfield at 11:45 p.m. (42 degrees), through New York, always thrilling and exciting the mysterious, cutting the sterile plains of New Jersey, the vague turnpike cafeterias, by the elusive Maryland towns of Rising Sun, North East, and Havre de Grace, into a dark snow storm before Baltimore -- even the bus reflected the mood of the impending doom. The radio, accouncing that Ronald Reagan thought that the Moratorium was masterminded from East Berlin, then followed by a Leslie Uggams record pleading "a whole lot of people trying to get it together, just a little more time to try to get it together", reiterated that something was terribly wrong.

But then the snow stopped, the dawn broke, and the sun rose, illuminating the southern Maryland sky with a friendly albeit frigid, brilliance. WCAU happily enjoined everyone to wish Melissa, "who is three today", a happy birthday. We assembled on the Mall in Washington, an unbelieveable mass of people boxed into square inches of muddy and frozen, yet sun-lit ground, laughing and joking and sharing food and home towns. We mocked Spiro, not maliciously, but condescendingly. The marchers trickled onto Pennsylvania Avenue, singing softly, demanding "Peace, now!", grooving on the sun, being friendly to the cops and having a generally peaceful and happy time. The rally at the Washington Monument contributed to the Woodstockian atmosphere of the day. Peter, Paul and Mary softly singing "Day is Done", Senators Goodell and McGovern talking liberal peacefulness, Dick Gregory expounding his theories on Spiro ("Spiro Agnew is the Richard Nixon of the Nixon administration") Richie Havens mesmerizing the people with "Freedom", Dr. Spock and his lost and found children pronouncements, Arlo Guthrie ("This Land is made for you and me"), what seemed to be half a million people on their feet, peace sign in the air, swaying like a field of multi-coloured wheat to their own musical strains of "All we are saying is give Peace a chance" -- all these reaffirmed to the world that our generation is different.

As the rally ended and dusk broke, a group of not more than fifty people began to throw stones and cans at the Justice Department, breaking windows. The police, attempting to stop them, released two tear gas bombs that affected many naive spectators (I don't say "innocent", for a confrontation inflamed by Dave Dellinger's invitation for protest and by the presence of hordes of white-helmeted riot police is apparent and are to be avoided). Quickly, word got around that "They" used gas at the Justice Department, and naturally, hundreds of stupid, curious kids and adults rushed to where the action was. From 6:00 on, both sides amply proved their density. The police needlessly cleared and gassed the Washington Monument area where completely unknowing and peaceful marchers were huddled around fires or trying to find buses. The extremists went on a senseless rampage that helped neither peace nor the people. If I had to take sides, however, I would side with the police. To be sure, they over-reacted, but they were not the ones who started the trouble. Most of them went out of their way to be helpful and friendly. It was the Yippies and crazies and Weathermen who invited naive kids to the Justice Department where Mobe marshalls and medics were almost nonexistent. It was the extremists who polarized the police by violence.

The road from Washington to Amherst was a slow and tedious one. In Connecticut, the pavement was concrete; in New Jersey, it was blacktop. Both served the same purpose. And so do both the fascist pigs and commie reds serve the same purpose -- their own ends.

ART BUCHWALD

How to Make a Buck in D.C.

WASHINGTON - A. Ernest Fitzgerald, who blew the whistle on the overruns for the Air Force's C-5A airplane, was fired from his $28,900-a-year job last week. The Pentagon said it was eliminating the cost-analysis position as an economy measure and not in retaliation because Fitzgerald told Congress the plane would cost $2 billion more than the Lockheed Corp. had estimated.

I was inclined to be sympathetic with Fitzgerald's position until I heard the Air Force's side of the story.

I have a friend at the Pentagon who said everyone missed the point.

"We didn't eliminate Fitzgerald's job to save $28,900," he said. "We eliminated the job because Fitzgerald was costing us millions."

"How's that?"

"Well, his job was to reduce costs and achieve economy in Pentagon purchasing. He was supposed to study contracts, watch budgets and see that the military was not overcharged. As long as he did this without coming up with any irregularities, we could live with him. But the minute he thought he discovered waste and inefficiency and Congress found out about it, he cost us a packet."

"I don't understand."

"Well, take the C-5A as an example. Once Fitzgerald revealed that the bill on the plane would be $2 billion more than originally anticipated, the Air Force had to go into high gear to defend its procurement methods.

"We had to take five generals as well as hundreds of civilians off other projects to develop testimony justifying the $2 billion overrun. We had to fly up Lockheed executives from Marietta, Ga., for conferences on the best way of explaining the added costs.

"We had to go to great expense having charts made, position papers printed and press releases mimeographed. We were forced to hire public relations experts to keep the name of the Air Force from being sullied by ax-wielding senators.

"The entire defense budget was in jeopardy, and we had to spend thousands of dollars lobbying on the Hill. It was a frightening experience for everyone."

"And Fitzgerald was responsible for all of it?"

"Certainly he was. Had he not come up with the disclosures, the secretary of defense and the deputy secretary wouldn't have had to have a big advertising campaign proving the value of the C-5A. All in all, we estimate that with the man hours and other costs, Fitzgerald cost us over a million dollars to defend the plane. So when the smart-aleck press says we're trying to save $28,900 they don't know what the hellthey're talking about. Getting rid of Fitzgerald's job saved the American taxpayer a million dollars."

"I don't think we should sniff at that," I said.

"Fitzgerald meant well, but he just didn't understand how costly his revelations would be. He didn't see the big picture. He didn't understand that with the Air Force, as with all the military services, it's much more expensive to defend a mistake you made than to let the mistake go by unnoticed."

"It's obvious from what you've told me," I said, "that he didn't have the taxpayer's interests at heart."

"We hope if nothing else that this will be a lesson to our other cost management people."

Weekend of Shakespeare Hailed

By KEVIN DONOVAN Fine Arts Staff

On November 13-16, the Fine Arts Council presented the National Shakespeare Company in repertory, providing the University community with the rare opportunity to see a professional staging of Shakespeare's MACBETH & THE TEMPEST, as well as Moliere's THE SCHOOL FOR WIVES.

Unfortunately, Bowker auditorium is plagued by poor acoustics and generally inadequate theatrical facilities which detracted somewhat from the NSC's performances. During the Company's Thursday night presentation of MACBETH, these inadequacies were regretably aggravated by the incessant tittering of some 300 Junior High and High School students coupled with the constant shuffling of those allowed to stand at the back of the theatre. This undercurrent of noise was most annoying to the audience, for many lines were inaudible as a result.

In the opening scenes of MACBETH, the actors themselves did little to relieve the situation. Many of the lines were mumbled or delivered with the actors' backs to the audience.

Melvyn Weinstein, as Duncan, sounded more like Demosthenes struggling with a mouth full of boulders. His feigned basso profundo voice was quite ludicrous, especially when it occasionally squeaked a few octaves higher, and his classical kingly stance, with feet spread nobly apart, clenched fist on hip, his cape thrown back gallantly and his chin raised proudly with kingly determination, was really pretty silly. Macbeth did a great service to the audience when he slashed Duncan's throat.

Aside from this, hopefully unintentional characterization of Duncan as a pompous fool, and some of the characters' clumsy indecision of movement, the production itself was quite solid. After the opening scenes, the actors seemed less prone to mumbling, and Rob Evan Collins, as Macbeth came into his own with a credible interpretation of the ill-fated thane.

Collins portrayed dynamically Macbeth's movement from humanity to bestiality as he gradually slipped from social concerns into his own insular inner reality.

Marguerite Davis as Lady Macbeth also gave a fine performance, although the contrast between Lady Macbeth's calculated cruelty and her insanity was not as pronounced as it could have been.

On Friday night the company turned to a much lighter topic with extraordinary success --- Moliere's THE SCHOOL FOR WIVES. Philip Hanson's mastery in the leading role of Arnolphe cannot be praised adequately. Bowker was only 3/4 full, perhaps in anticipation of a dry, 17th century farce, full of witticism too abstruse for a modern audience. Not so. The NSC's production of THE SCHOOL FOR WIVES was obsolutely uproarious. The universality of the theme defied the staling influence of time on humour, and the result was one hilarious scene after another.

Although the entire cast was superb, no one individual approached the excellence of Hanson's performance. His face was a remarkable symphony of expressiveness that seemed to glow or fade, expand or contract, with an appropriate reaction to every situation. Even his smile was a phenomenon - starting from nothing, gradually stretching until it beamed from ear to ear. Those with enough foresight to realize the potential of this play or those just lucky enough to have been there, were well rewarded.

Shakespeare's THE TEMPEST was the last presentation by the Company, with Philip Hanson again in the lead role. As Prospero, Hanson showed the depth of his artistry, totally in control of the performance in much the same way that Prospero himself was in control of his island. Needless to say, the entire cast once more functioned as a cohesive, dynamic unit. Especially noteworthy were Anthony Ristoff as Trinculo, and Brian Hardigan as Stephano, whose zany, drunken antics delighted the audience.

SENDOFF, Campus Chest Combined, Tickets to Go On Sale Today

The festivities of SENDOFF '69 during the week of Dec. 1-7 will mark the synthesis of two traditional campus activities, according to sophomore class president Ernie Lepore. SENDOFF weekend and the week-long Campus Chest fund-raising drive, both sponsored annually by the sophomore class, have been combined this year to provide a whole week of continuous events and concerts. Tickets for all concerts go on sale today at the Student Union ticket office.

Poet Alan Ginsberg will begin the week's activities on Monday, Dec. 1, with a coffee hour in the Student Union Ballroom at 3:00 and a lecture in the Cage at 8:00 p.m. Sponsored jointly by the sophomore and junior classes, he will also hold two seminars in the Ballroom on Tuesday, Dec. 2, at 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. All of his appearances are free of charge.

On Wednesday, Dec. 3, there will be a Campus Chest Auction & Raffle in The Ballroom at 8 p.m., followed on Thursday, Dec. 4 by SENDOFF fireworks and a pep rally, and campus-wide canvassing for Campus Chest.

The James Brown Revue headlines the Friday night concert on Dec. 5 at 9:15 p.m. in the Cage. Tickets are $3.50 each, and a UMass, Smith, Mt. Holyoke or Amherst College I.D. is required for purchase. "This policy was deemed necessary because of several problems experienced at the Homecoming concerts," says Lepore. Ticket quantity will also be limited to four per person.

The Woodrose Ballroom will be Saturday's main attraction, with shows in the Student Union Ballroom at 7:30 & 10:00 p.m. Featured will be Country Funk and Wild Thing, plus the Paul Pina Blues Band. Lights will be by Captain Video, and admission will be $1.50.

Also on Saturday, the UMass Redmen will host Vermont at the Cage at 7:30 p.m., and there will be a spaghetti dinner in the ballroom from noon till 7:00 p.m.

The week's finale on Sunday, Dec. 7 will be in the Cage at 3:00 p.m. and will include Johnny Winter, Jethro Tull and Spooky Tooth. Captain Video will be back for another light show, and admission will be $3.25.

The Campus Chest store will be open in the Student Union all week long.

JETHRO TULL (above), Johnny Winter and Spooky Tooth will be featured in the finale performance of SENDOFF '69, Sunday, Dec. 7, at 3:00 p.m. in the Cage. The concert will culminate a week full of activity.

Credit to be Offered For Counselor Training

A new course, entitled "Residence Living: interpersonal, small group and community dynamics", will be offered this spring to persons making application to become residence hall counselors next year. The course is designed as a pre-service training experience and will be open only to persons who have never been counselors here. It carries 3 semester hours credit and will be listed in the pre-registration literature as Psych. 388 or Ed. 388 Special Problems.

To enter the course, a student must indicate his interest in becoming a counselor next year by applying to the Head of Residence of the house where he would like to work or to the Area Coordinator in that area.

Counselor applications may be obtained from Heads of Residence and Area Coordinators from November 3 to November 17.

All applications for next year must be received by November 17, regardless of whether or not you take the course this spring. The selection process will take place during February 1970.

Since there will probably be more counselor applicants than can be admitted into this spring's courses, those persons, who are selected in February as counselors and who are not at that time enrolled in the course, will be asked to sign up for it next fall.

Except for unusual circumstances all students who apply for a counselor's position will be automatically considered as potential candidates for the class this spring or next fall.

From this number 150 students will be selected to take the course this spring. Students will be notified of their assignment time before Thanksgiving so that they may make plans to pre-register for it on Counseling Day, December 3.

Since the course registration will precede the selection process, there will be some students in the course who do not get selected as counselors. These persons should plan tocontinue with the course anyway, since they will still receive the 3 credits and a good deal of knowledge about interpersonal and group dynamics.

Lectures, readings, small group discussion, demonstration and training group experiences will be designed to meet the goals of the course:

1. to help prospective counselors develop a better understanding of themselves and the effect they have on other people as they interact in dyadic and small group situations;
2. to help counselors develop more sensitivity to and understanding of other people and of the forces that influence individual and group developments;
3. to introduce counselors to some counseling and small group theory;
4. to help counselors develop their skills as helpers and as change agents;
5. to help counselors relate their learnings about individual and small group behavior to the floor section, the residence hall and to look at the ecology of the larger institution; of their learnings.

The courses will be coordinated by:

Dr. Dee Appley, from the Department of Psychology;

Dr. Don Carew, from the School of Education; and the Area Group Workers: Norma Gluckstern, Richard Kleiner, Sue LaFrance, Eunice Parisi, Jack Wells, Sue Garson.

Job Opportunities in Europe

A.E.S. Service

American - European Student Service (on a non-profitable basis) is offering jobs to students for Germany, Scandinavia, England, Austria, Switzerland, France, Italy, and Spain. The jobs consist of forestry work, child care work, farm work, hotel work, construction work, and some other more qualified jobs requiring more specialized training.

The purpose of this program is to afford the student an opportunity to get into real living contact with the people and customs of Europe. In return for his or her work, the student will receive his or her room and board, plus a wage. However, students should keep in mind that they will be working on the European economy and wages will naturally be scaled accordingly.

Further information and application forms can be obtained from American - European Student Service, Box 34733, FL 9490 Vaduz, Liechtenstein (Europe).

A.S.I.S. Scholarship

Free service is the keynote of the New American Student Information Service Program.

The new ASIS Scholarship fund allows the organization to provide, free of charge, the following services: a paying job in Europe, 4-day, 5-country orientation trips (including transportation, accommodations and all meals): testing, registration and enrollment in an ASIS- Eurocentre Language Laboratory in Europe, full health and accident insurance for any American student in Europe, a complete longplay language record course, and numerous other services and items such as free flight bags.

This means that the new ASIS Scholarship will be paying for most of a students summer in Europe and students will actually earn money as long as they work at a paying job in Europe.

Students only register and join ASIS and may obtain free material by writing to: Dept. 11 ASIS, 22Ave. de la Liberte, Luxembourg City, Grand Duchy of Luxembourg.

Each inquiry must include $2 to cover overseas handling and airmail postage.

UMass Student "Tries to Change Opinions"

WASHINGTON - "I came here to march in memoriam of the war dead, in the hopes our marching will influence the government to stop the war and bring home our troops.

"But I'm not a Communist; none of my friends are Communists," said 22-year-old Jim Knight, a student in the Graduate School of Education at the University of Massachusetts.

Jim got off a bus in the nation's Capital shortly before dawn Friday morning with 120 students from Amherst, Smith and Holyoke, to take up his placard, candle and place in the anti-war "March Against Death."

"This is the first big thing I've participated in. I don't belong to any organizations, but I was impressed with the idea of having the marchers carrying signs with the names and hometowns of American soldiers who died in Vietnam. It brings the war to a personal level," Knight said.

"If you're going to change people's opinions, you have to reach them on an emotional level. . .you don't reach them with political rhetoric.

"We talked about this quite a bit on the bus coming down," Knight said. He said most of the students who made the eight-hour trip, and then marched from Arlington Cemetery across Washington to the Capitol building, had spent the rest of the day sleeping.

"There was a lot of traffic on the way down, but we didn't get into any real jams. I talked to some kids that hitchhiked from Chicago. They said practically everybody they ran into was on their way to Washington for the march."

Knight, a graduate of Amherst who lives in Leeds, Mass., said he planned to return home following today's mass rally at the Washington Monument.

He said he thought the march was "very well organized. We had a very relaxed group on the bus coming down. It was about three to two, guys to girls. There was no singing, but people were talking among their friends.

"We had been hearing during the week about all the extra troops being sent into Washington. It made us a little nervous, but it wasn't until one of the organizers on the bus started talking about the tear gas that I got apprehensive.

"He was giving us instructions about where to meet, where we would stay, and then he started passing out sterile gauze cloth. He said it was in case tear gas was used against us. We should wet the cloth and immediately wipe it off our skin, face and eyes. I remember thinking, where am I going to find a water fountain in the middle of a crowd. It sobered us a little.

"When we got there, though, everything was very peaceful. The sun was just coming up and it wasn't too cold."

Knight and the college group from Massachusetts joined the single file line of march which had begun at the cemetery the night before and which continued through yesterday morning with an estimated 40,000 people taking part. The three-day protest also included a mass march and rally yesterday of additional thousands through the first real storm of the winter here.

The weather was mild through the first part of the March Against Death, and Knight said he met only one heckler, a middle-aged man on his way to work Friday morning.

"He said, 'You don't deserve to wear that sign, why don't you try working'" I didn't answer him. They told us to maintain a peaceful, non-violent manner."

"I had never been to Washington before and the hike took me past a lot of the monuments and government buildings. It was very interesting," Knight said.

After the march the group was taken to one of the centers maintained by the new Mobilization to End the War in Vietnam and dispersed to various schools and churches.

"I came with one busload, here to Catholic University. A student loaned me his bunk during the day so I could sleep. A lot of the others have sleeping bags, though, and are stretched out here in the dorm lounge. They aren't particularly keeping the people in one group or from one state together. The rest of the group I came down with is scattered all over the city.

"Before the march on Washington, I had participated in one other march, a small one in Northampton, and I went to hear the speeches on Amherst Town Common during the Oct. 15 peace protest. I don't know what single factor made me decide to come down here. I saw the Chicago riots on TV during the Democratic convention and last summer I also remember seeing some pictures in Life magazine. The photographs were of American soldiers killed in one week of fighting in Vietnam. It told all about them - made you ralize they were real people - made you realize what death was.

"We talked about this on the way down, got into some deep moral issues. There are too many lives being wasted every day - more and more people are dying.

"I was brought up in the Episcopal Church, but I think my religion now is simply a religious awareness of the sacredness of human life.

"I feel that a true patriot is a person who does what he feels in his heart is the best thing for his country, within a larger context of the future of the human race.

"We argued the question for quite awhile on what is your moral obligation toward your government versus your own personal duty towards human life. We all had different ideas, but we respected each other's opinions.

"For a long time many Americans have felt that our country's foreign policies are above criticism. . .It just isn't true. We feel what our leaders are doing now is wrong. We're not saying the principles on which this nation were built are wrong. If we didn't have freedom in this country we wouldn't be here marching today. That is one great strength of the nation.

"I didn't vote in 1968 because I didn't feel I had a choice. If I could have I would have voted for Eugene McCarthy or Bobby Kennedy."

Knight is studying to be a teacher of English and the new areas of film appreciation and humanistic education. The last is a new method of imparting knowledge which emphasizes the emotional content of the learning process.

"I feel I can best serve my country most effectively in the very peaceful revolution that is going on today in the field of teaching," Knight said.

"I'm opposed to militarism. I don't think all of us who came to this city share the exact same views on the subject. But we all came because we wanted the leaders of this country to be aware that a large minority in this country, including respected professional people, are questioning the government's policy in Vietnam right now," Knight said.

News Analysis

In Nov. It Rained

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

Two days after more than four thousand UMass students turned out to care about their money, the Moratorium happened. There was no crescendo movement leading up to the November Peace Action day. There was no great social pressure to be swept up by. UMass was business as usual. Apollo 12 went to the moon. Pat Nixon wore an "Aqua blue suit" to the launching.

The crowds between classes were normal. Class attendance was about the same as when there is a Holiday on Thursday and UMass unofficially calls a four day weekend. A lot of people went home on Friday, not for the Moratorium. Some sixty students canvassed in the rain.

The weather was a windfall, for those who wanted to sleep on Moratorium day. One peace worker mumbled, half in dream, "The rain may come, but the war goes on." The rain altered most of what was planned. The rally was not held. The canvassing was at a minimum. The weather broke during the afternoon and the Amherst Common candlelight service was held. There were more town and High School people than UMass students. There were many old ladies listening to the thousand names being read of "Massachusetts war dead." The candlelight peace march in Ware was cancelled, "threats of serious violence" had been made.

On the Amherst common people were quiet, almost solemn, as they shuffled around the square trying to keep the cold, damp wind from the small candle flames they carried. People shared their lighted candles whenever some one else's was extinguished. There was unity of presence, if not ideology on the Amherst Common that cold Friday afternoon. As a local Rabbi chanted the Hebrew memorial to the dead, children and adults alike stood awed. As the names of the "Massachusetts war dead", were read, many were reminded of friends and relatives. As the tree was planted as a "living memorial" to the Vietnam war dead, thoughts of the "threats of serious violence" in Ware came to mind. Why would people oppose peace with violence?

One faculty member at UMass, gathering names on a petition in the Student Union lobby, commented that five years ago there would have been no movements. He pointed to the many tables manned by students collecting money for Thanksgiving dinners for deprived people, to people working for an end to the bad conditions of people in certain areas. He said that the petition campaign to end the war was going well. He had to close down the petition table. His replacement at the table had not arrived.

There appears to be a more defined level of student opinion at UMass. Some students who participated in the Oct. 15 action have become disillusioned. Although they canvassed and rallied for peace, they are willing to at least lean towards Nixon. One girl who had been a canvaser commented that the political realities in the world didn't allow for peace. Many students can not accept a simple, immediate withdrawal. Still, the peace movement has grown, in dedication if not in momentun. The November peace Action Day has lost many hangers-on. Maybe the rain helped. Maybe if it had been sunny, there would have been little marked difference. Estimates have about 70% of the UMass student body not willing to participate in anything.

The October 15 action was characterized by momentum, by participation. The Novembe. Peace Action Day at UMass seems to have been characterized by rain.

PROJECT THEMIS

"Engineering for the Deep Ocean," Or for the Department of Defense

The following article refers to Project Themis activities at U-Mass. The symposium occured last year (Dec. 13-14).

Amherst, Mass. - Deep sea exploration and technology will be spotlighted by UMass and University of Notre Dame engineers and scientists Friday and Saturday, (Dec. 13-14, 1968) at Notre Dame's Center for Continuing Education in a symposium on "Engineering for the Deep Ocean."

Jointly sponsored by UMass and Notre Dame and under the technical supervision of the Undersea Programs of the Office of Naval Research, the symposium will focus on Project Themis, an interdisciplinary study of deep sea submersibles.

The two universities were among 41 institutions in the nation to receive Project Themis contracts from the U. S. Department of Defense last year.

The UMass contract, totaling $540,000 for three years, deals with an interdisciplinary study of deep sea submersibles, and involves 14 faculty members from the School of Engineering. They are working in research areas such as prepulsion and energy conversion, materials and materials processing, navigation control and control submersible structure, hydro-dynamics, physical oceanography, and information management and systems optimization.

The University of Notre Dame received a Themis contract similar in nature to the UMass project. The purpose of the joint conference is to exchange information among faculty members at the two institutions and to acquaint leaders of outside agencies as to the progress of the work at the two universities.

The program is managed at U-Mass by Dr. Kenneth G. Picha, Dean of the School of Engineering, and Dr. Charles E. Carver Jr., professor of civil engineering. Program managers at Notre Dame are Dr. Joseph C. Hogan, Dean of the College of Engineering, and Dr. Harry C. Saxe, chairman of the department of engineering.

Ten UMass engineers will meet with their counterparts at Notre Dame to exchange research information and to review and explain the work being done on Project Themis before Navy Department officials and representatives from WESTINGHOUSE, GRUMMAN, LOCKHEED and ELECTRIC BOAT DIVISION OF GENERAL DYNAMICS.

Keynote speaker for the symposium is underwater explorer Dr. Jacques Piccard, designer and operator of the first deep sea underwater vessel, the "Bathyscaph," and its famous successor, the "Trieste." He will discuss his newly designed submersible, the "Benjamin Franklin," that was built by the Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., for whom he is special consultant in advanced oceans systems. Dr. Piccard will soon board the vessel with six other engineers and scientists to drift for six months from Florida to Cape Cod in an effort to study the Gulf Stream.

Other speakers will also discuss various phases of submergent vehicles and underwater research during the two-day symposium. The conference is expected to become an annual event with next year's meeting to be held at UMass.

The ten UMass Faculty members attending the conference are: Dean Kenneth G. Picha, project manager; Dr. Charles E. Carver Jr., project co-manager; Dr. Stanley M. Bemben, civil engineering; Dr. Joseph M. Colonell, civil engineering; Prof. Duane E. Cromack, mechanical and aerospace engineering; Prof. William E. Heronemus, civil engineering; Dr. Charles E. Hutchinson, electrical engineering; Dr. Melton M. Miller, civil engineering; Dr. John E. Ritter, Jr., mechanical and aerospace engineering; Dr. George A.Russell, mechanical and aerospace engineering.

Themis Project in the Abstract

The following is reprinted from the "Proposal for Project Themis from Office of the Director of Defense. Submitted by University of Mass.

The University of Massachusetts proposes to initiate a new interdisciplinary research program centered about deep-sea submersible problems. Faculty interests in propulsion and energy conversion, materials and materials processing, guidance and controls, structures, deep-sea environment, deep-sea hydrodynamics, and information management and systems optimization will be directed toward solving major problems of deep-sea submersible design by a Deep-Sea Submersible Board. The Board will be chaired by Professor C. E. Carver who will serve as Project Co-Manager working cooperatively with Dean of Engineering, K. G. Picha, who will serve as Project Manager.

An initial contract at the level of $663,998 is requested on a three year step funded basis. The major portion of these funds will be used to support graduate students, visiting scholars, and faculty members during the summer months. The University of Massachusetts will contribute faculty research time during the academic year to initiate a program of great importance to the Commonwealth and the Nation.

Coalition: Project Themis at UM

Project Themis is a program to involve universities which have not previously done defense research in a closer relationship with the Pentagon. The objective as described by Army Research and Development, a magazine put out by the Army Department of Research, is "to create new centers of scientific excellence responsive to the Department of Defense solution of problems in the future." John S. Foster, Jr., Director of Research and Engineering for the Pentagon, told the House Appropriations Committee in the spring of 1968, that "he had put through a new scheme called Project Themis to bring in some of the smaller colleges which heretofore had been excluded from defense work." Some of the research done at different universities include: "Control of Vectors of Diseases of Military Importance," at North Dakota State; "Pathogenesis of Acute Diarrheal Disease," at Jefferson Medical College (Pentagon may well be interested in this project since the U.S. Armed Forces has stockpiled a chemical which induces a disabling or fatal diarrhea); "Vibration and Stability of Military Vehicles," at the University of Iowa; "Bicontrol Control System," at the University of Mississippi (according to he CBS News, this project enalls teaching pigeons to place explostives in jet exhausts while the planes are on the runway); and "The Effects of Aqueous Aerosols (Mace?) on Atmospheris Processes," at the University of Missouri.

At UMass, Themis involves the engineering of deep-sea submersibles. UMass Themis researches materials used in the construction of submarine vehicles, undersea navigation, and propulsion systems. The claim has been made that the project, even though Pentagon funded, is not war research. However, it is obvious why the Pentagon is interested in research on submarine vehicles. At a conference sponsored by UMass Themis, Grumman Aircraft, Lockheed, and Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics, all leading war industries, were in attendance. One of the research projects done at UMass under Themis, on quiet operations of submersibles, was sold to the Pentagon because as the proposal said, "from a military standpoint, (the relevance of) the reduction of noise generated by a submersible is obvious when one considers the detection problem." All research done at UMass Themis goes to the Naval Weapons Center at China Lake, California. Clearly the claim that Themis at UMass is not war research is false.

The Coalition calls on students, faculty, staff to oppose war research at the University. War research not only supports the United States imperialists foreign policy, but destroys the University by impairing a vital aspect of the University, free and open inquiry. The University impairs its ability for unbiased inquiry by selling itself to the War Establishment.

A Worthwhile Gamble

This Friday night, November 21, at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, the 5th annual Las Vegas Night will be held. Gambling, entertainment and prizes will again be the order of the night at this "mock gambling casino" to be sponsored and run by the brothers of Alpha Phi Omega. This year the brothers hope to make Las Vegas Night sucessful than ever. As usual there will be Chuck-a-Luck, Craps, Blackjack, Roulette and many other game tables. At each game table there will be someone available to teach beginners the rules and strategies of the game. It will be up to each bettor toincreasehis winnings in "Las Vegas Night Money" in order to participate at the auction of prizes to be held at the end of the evening. These prizes are donated by the merchants of Amherst. The music of Joe White will provide the proper atmosphere.

A major feature of the evening will be the crowning of the Las Vegas Night Queen. She is chosen by the penny-votes cast, throughout the week, at the Las Vegas Night Queen's table in the Student Union Lobby.

The proceeds from the night are donated to charity.

Precisionettes March Undaunted In Norfolk University Rain and Mud

The Precisionettes, the UMass women's drill team, were invitec to perform at Norwich University's Regimental Weekend, November 7-9th. Saturday afternoon, inspite of rain and a mud filled football field, the Precisionettes performed at half time in the football game Norwich against Worcester Poly Tech. Marching to a modified version of the UVm football routine, their performance drew applause from the stands. This was the Precisionettes last performance of this semester. Now the Precisionettes will be working and concentrating on competition routines which are made up by the drill committee. Competition season begins next semester. In the past years, the Precisionettes have won many trophies from competitions at Bean Pot and Washington, D.C. and this year they hope to surpass their record.

Pssst! Would you be interested in a bank-job?

It's not a simple little caper.

And it's going to take the right people to make it work.

Bankers Trust has grown faster than any of the 10 largest commercial banks in the country. We now rank seventh in size, and we want to rank sixth, then fifth, and so on.

But we want to do this without becoming a rigid corporate monster.

So we need people who can step right in and contribute to the areas that concern us.

Areas like metropolitan, national and international banking; the management of personal and corporate investments; the economic problems of the minorities, and the growing crisis in the cities.

(What your major is isn't important. What you can do with it is.)

Which brings us to the way we feel about you, and the way we feel about ourselves.

Today, the old cliché about uncommitted youth is shattered. And in the pieces lay the ruins of another: the one about all bankers being stuffy.

Bankers Trust is not alone in the belief that this is the brightest generation yet.

We're anxious to meet you.

But just as important, we're anxious for you to meet us.

We might have just the plan you're looking for.

You'll find Post-Graduate work at Bankers Trust.

(You can arrange an on-campus interview through your Placement Officer. Or write to Mark Sicinski, 280 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017.)

Poverty is Easy to Talk About

Mrs. Victoria Delee, of the Dorchester County Freedom Association, was at UMass on November 1. She was here on an invitation from three people from the University who visited the county and saw the conditions under which the Black and Indian communities lived. These students are Nancy Lazarre; a doctoral candidate, Steve Moore, and Bob Davidson, both undergrads. Mrs. Delee's purpose here was to tell of the extensive poverty and racism that victimize the Black and Indian communities of the county and to gather funds for bond for herself and 27 Indians arrested in their attempts to legally integrate the predominantly White school system in Dorchester County.

A coalition has been formed here to establish a base of support for the people of the Dorchester County Freedom Association among the Afro-American Society, M.L. King Council, and the United Christian Foundation. The Poverty Committee of M.L. King Council is releasing a fact sheet on poverty today to coincide with a funds and commodity drive to begin this week. For information call: Ken Mosakowski, at 545-0648, or Carl Brown at 545-0648, 6-6262.

FUNDS AND COMMODITIES FOR DORCHESTER COUNTY, S.C.

NEEDED: All types of medicines including aspria, cold pills, vitamins; many cauldren in Dorchester County, especially on the Indian reservation, are now afflicted with colds and the flu.

NEEDED: High protein foods, canned or boxed: large boxes of fortified oat flakes, Total, Procust 19, powdered milk; canned meats, tuna fish, canned juices, Also, such convenience foods as spaghetti and canned soups.

NEEDED: Funds to retain the lawyer who is presently fighting for the civil rights of blacks and Indians in Dorchester County. This lawyer has not been paid. $1,000 would be good for a start.

NEEDED: Funds to sustain the Freedom School in Ridgeville. All Indian children are now located in the Freedom School and three teachers have arrived there from South Carolina State College. But these teachers must spend much of their time collecting funds simply to keep the school in operation.

MRS. VICTORIA DELEE AND THE PEOPLE OF DORCHESTER COUNTY NEED YOUR HELP!

WMUA. Some Reflections On November Moratorium

Tonight at 9 p.m. WMUA's "Focus" will offer "Some Reflections on the November Moratorium." Commentary will range from the peace march in Washington, D.C., to the aborted peace march in Ware, Massachusetts.

Tonight's program will also feature the kickoff of a week-long fund-raising drive for Dorchester County, South Carolina which is being conducted by the Martin Luther King Council's Committee on Poverty, the Afro-American Society, and the newly-formed Freedom Committee. Guests for this segment of the program will be Carl Brown and Steve Moore, both of the Afro-American Society and the Freedom Committee, and Bill Abbott of the Freedom Committee.

Interested persons are invited to tune in on "Focus" tonight at 91.1 FM.

Socialist Party Nat'l Secretary To Speak on "Coalition Politics"

Tonight the UMass chapter of the Young People's Socialist League (YPSL) will sponsor its first speaker of the year, Penn Kemble, national secretary of the Socialist Party. Kemble will speak on "Coalition Politics in the 1970's" in Thompson 102 at 8:30 p.m.

Kemble was the first chairman of the "new" YPSL which was reactivated in 1966 (Josh Muravchik the present chairman, is the second to hold that position). Kemble had served as the chairman of the New York City at-large SDS chapter; his chapter broke with the national SDS when it began to move toward pro-confrontationism, procommunism, and hostility to the liberal reform movements in the United States.

SDS searched for a new proletariat which could take the role Marx had foreseen for the working class and politically reactionary. First SDS looked to the blacks; then to the poor of all races; and then to the youth. Now a considerable section of SDS, namely the Worker-Student Alliance, has come full circle and is looking once again to the entire working class as the one and only instrument of change. What all SDSers agreed on was that American democracy is a farce, the electoral system is corrupt and controlled, the Democratic Party is hopelessly and permanently reactionary and capitalist, and that change must come through violent revolution.

In contrast to this way of doing things, the Socialist Party, and its youth wing, the YPSL, feel that no one group, in and of itself forms a majority, and that to carry out truly democratic change requires winning a majority. What they urge is a coalition of all the progressive forces in America: the workers, the poor, the blacks, the Mexican-Americans, the Puerto Ricans, and the other minority groups, the youth, the students and the teachers, the liberals, the progressive clergy - and the radicals. The SP/YPSL analysis holds that America is a democracy, that progress can be won through the electoral system, that the Democratic Party can be changed, and that violent revolution is both undesirable and impossible.

To the socialist, such as Penn Kemble, two things are obvious. First, this coalition must be brought about if we are to have change. Second, it will be a tremendously difficult and frustrating task, since the groups which should unite are often fighting each other. It is these difficulties, and possible solutions to them, that Kemble will speak on Monday night.

Frosh Top UNH, 14-0, In Muddy Grid Game

By DICK BACKER
Staff Reporter

Before 21,900 empty seats at Alumni Stadium Friday afternoon, a mud-covered and wet UMass freshman football team broke open a scoreless game with two second half scores and went on to defeat the New Hampshire frosh, 14-0. It was the last game on the Little Redman schedule, and the win brought the frosh season mark to 3-2.

Up until 15 minutes before kickoff, the rain had engulfed the UMass campus for an entire week. Field conditions prior to kickoff resembled the Florida everglades without the alligators.

The poor field conditions virtually eliminated the offense of both teams. Outside sweeps failed completely, and receivers were only able to run certain patterns without fear of falling down.

Strong inside running by Little Redman runners Ray Bouchard and Tibb Rockwell and a stout defense especially against the run were the key factors for the UMass victory.

The first half was a game of fumbles, penalties, dropped passes and which team could punt the best. At times it seemed that the offensive team would receive the punt, fall down three times and punt to the other team. All tolled there were nine punts in the first half.

New Hampshire displayed what little offense it had during the second period. A field goal attempt from the ten hit the cross bar, bounced in the air but out onto the playing field.

Two series later the Little Wildcat split end was all alone in the end zone as quarterback Jim Webb hit him with a 20-yard scoring strike. Fortunately the UNH halfback was caught for illegal procedure and the touchdown was nullified.

The UMass offense was unable to get untracked in the first half. Quarterback Brian Murray saw four passes dropped, two of which would have been good for touchdowns, and the Little Redman runners relinquished three fumbles.

The second half was an entirely different game. Paced by Steve Shubert UMass controlled the ball for 24 minutes of the 30-minute half and completely outplayed New Hampshire in every phase of the game.

Shubert, a New Hampshire all-state halfback, was the biggest Little Redman offensive weapon. While others were slipping and sliding in the mud, he was feinting right, going left and reversing field as he made the Little Wildcats look like little house cats on his punt returns.

Twice Shubert broke punts for long gainers only to be bumped out of bounds both times by the last man. In the third period he returned a UNH punt 15 yards to the visitors' 41. Rockwell and Bouchard, alternating dives and trap plays, brought the ball to the 23 where it was fourth-and-one.

Murray dropped back to pass, looking for Shubert, who broke to the sidelines and hooked in at the eight yard line. Murray connected with Shubert, who took the ball with his back to the defender and faked toward the sideline. The cornerback went for the fake, Shubert spun around, gave the defender a hip fake and pranced into the end zone as the cornerback just lay in the mud.

Early in the fourth quarter, Shubert set up another touchdown with a 10-yard punt return to the UNH 33. Rockwell drove to the 28 yard line; then Bouchard drove over center to the 15 for a first down.

On first down Murray kept to the 11. Bouchard, on second down, ran a counter play to the right and went in for the score.

Frosh coach Dave Kelley substituted freely after this, giving everyone a chance to play.

Other heroes for the Little Redmen were defensive end Doug Winslow and linebacker John Sperandro, who intercepted two passes. Shubert's final statistics were five punt returns for 105 yards, and one pass reception for 23 yards and a touchdown.

Redmen Trounce UNH, 48-7, for 5-0 Conf. Slate

UMass Ups Mark to 6-2; Sets New Scoring Record

By STEVE SHAMBAM
Staff Reporter

DURHAM, N.H. - UMass completely overwhelmed the hapless Wildcats of New Hampshire, 48-7, Saturday before 9,214 at Cowell Stadium. The win enabled the Redmen to close out their Yankee Conference schedule at 5-0 and brought their overall record to 6-2.

Statistics tell the whole story in this one. UMass' total offense amounted to 448 yards, 298 of them on the ground, while UNH could muster only 77 yards. In fact, a vicious Redman defense led by Bill DeFlavio and Dennis Collins, limited the Wildcats to minus nine yards rushing.

The 48 points gave UMass a new Yankee Conference scoring record of 194. This breaks the previous record of 181 set by UMass in 1963 during the Jerry Welchel era.

Pat Scavone and Mark Russell each had two touchdowns with Nick McGarry, Jerry Grasso and Ken Hughes each chipping in with singletons. Tim Adams had a good day in the air, completing 10 of 15 for 115 yards and one touchdown.

Surprisingly, this was still a ballgame at halftime with the Redmen holding a mere 14-7 lead as the gun sounded. Four fumbles and one interception hampered the Redmen greatly and kept them from scoring as much as they could have.

After losing the ball twice on fumbles by quarterback, Hughes and wingback Grasso, UMass finally asserted itself late in the first quarter with a 13-play 89 yard touchdown drive.

Grasso accounted for 48 yards in four carries as Hughes interspersed sweeps and inside runs with a short pass to tight end John Uiecki in leading the Redmen to a Pat Scavone score from three yards out off tackle. Dennis Gagnon's kick was perfect and UMass had a 7-0 lead.

SPOTLIGHT ON THE REDMAN DEFENSE - What can be said about a defense that holds its opponent to five first downs, minus nine yards rushing and only 86 yards passing? This photo answers all questions. UMass players swarming New Hampshire quarterback Bill Burdoch are Paul Toner(86), Bill DeFlavio(76), Bill Sroka(77), Curt Bristol (51) and Dennis Collins(43). (MDC photo by Ken Stevens).

UNH punted following the next series only to recover a fumble by UMass' Ed Sarno at the Redman 35. The Wildcats apparently didn't know a good thing when they had it however, and returned the ball two plays later as Dennis Collins recovered quarterback Bob Hopkins' fumble at the 41.

This comedy continued as five plays later, Tim Adams made a poor pitch out which Greg Kolinsky recovered at the UNH 34.

Following this, the teams exchanged three punts until UMass embarked on a seven-play, 57-yard drive midway through the second period to score what proved to be the winning touchdown.

The three big plays were a 12 yard Adams aerial to Nick Mc Garry for a first down at the UNH 44, a 17 yard Grasso run up the middle, and the final 19 yard Adams scoring pass to McGarry who was all alone in the end zone. Gagnon's PAT was perfect.

New Hampshire's only score was set up by cornerback Bob Kemp's interception of an Adams pass at the UMass 44. The play appeared to be a sideline pass but no one was there save for Kemp who ran it back to the three.

Three plays later, fullback Bob Nichols barged over left guard from one yard out for the score. Hampton Ballard's kick made it 14-7 and that's how they stood at the half.

In the first half, the Redmen did not appear to have the sharpness of execution which they had exhibited in earlier outings. This was probably a result of UMass' enforced one week layoff. To extreme skeptics, however, there was the possibility that if things didn't change, this could be a tough ball game.

UMass, however, changed things very quickly in the second half as 34 points turned the game into laughter. Coach Vic Fusia made good use of his three top quarterbacks as Adams, Hughes and Mike Marchev led the Redmen to five scores.

Steve Parnell set up the first one with a fine display of broken field running as he took the opening kickoff 41 yards to the UNH 34. Six plays later, Scavone busted off left tackle from the one for the third UMass touchdown. Gagnon made it 21-7.

Two plays after the ensuing kickoff, Bob Cabrelli picked off a Hopkins pass at the UMass 40. Adams engineered a 60-yard drive from there which culminated in a four yard TD run by Grasso. Gagnon missed on the PAT and the period ended at 27-7.

Early in the fourth quarter, Dennis Keating picked off another Hopkins pass at his own 40 andreturned it 11 yards to the UNH 49. Ken Hughes, after mixing runs by Dick Cummings and Mike Sawyer, took it in himself from the two on a fourth down play.

Marchev came in to direct the final two Redman scores on short drives as the inept Wildcats seemingly stood by and watched.

UNH second string quarterback Bill Murdoch fumbled at his own nine, Bill Bush recovering for UMass. Two plays later, Mark Russell scored from the four.

UNH could do nothing on the next series as UMass took over after blocking a John Kenney punt at the UNH 27. Russell scored his second touchdown five plays later on a two yard run. Gagnon's PAT made it 48-7 with only 24 seconds remaining.

Throughout the second Half, Fusia rested most of his frontliners in order to prevent injuries, perhaps with an eye towards next week's big game at Boston College. There was no efficiency drop, however, as the Wildcats could manage but two first downs in the half, none in the final stanza. UMass had 25 first downs for the game.

Grasso, with 95 yards, Cummings with 55 and Scavone with 54 were the top rushers for the Redmen. Dick Heavey at fullback was impressive however, as was Sawyer. Guard Pierre Marchando was outstanding. The list of superlatives could go on and on.

The Wildcats were expected to play a tough game but this expectation was never realized. The Redmen were just too strong, as they have been in other Conference outings.

Saturday's game was a good warmup for the big one coming up next week. Hopefully, the Redmen were able to get the kinks out at New Hampshire. They have been improving all year and BC could well be the toughest challenge yet.

Harriers Compete in IC4A Today

Having completed its dual meet schedule with a win over New Hampshire last Thursday, the U-Mass cross-country team travels to New York today for the annual IC4A Championships.

Entered in the IC4A are most of the schools in the East Coast Athletic Conference (ECAC), the biggest athletic conference in the NCAA.

Defending champion of the IC4A is Villanova. The Wildcats, who are also the defending national champions, are a heavy favorite to win their East Coast title.

A UMass team which finished fourth in New England will have to work hard to try and make the top 10 in the meet. A team which finishes in the top ten can compete in the Nationals which take place next Monday at the same course in the Bronx's Van Cortland Park.

Ron Wayne, the team's top harrier this season, placed 61st last year, but on a bad day. Coach Ken O'Brien feels Wayne can make the top 25. He also said that second man Leo Duart who placed 14th in New England, five spots behind Wayne, can make his way to the top 40. The coach also added, "I expect Larry Paulson will be pressuring Duart and (Tom) Derderian."

Fifth man Dave Evans, who placed 42nd in the New Englands, is hoping to crack the top 65. Evans, in explaining the different caliber of competition in the IC4A and New Englands said, "If you take your New England finish and multiply it by three, you can figure where you'll finish in the IC4A."

Bruce Blackburn, who ran well in the Boston race, the Redmen's fourth man, will hope to duplicate his performance in New York. Another sophomore, Steve Whicker, will be running in New York. He worked his way into the top seven because of his performance against New Hampshire.

The freshman team also will be in Van Cortland Park tomorrow, competing in the three-mile freshman race. The New England champs will be facing stiff competition from some good Eastern schools.

Coach O'Brien feels his team can make the top eight, but they are shooting for the top five. The frosh won the New Englands with 85 points which is a lot. Pointing to the 1967 frosh New England champs, Northeastern, the coach said, "They had a great team and scored only about 40 points in the New Englands but could finish only third in the IC4A."

In mentioning individuals, the coach said, "I think Tom Swain and Tom Jasmin can make the top five. I also think Rick Barry can place in the top 30. If we have a good day from fourth and fifth men Phil Riley and Mike Daly, we'll do alright."

UMass booters ended their season by defeating New Hampshire, 4-0, on Saturday. Story in tomorrow's MDC.

Patriots Bag Bengals, 25-14

CINCINNATI (AP) - The Boston Patriots took advantage of Cincinnati Mistakes, scored 16 pts in the last 2 1/2 minutes of the first quarter Sunday and handed the Bengals a 25-14 American Football League beating.

The Patriots picked off three of rookie quarterback Greg Cook's passes, recovered three of four Cincinnati fumbles and nailed Jesse Phillips in the Bengal end zone for a safety.

Boston put the game out of reach with 19 first quarter points, two fumble recoveries setting up a Gino Cappelliti field goal and a touchdown

Cappellitti kicked field goals of 11, 36 and 43 yards but missed four others from 33, 38, 43 and 45 yards.

Fullback Jim Nance, going over 100 yards for the second game in a row with 125, powered the Patriots strong ground game and Mike Taliaferro contributed the touchdown passes of 29 and 6 yds to Ron Sellers and Charlie Frazier.

Boston was full of defensive standouts as the Patriots picked up their second victory in the last three weeks for a 2-8 record and dropped the Bengals to 4-5.

Jim Cheyunski recovered one fumble and intercepted a pass, Clarence Scott recovered a fumble and blocked a punt by Horst Muhlmann and Daryl Johnson tackled Phillips for a safety and picked off a pass.

Cook, who went into the game as the leading AFL passer, threw 15 yards to Eric Crabtree in the second quarter for a touchdown, and Phillips ran three yards for the other Bengal score in the fourth period.

Cook's scoring pass was the first the Patriots had given up in the last five games.

Astronauts In Lunar Hold, Descent To Moon Next

By JOHN BARBOUR
Associated Press Writer

A crucial rocket firing came off perfectly - a six minute blast at 10:47 p.m. EST, fourteen minutes after the spacecraft passed behind the moon and out of radio contact with earth.

It wasn't until Charles Conrad Jr., Richard F. Gordon Jr. and Alan L. Bean rode the ship back around the moon and into radio contact again at 11:05 p.m. that the orbit was confirmed.

The firing put the Yankee Clipper and its fellow traveler Intrepid in an orbit ranging 71 by 194 miles over the moon.

Conrad's voice broke the silence as the spacecraft came out from behind the moon. "Yankee Clipper with Intrepid in tow has arrived on time," he said.

"I guess that just like everyone else who has just arrived, the three of us are plastered to the windows just looking," he added.

With the joy obvious in his voice, he evaluated the moon in the tradition of Navy men: "For naval troops, it doesn't look like a very good place to pull liberty, though."

The spacemen fired their rocket engine in the direction of flight to brake their speed and fall into lunar orbit.

The rocket firing was even more important than the same maneuver on Apollo 11 or other moon flights. Failure carried unique and tragic consequences.

Previous moon flights followed a "Free return" flight path, one that would permit only landings along the lunar equator, but which guaranteed an automatic return to earth after a looping turn around the moon.

But the flight path of Apollo 12 was altered two days ago to enable it to hit its target some 45 miles south of the equator in the moon's Ocean of Storms.

The new flight path required rocket power to brake its speed and put it in lunar orbit as did the old flight path. But it did not provide a free and automatic return to earth. Without rocket power to change its path, the spacecraft would have become marooned in the solar system in a long endless orbit around their home planet.

The astronauts were not totally dependent on the Yankee Clipper's big rocket engine to do the job. If it had failed, they had two hours to get into the lunar lander Intrepid and use its lunar descent engine to propel them back toward earth.

The astronauts ran into one problem Monday night, a reminder of the rainstorm that cut their electrical power during launch.

They were forced to cancel an early scheduled television view of the moon as they approached it, because of the sun's glare on the grime of the spacecraft windows was blinding. The windows are streaked with the residue of the rain that changed to ice during launch, much as an automobile's windows are left streaked by melting snow.

The combination of having to keep the spacecraft in one position to transmit the television signals, the angle of the sun and the dirty glass made television pictures impossible. It would not, said Mission Control, stop further television views.

John Nelson of the UM English Dept. discusses why the University should not conduct research for the Defense Dept. while UM President John W. Lederle listens attentively during the first of the series of war debates yesterday. The series continues today with two more debates. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

Afternoon Debate Focus, On War and University

By BERNARD BLAIN Senior Reporter

War and the University was the topic at the opening debate at the Student Union. The role of the University pertaining to was was analyzed in the first of four debates being held in response to requests by the Coalition. Modrating the debate was Cynthia Olken, V.P. of the Student Senate.

John Nelson opened the debate saying that he felt mankind was approaching 1970 by finding itself threatened. Nelson expressed this threat by pointing to our destructive capabilities.

A United Nations report on chemical and biological warfare shows that the United States and Russia have enough gases to destroy life on earth at least twice. They have plague germs for which there are no known therapeutic weapon. The U.S. has over 1000 land based ICBM's and 600 B-52s, and one B-53 carries more explosive power than exploded in any previous war. However, he remarked that the B-52s at Westover are unarmed.

The U.S. development of programs such as Safeguard and especially MERV (Multiple re-entry vehicle), which is clearly an offensive weapons system, demands that we ask, "How do we go on making and living with weapons whose only affect is genocide?"

John Nelson asked that the University discontinue military supported research, military recruiting on campus and ROTC and choose as alternatives research on peace and place an emphasis on humanism.

President John W. Lederle denounced all allegations that this university is dominated by the military although he is sure some institutions have gotten out of control. Pres. Lederle said a university is an "environment in which the freedom to choose is emphasized", and therefore, faculty members have the choice to work on war research if they desire.

Pres. Lederle declared that right now there is no classified or secret research going on at UMass and that government sponsored research is not necessarily war related research.

As Pres. Lederle sees ROTC, it is a voluntary program which can have intellectual content. However, he feels the question of academic credit is a nominal one, but ROTC is needed to ensure that the military is civilian dominated.

As to open recruiting, Pres. Lederle said that the University policy can't make distinctions between the Peace Corps and the Marine Corps. They have the same right to the access of students. If they did not, the University might find itself sued for violation of the law.

Evening

Student Senator Mark Smith, moderator of the evening debate, and Isadore Silva, UMass Business Dept., work for solution of the question of ROTC on campus.

Evening Debate Focus, ROTC at UM Campus

By RICHARD LANE Senior Reporter

"Should ROTC at UMass be abolished - an extremely relevant issue," was the subject of the second in a series of four public debates presented last night by the Coalition to "Get The War Machine Off Campus". A crowd of approximately 100 showed up for the debate held in the Student Union Ballroom.

Student Senator Mark Smith served as moderator of a four member panel consisting of William Wallace Ford and Peter Discenza (supporters of ROTC) and Isidore Silver and Robert Kentfield (opponents). Each member of the panel was allowed five minutes to state his argument, followed by rebuttal by another member of the group and then the audience was allowed a period of question and comments with the panel.

Speaking first was Student Senator Robert Kentfield who stated that the primary reason for the ROTC program is for "procurement of officers for the U. S. Military." And why officers? Kentfield continued. "They are needed for the military to make war," he declared.

"My argument is basically subjective. I refuse to have any institution which I am a part of support the military establishment," the Student Senator said.

Kentfield pointed out that both the military and the university, by supporting the war and ROTC, are not apolitical. "It just isn't true," he added.

Kentfield criticized pro-ROTC arguments such as the humanizing and liberal effect ROTC officers have on the military establishment as opposed to academy types and the angle of ROTC as an academic discipline.

"No one individual from the local ROTC department can combat this system. They must succumb to the values. The military exists for killing and you just cannot liberalize or humanize killing," the Senator stated. He also pointed out that ROTC produces only lower level officers and that the majority of military decisions are made by Pentagon officials.

Academically speaking, the ROTC program is "goal orientated toward war and war making," and consists of "indoctrination", he added.

Kentfield concluded his remarks to the sound of applause from the audience when he threw out the question, "Should the university allow students the freedom to learn to kill?"

Peter Discenza, an Air Force ROTC cadet spoke next saying that ROTC ad-

UMass ROTC Colonels Unable to Attend Debate

by SUSAN SNYDER and CYNTHIA BALCOM
Staff Reporters

Colonel Leon J. Friedman and Colonel George J. Connolly, Jr. of the Division of Military and Air Science have stated that they cannot participate in the current UMass debates "War and the University" concerning ROTC in their official capacities.

"If I were to participate, I would, as a member of the Armed Forces, be involved in the politics of the Vietnam War, which would be in contradiction to our country's military men's apolitical character," they said in a joint letter to the Daily Collegian.

Col. Fri Col. Friedman added in an interview that as a professional, he felt that he could not involve his profession with political activity. He said, "I'll not be the first to break tradition."

Col. Connolly commented that the apolitical nature of the military is one of the premises of American democracy in that the military is subordinate to civilian control. In this way, the civilian public is protected from military domination.

Col. Friedman has spoken before the Faculty Senate as well as the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate on the essential nature of ROTC. However, both men stated, in reference to the Vietnam War, "....it would be highly inappropriate for me, or for that matter, any man representing a military service to become publicly involved."

Following is a text of Col. Friedman and Col. Connolly's statement:

To The Editor:

It seems that it might be of help to the University community to know our reasons for not participating in the forthcoming debates concerning "War and the University."

Although the following memorandum is from the Department of Air Science, it sums up both our positions and we hope you will be able to print it.

"Dear Dr. Gluckstern:

"This is in reply to your memorandum of November 3 concerning the forthcoming debates. As you may be aware, I have been a participant in many discussions of ROTC both in meetings with interested campus groups and through letters and papers I have sent to members of our academic community. However, although I have given a great deal of thought to participating in the debates planned in conjunction with the November Moratorium, I find myself in much the same position as other members of the faculty with respect to what is essentially a political issue.

"If I were to participate, I would, as a member of our Armed Forces, be involved in the politics of the Vietnam War, which would be in contradiction to our country's military men's apolitical character. In addition, it seems that I may share with others in the academic community the same reservations to identifying an institution, the U.S. military in my case, with political activity.

"It appears that it would be highly inappropriate for me or, for that matter, any man representing a military service to become publicly involved.

"I would be grateful if you were to convey my thoughts and regrets to the group organizing the debates.

Trustees Adopt New Policy

(Ed. Note: The following statement was released by the Provost's office)

At its meeting of November 14, 1969, the Board of Trustees voted to adopt the following policy statement:

1. The Board of Trustees has sole authority under Section 3 of Chapter 75 of the General Laws to adopt, amend, or repeal rules and regulations for the government, management, control, and administration of the University.

2. The Board reaffirms its approval in principle of self-determination by residential halls of visiting hours and other visiting regulations providing adequate security plans are approved.

3. The Board reaffirms its understanding that the rules and regulations in the 1969-70 Student Handbook are presently in effect.

4. In view of some misunderstanding, no violation of visiting rules occurring prior to the publication of this statement of the Board will be subject to disciplinary action.

5. Liberalization of rules relating to residential hall visiting will be effective for each house upon the approval of the Provost of adequate provisions for security of person and property.

It is the intention of the administration to utilize the special student-administration review committee and the community relations boards recommended by the Student Senate in implementing the above policy. Any residence which desires to depart from the rules and regulations in the 1969-70 Student Handbook should submit a proposal to the Provost setting forth the contemplated changes and the proposed security provisions.

The plans will be reviewed in order of the date of receipt.

Afternoon Debate

A 1968 graduate of UMass, Claire Moriarty spoke next. She believed the University's function is anti-political because its structure has an intrinsic surge for truth, and she denounced people like Pres. Lederle because the University can't afford persons with his kind of naivete.

She went on to say that the exclusion of ROTC will not sacrifice academic freedom. ROTC is an institution which solves problems in a military way that is to win over the hearts and minds of the people or to beat them into oblivion.

She also questioned why we don't have communist courses taught by communists since we have military courses taught by military men.

The last speaker, Dean Seymour Shapiro, explained his personal feelings about what he thought the role of the University should be. He voiced the opinion that ROTC need not be on campus and that the reasons for its presence was because of some historical situation which caused students to want it. Now the students should decide if they want ROTC on campus.

However, he felt research was a different story. We can't say no to all research because even though it may be war related research, it may be important to society. As an example, he used the objective of noise limitation as stated in Project Themis as having not only defense implications but also, social ones.

Mort Appley, Dean of Graduate Students, announced the policy of UMass research in response to a question from the audience. He stated that no research will be done on this campus which involves the destruction of individual lives.

mittedly was "job oriented" but that so are other departments on campus. "One has the choice of taking it," he remarked.

"Would you rather have them (military officers) come from universities and colleges or the military academies? It's your choice," he concluded.

UMass faculty member and attorney Isadore Silver argued against ROTC through its curriculum which he called "one of the more pathetic attempts to make a profession of a craft."

Silver believes a lack of any theory in ROTC courses and too much "indoctrination" in such areas as "mission" orientation and rifle training cause military science courses to be intellectually "shoddy" and "inadequate."

Silver also criticized the argument that it is a student's right to take rotc if he so desires by saying that "What the student wants should not be the sole determinant of what the University should offer."

The final panel member to speak for ROTC was former Army General William Wallace Ford (presently a member of the UMass statistics - math dept.).

Ford stated that once one assumes the necessity of some kind of national defense establishment the question becomes whether or not the University should help to procure the needed officers. ROTC is an "organized method of securing these officers," Ford stated, "And I do not see that we can get along in the forseeable future without officers."

The retired general admitted that the ROTC program may need reform in such areas as curriculum and faculty selection but that "this can all be done."

Ford was critical of both Kentfield and Silver's positions because he said they touched only the areas of curriculum reform and the Vietnam war and militarism and that both points are "not germane to the issue" of whether or not ROTC should stay on campus.

During the question-comment period that followed the debate, some students wanted to stress that ROTC is tied in with the larger issue of militarism and the military-industrial complex. Kentfield agreed with this point by saying that "We can get at the problem through ROTC. This endless ration discussion has no effect - We must take action."

Gen. Ford disagreed, however, stating that, "You are trying to cure the military woes of the country by jumping on ROTC and this will not cure them."

Spy in Sky Says Soviet Rocket Explodes

LONDON(AP) - A British television newscast Monday night said the Soviet moon program has been crippled by the explosion of a giant rocket on a launching pad in last month's triple flight in space.

Science correspondent Peter Fairley of Independent Television News said wreckage of the Russian launching pad has been photographed by an American satellite. The broadcast gave no specific source for the report.

Fairley said the explosion prevented the Soviet Union's three Soyuz spaceships from building an orbiting space station on their week-long mission in October. The main element of the station was not launched, he reported, because of the destruction of the rocket that was to carry it.

This explosion, the report added, was at the Baikonur Cosmodrome in Kazakhstan on a new launch pad.

The rocket was reported to have a thrust power of 10 million pounds, more powerful than the American Saturn 5.

46 Years of Freedom End for L.A. Man

COMPTON, Calif. (AP) - "I hope that when I get to be 77 I'm as spry as you are," said policeman Dominic Rutigliano, making conversation to an elderly man after being summoned to a home because of a family argument.

The old man chuckled. "Oh, well," he replied, "I've led an active life."

"Oh, tell me about it," Rutigliano said politely.

As white-haired Leonard T. Fristoe related the story of his life, the policeman's interest grew. Fristoe paused.

"You better tell him the whole story," injected Fristoe's son, Claude R. Willis Jr., 39.

With only that much encouragement, Fristoe told a story he said he had kept secret for 47 years: of how he had gunned down three men, served 2-1/2 years of a life term in the Nevada State Prison in Carson City and then escaped... on Dec. 15, 1923.

He kept the secret from his wife, whom he married after his escape and who died in 1963. His son learned it when the father blurted it out during the family spat last Saturday morning that prompted Willis' wife to call police. Until then, the son said, he thought his father's name was Claude R. Willis, Sr. The spat began when Willis' wife told the older man to shave and he refused.

With Fristoe's disclosure, Justice of the Peace Pete Supera in Carson City signed a complaint Monday charging Fristoe with escape, a felony. Nevada authorities, who confirmed his identity, are seeking his extradition.

Fristoe told police in his Los Angeles suburb he was convicted of shooting to death two members of a posse who had been chasing him and another man in a stolen roadster. The pair had stolen "two rifles, 15 boxes of cartridges and a box of salt pork" from the company store of Fristoe's employer, Union Land and Cattle Co., Warden Carl Hocker of the Nevada State Prison said Monday.

After his escape, as a prison trusty, he traveled around in Mexico and California and was an oil worker in Texas in 1924 when he shot his boss, a man named Rowe, in a dispute over pay, Fristoe said.

He wandered up to Canada and became a migratory farm worker, worked as a mechanic in Chicago and New York and in 1927 married the former Gertrude Dodson of New York City, he said. He took the name Willis and adopted his wife's seven daughters from a previous marriage. In 1930 Claude was born.

At Old Orchard Beach, Maine, near Portland, he made $1 million running a bus line and hotel, Fristoe said. Then he sold out in 1945 bought a ranch in Wyoming and stayed until he suffered a heart attack last spring that left his left side partially paralyzed. At his son's urging, he moved to Compton.

Policeman Rutigliano said Fristoe told him he had felt "too embarrassed" to tell his son, with whom he was living, about his past. When Rutigliano asked the old man why he finally had decided to tell, Fristoe said simply, "I don't know."

Warden Hocker said that while there are no fingerprints of Fristoe on file, he was identified on the basis of marks and scars on prison records.

War Debates End Today

The series of four debates on "War and the University" involving students, faculty and administrators concludes with two final debates today.

This afternoon at 3:30 in the Student Union the third debate entitled "War and the University: Focus on Research" will be held. Associate Provost Robert Gluckstern will moderate. Speakers will include Sidney Finehirsh of the Coalition, Howard Gadlin of the psychology faculty, Charles Hutchinson of the electrical engineering faculty, and Guenther Levy of the government faculty.

The final debate "War and the University: Focus on Recruiting," will be at 8:15 tonight in Mahar Auditorium. Glen Gordon of the department of government will moderate.

The speakers: business school graduate student Michael Alcivar, Milton Canton of the history faculty, Gilbert Salk of the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council, and Stanley Young of the business administration faculty.

The public is cordially invited to all debates.

Metawampe Alive, Maybe

According to informed sources several clues have appeared at the MDC office and in the pages of the Collegian, leading to the inescapable conclusion that the great Metawampe is dead, and has been dead for the past year.

According to UMass psychologist S. Beast the psychological patterns developed in past issues point to this fact.

A source close to the original Metawampe has disclosed that Spiro T. Agnew is writing the column from the Collegian Washington Bureau.

Woodstock Rerun in N.H.? Student Group Says, Maybe

CANAAN, N.H. (AP) - A spokesman for a group of college students said Monday they are trying to organize an outdoor festival next May 9 in Canaan - similar to the gathering which drew hundreds of thousands to Woodstock, N.Y.

"We can make a million dollars and that's no exaggeration," said Frank Branca, who said he was speaking for about three dozen students from Canaan College and Colby Junior College. He said they hope to draw 100,000 persons.

Branca said the group already has reached agreement with the owner of the 75-acre Canaan fair grounds and has hired Boston theatrical agents to plan the festival.

However, he said, the fate of the plan hinges on whether the group can find a sponsor to underwrite the initial costs.

He said he is "pretty confident" the Coca Cola Co. will do it and is expecting a definite answer from the company over the Thanksgiving holidays.

Town officials said they and most residents opposed the idea but apparently have no way to stop the festival if it is sponsored by a private group on private property.

"We're waiting for a ruling from the attorney general on this matter," said Selectman Fred Bryson. "From reading the statutes, it doesn't look like there's much we can do about it."

Branca said the group wanted to avoid the problems of traffic congestion and sanitation and health hazards encountered at Woodstock through advance planning and by scheduling the festival for only 12 hours with six to eight musical groups.

He said the festival would have a theme catering to those interested in fun and "peace" but that the sponsoring students' motive is "a huge profit."

Attention Seniors

As a consequence of the recent change in the graduation requirements of the College of Arts and Sciences, some students have sought a late change in registration in a course which is no longer a requirement for their graduation. Some wanted a change to registration on a pass-fail basis, others wanted to withdraw without the grade WF. Both of these actions constitute exceptions to University regulations about registration and require approval of an academic dean.

The academic deans of the College of Arts and Sciences will, for a limited time, review requests for such a change of registration which have, as a decisive factor, the changes in graduation requirements. These changes were thoroughly publicized in the COLLEGIAN during the week of November 3-7. The guidelines for this review are:

(1) The student must be passing the course to withdraw without a WF.

(2) The student must have no other pass-fail course (except in Education) this semester to change to pass-fail.

(3) The student must have already completed the new requirement in the division of the course in which he wishes to change his registration.

(4) The petition must be filed in the CASIAC office on or before Wednesday, November 26th.

Go to CASIAC (153 South College) to initiate such a change of registration.

Fisherman's Players Perform At UMass Wednesday Night

The Fisherman's Players of Cape Cod will be performing the play, "Charlie, the Man with the Upside Down Eyes" in the Student Union Ballroom on Wednesday, November 19th at 4:00 p.m. and 8:00 p.m.

Under the direction of the Reverend Richard D. Waters, the players have gained an international reputation for well-produced thought-provoking drama. Although under the auspices of the Board of Missions of the New England Southern Conference of the United Methodist Church, they are in no way encumbered by doctrine. Racism, Vietnam, love, and alienation are dealt with in forthright and often shocking terms both through the script and through dramatic presentation.

"Charlie" is a play of today. It is a depiction of post modern man and his relationship to the new equasions of a new age. The critics have said:

"We witnessed widely vibrant humor interspersed with racking cynicism, pungent, witty discussions alternating with scenes of spiritual insecurity and deep pathos."

Cape Cod Standard Times "Mr. Waters' ideas. . . are powerfully presented in a performance that masterfully utilizes theater technique s with a skill seldom seen on the stage.

The Cape Resorter

Each performance will be followed by a discussion with Reverend Waters and the cast, as a final act.

Fine Arts
Acclaimed Amen Prints On Exhibit in Union

Currently on display in the Student Union Reading Room is a group of color woodcut prints by internationally-acclaimed artist Irving Amen.

The exhibit, open to the public through December 19, includes 35 outstanding graphics which may be purchased at prices ranging from $10 to $75. In addition, a selection of cards reproduced from the artist's work are available in packages of ten for $1.00. These uninscribed cards cannot be obtained commercially, and can be unique and beautiful holiday greeting cards, note paper, or gifts.

Irving Amen, born in New York City in 1918 and educated there and in Florence and Paris, is a celebrated sculptor and painter as well as a printmaker. He has exhibited in all major national and international group exhibitions in the U.S. and in Europe, Asia and Africa, and has been called "the visionary poet who does not forget that he also is a woodcutter and a designer." Amen's works exemplify "the brilliant and vigorous modern revival of the color woodcut."

The University community is encouraged to take advantage of this fine exhibit daily until 9:00 p.m., during which time students will be available to supervise purchases of prints or cards.

N.Y. School Plan Perils UMass Work

A proposed affiliation of UMass and an experimental New York City School district was threatened yesterday with the announcement of the city's Board of Education that it plans to abolish the district.

The controversial Ocean Hill-Brownsville District is one of three experimental districts in the city that would be merged into larger districts under a mandate of the New York State Legislature.

The board said, however, that the newly formed districts could decide whether or not they wanted to continue the experimental districts.

The plans are not final.

Public hearings on the redistricting plans for the entire city will be held Dec. 1 through 12, and the final district boundaries will be adopted and announced on Dec. 22.

The State law, says the new districts should take over on Feb. 16 of next year, but the Board of Education is attempting to have the date moved to July 1.

If the Ocean Hill-Brownsville Schools are not allowed to retain their existing programs, UMass School of Education officials say that it will be impossible to evaluate the effectiveness of the programs - thus wasting three years of time and effort.

Rhody McCoy, administrator of the Ocean-Hill-Brownsville School District, has attacked the plans to abolish the district on the basis that they are politically and racially biased.

Ocean Hill-Brownsville is now predominently Negro and Puerto Rican, and the composition of the proposed district that would incorporate it is the same.

Affiliation with the University of Massachusetts would involve the School of education in evaluation of existing educational programs and the development of new programs.

The School of Education already has affiliations with schools in Philadelphia and Temple City, Calif., and is now working on an affiliation proposal with a school in Washington. (Reprinted from the Daily Hampshire Gazette)

HEY!

The Five College Student Coordinating Board is looking for ideas and projects that will benefit students in the Valley. Like a coffeehouse that doesn't close along with the rest of Amherst, Northampton and South Hadley. With a jukebox or a record player. . .and maybe even a band occasionally. Just a place to rap, have something to eat or drink. The possibilities are vast. But we need student support for that. Or how about the availability of course lists at the other schools just in case you'd like to take a course outside of your own school. Or maybe you've got other ideas that may need a financial boost or a project you need people to help with. So maybe we can help. Try us.

Submit proposals, complaints, suggestions etc. to the Five College Student Coordinating Board c/o your local representative. . .or bring it up at one of our meetings, 301 Converse Hall, Amherst College at 7:00 P.M. on Thursday nights.

December Moratorium Set Grassroots Campaign Planned

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The peace movement, proud of two massive outpourings of antiwar sentiment in two months, turned its attention Monday to December and a decentralized Christmas Eve protest.

Unlike the large-scale gatherings of the young in October and November, December's activities will focus on community efforts and seek to get adults to take a more active role.

"Young people alone won't be able to stop the war," said Sam Brown, one of four coordinators of the Vietnam Moratorium Committee. "It will be necessary to build a coalition in the community."

The committee set the dates at Dec. 12, 13 and 24 for the next round of protests with the emphasis to be on public vigils, visits to veterans hospitals and military bases, shopping center rallies and town meetings.

Specific activities will be decided by local moratorium organizations.

"Traditionally Christmas has been a time when people turn their attention to "Peace on Earth," Brown told a news conference. "This year, in addition to turning their attention to 'Peace on Earth,' they will be asked to turn their energies to this task."

The 27-year-old Brown, who helped organize youth behind Eugene McCarthy's presidential campaign last year said the Moratorium Committee would deliver a Christmas present of thousands of cards and letters to President Nixon in a few weeks.

"The President offered 55,000 letters and telegrams as being evidence of a 'silent majority' in support of his war policies," he said. . "We have received more than that number of signatures calling for immediate withdrawal from Vietnam from Long Island alone."

Meanwhile, the other big anti-war group, the New Mobilization committee to End the War in Vietnam, sponsors of the Washington demonstrations, took a temporary backseat to the Moratorium Committee.

A New Mobe spokesman said the coalition of 100 peace groups will meet soon to decide its future course. He ruled out any mass demonstrations before spring.

Labor Secretary Opposes "Youth Wage" Below Fed. Min.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Labor George P. Shultz said Monday he would oppose any suggested "youth wage" below the federal minimum wage of $1.60 an hour.

Shultz' comment was made in a letter to AFL-CIO President George Meany, who had expressed concern about published reports that the Labor Department is studying a proposed special wage for youths under 21.

"The only study going on around here, relevant to your question about a possible youth wage, is one to determine to what extent, if at all, the minimum wage is responsible for the high rates of unemployment among youth," Shultz said.

Secretary of Commerce Maurice Stans had said earlier that the Labor Department study was aimed at determining whether a lower wage of $1.20 or $1.25 an hour might lead to more hiring of youths.

"I have made no policy decision to recommend a youth wage at all, and I would oppose any youth wage figure below the existing statutory minimum of $1.60 per hour for all persons in covered industries," Shultz said in his letter to Meany.

Meany had said in a letter to Shultz that he found it unbelievable that the Labor Department could be considering a lower wage for youths than the federal minimum.

Stans had said he favors such a lower wage to help provide more jobs for youths. AFL-CIO sources had said earlier they feared a lower wage would cause layoffs of adult workers and the hiring of youths to replace them.

FASHION
Unisex Reflects Social Changes

Fashion Scene: It's all for 1 and 1 for all! The phenomena of UNISEX finds men and women appearing as grown up sets of Bobbsey Twins, 1969 version! Their look-alike ensembles from head to toe reflect a changing dimension of dress code and sexual mores.

Men and women are shopping together. They share the same dressing room, enjoy the same fashions and buy the same clothes. The clothes are monosexual, interchangeable, and appropriate for either men or women. Silk ruffles, beads, bangles, curly coiffures, tank tops, handbags, and printed bell-bottoms are all part of the UNISEX trend.

Where did it all begin? Some claim it all started in the Army-Navy stores. Now the body boutiques promote the UNISEX fashions. Some of the well known boutiques are The Different Drummer, Limbo, Experiment I, and Noah's Nook (two of each kind are found here). Combining youth, imagination, and a laughing look at life, the shops have become big business.

Though the theories behind the fashion trend are many and varied, all agree that basically, UNISEX modes of dress are an expression of the times, a unique era. Italian designer, Litrico, theorizes that contemporary men and women have "wonderful relationships other than sexual. They enjoy great friendships, work side-by-side, and have intellectual discussions." No longer does man consider himself superior. Women are often their professional equals. Presumably, according to Litrico, men have become timid in expressing love to career women. The monosex clothes have become the common meeting ground. Litrico's idea is that bisexual clothes pull the sexes together in a world which tends to separate them.

Dr. Ralph Greenson, University of California psychiatrist, says that contemporary males and females of all ages seek the friendship of a "twin" rather than a lover.

"They are secure only with someone who resembles themselves." As a result, male and female roles are disappearing and identity is blurred.

Seen as a pacifist desire by Dr. Joel S. Bernstein, assistant professor of psychology at the Fashion Institute of Technology, he says "they want to identify with a passive, non-violent character, which is a product of their own desire not to be involved in war."

TONIGHT

OPINION:

11:00 P.M. News

I sat and watched the evening news on television Saturday night for the first time in a long time. The image I received was America, very scared and very confused.

At a time of massive peace demonstrations in Washington and San Francisco, the government and media are attempting to divert public attention to the bread and circus moon shot. The date of this particular space adventure had been moved up to November 15th, and the launch was made in poor weather, in rain, which is something NASA has never done before.

This second moon shot, at a time when the country needs more than to solve or attempt to solve its own problems, minor things, like imperialism, racism, pollution, dying cities, and overpopulation, provides a strong contrast between our needs and what the government and industry are doing (not doing) to meet those needs.

Nixon is nothing more than a public image and a poor one at that! The media tried to draw attention to the fact that Nixon was carrying on "business as usual" in the White House on Saturday. What they couldn't leave out were the pictures of the cordoned off streets and armed guards surrounding the White House. "Business as usual?"

To survive and to permit the rest of the world to survive, this country needs some changes, some vast far reaching changes. I don't believe boring stereotyped news analyses anymore. This country's emphasis must be changed from one of death and profits before people to one of life and freedom. I will not watch any more newscasts until I can be sure I will be told truth.

MY OWN TRIP

A Challenge

By JON GERARD

PROPOSAL: FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A WORLD GOVERNMENT THAT WOULD BRING ABOUT THE END OF WAR, THE PERFECTION OF SOCIETY, AND THE ULTIMATE IMPROVEMENT OF MANKIND.

The essential step toward achieving the prophesized Kingdom of Heaven on Earth, the Messianic Age, is no more difficult or easier than a restructuring of the United Nations. After a new structure was decided, the leader of this organization would be the true leader of the world. All nations would work together within this structure as the individual united states work together under our federal structure to maximize use of natural and human resources in our continuing effort toward the asymptotic goal of perfection. The major reason we in the United States have failed to make much headway in our mission is that we are constantly being distracted and resources are continuously being directed toward, destructive external factors (Vietnam, the Middle East, Biafra, ad infinitum) which could never exist under the proposed system. Like the new United States, the world would finally be free to solve its problems.

Obviously, all nations would have to come together to decide on the type of government they wanted, but for this proposal, let us, solely for the sake of example, imagine a structure similar to that of our own federal government. The United Nations would contain two legislative houses made up of popularly elected representatives from every nation. In one house each nation would have equal representation, in the other, representation would be based on population. The head of the organization could be elected by members of the two houses or by popular vote, or first by the former and then by the latter after a predetermined degree of literacy existed in the world community (giving the "educated nations" a vested interest in schooling the "uneducated"). The length of the terms of these offices could be determined by the constitutional committee. Finally, a supreme court of the world would exist one step higher than the highest judicial body of each nation. It might deal only with major issues affecting the entire world community allowing each individual nation to maintain its identity, laws, and customs while adhering only to broadly defined principles of human understanding established by this greater court and operationalized by the world legislature.

Imagine collecting taxes from Scarsdale, Newton, or Shaker Heights to pay for education in Ecuador or for land development in Arabia. Imagine a single economic system where trade flowed freely among nations, where every one counted the same way (though still in their own language), where each land's natural resources were used in the most efficient way possible toward the betterment of society, where poverty, disease, ignorance were the common enemies fought by a world community banning together in a positive way, yet where all problems and projects unique only to certain lands would still be dealt with solely by the people of those lands.

Imagine, all wars would be civil wars. But no wars could exist, for, by seceding from the world organization (which a warring land would automatically do), a people would stand alone against every other nation in the world. It would gain none of the benefits of total world cooperation. Such a loss would make no war worth the slightest thought.

Without war, without surpluses in some nations and famine in others, without a competitive world market (but with a cooperative one) without conflicting political ideologies (but with a mutual respect for each others' system), the peoples of the world could finally concentrate their efforts on all the positive progress that has so far been so slow in establishing itself in the four thousand years of civilization.

How long would it take to write out the specifics of such a system? I could probably do it with some friends over the course of an all-nighter. The Student Senate might take a few months. The U.S. Congress might take a year or more to come up with something worth proposing. So what if it takes a world body ten years, or even a generation to write it and three more to put it into operation. A hundred years isn't really so much time for such a step compared to the four thousand years it's taken us to get where we are now. It merely depends on how much we really want what such a system would give us.

"You Have Just Heard A Speech By The President Of The United States . . ."

ART BUCHWALD

Nixon Is Safe

WASHINGTON - Despite rumors that have been rampant in Washington in the past few months, I can now reliably report that Vice President Spiro Agnew has no intention of dumping Richard Nixon in 1972. A spokesman for the Vice President told me that Agnew was very satisfied with the job his President was doing, and that he even intended to give him more responsibilities than any Vice President has ever given his President before.

The spokesman said, "I have been authorized to say that Vice President Agnew is proud of Mr. Nixon and feels the President has been a tremendous help to him in taking some of the Vice President's awesome burdens off his shoulders. Despite criticism of Mr. Nixon's speeches, Mr. Agnew has no intention of asking to see copies of them in advance."

"How does Mr. Agnew intend to make fuller use of his President?"

"The Vice President has urged the President to get more exposure. For example, last week Mr. Agnew sent the President up to Capitol Hill to thank Congress for its support on the Vietnam issue. The Vice President has issued orders that President Nixon be briefed on every important decision that Mr. Agnew makes. He has made Mr. Nixon feel he is one of the family.

"But," I asked, "when President Nixon speaks out as he has been doing lately, is he speaking for himself or for the Agnew Administration?"

"The Vice President sees Mr. Nixon's role as that of a missionary to explain the Administration's policies and to seek support for them. The President fills a basic need, touching on subjects that the Vice President of the United States is in no position to discuss. Also, by turning over to President Nixon such day-to-day chores as Vietnam, disarmament, inflation, the urban crisis and the Middle East, the Vice President can devote himself to the important issues the country is interested in, such as moratoriums, students, snobs and intellectuals and the coverage of TV news."

"It has been bandied about that Mr. Agnew chose Mr. Nixon as his President to win the South. Is there any truth to this?"

"Absolutely none. Mr. Agnew chose Mr. Nixon because he considered him the best man for the job. Agnew's so-called Southern strategy has been made up by a handful of elite TV commentators who are prejudiced and opinionated. The Vice President is not interested in politics. His only concern is what is best for the country."

"Does it bother the Vice President that sometimes President Nixon gets bigger headlines than he does?"

"Never. Vice President Humphrey was always angered when President Johnson took the spotlight away from him, but Mr. Agnew feels there are enough headlines for everyone. Also, he believes that the more he gives President Nixon to do, the less the President will feel left out of things.

"The Vice President not only took Mr. Nixon with him to Cape Kennedy for the moon shot, but made sure the President was seated next to him in the grandstand so Mr. Nixon could share some of the glory."

Campus Comment

Where was Everyone?

To the editor:

After participating in the moratorium today, I was dismayed at the lack of enthusiasm and interest. Maybe thirty people showed up to canvass and less than two hundred took part in the candlelight service on the Common.

Where were the six bus loads of people going to Washington, TODAY? Where were the 1,960 students who voted no on the referendum, TODAY? Where were all the people who walked around the campus these last few weeks proudly displaying their moratorium buttons, TODAY?

I must admit, I am disillusioned and confused. For the first time I am beginning to think that a good many of my fellow students who are making the trip to Washington are doing it for "a good time" . . . so they can say, "Yeah man, I was THERE!"

But please, we needed you HERE! We needed you this morning when in Belchertown, the owner of a stationary store told one of our workers to get out of the entrance to his store and then put up such signs in his window as, "The only good peace marcher is a DEAD ONE." These people must be reached, and only thirty of us could not do an adequate job.

Maybe I'm being idealistic, but I'm hoping that the December Moratorium will have a better turnout. It is not an easy job trying to explain to people who really don't want to listen, why you oppose the war. It is not pleasant to be called a "dirty hippie" by people who can't spare five minutes to read the material you are handing out. And it is especially discouraging to come to the realization that this narrow-minded attitude prevails throughout the country. But, if for every ten people you encounter, you can get one person to stop and say, "wow, I never thought of that aspect before", your efforts are not in vain.

I think a verse from a song I once heard could sum up my feelings and those of the other workers for the Moratorium adequately:

"Give me peace when there's talk
of war, when it's hard to find,
Give me peace when there's talk of war, I've got peace on my mind.
For, peace is sweet, most any time and yet,
Give me peace when there's talk
of war, HOW EASY WE FORGET!"

SBA Reform

To the editor:

It is time for students of the School of Business Administration to take an active hand in determining the nature of their education. The direction and success of most business courses now depends on the enthusiasm and originality of only the TEACHERS. While many professors have circulated course evaluation questionnaires, the faculty has been slow to respond to student suggestions such as the improvement or elimination of Computer Science 121, Faculty attempts to revise courses emphasize the correction of isolated faults in unrelated courses. Instead, student concerns for independant study, interdisciplinary and problem-oriented programs criticizing the business community, should be reflected in new course proposals initiated by students.

Business students should question their existance within the academic university community if their only function is to serve as "profit engineers." At last weekends SWAP Conference examining problems and inovations within the University, SBA was pitifully underrepresented by one teacher and two students. This underscores the lack of progressive educational techniques currently being experimented with by the business school. What is needed is educational reform.

All courses should use AT LEAST one day a semester to relate the subject material to the social problems facing students upon graduation. The Business School should objectively evaluate business policies and the military-industrial complex, proposing alternatives which students could bring with them into the business world. Feedback to the faculty should exist in the form of frank teacher and course evaluation critiques which would be made available registration day to all business students.

A meeting is planned to deal with student involvement in influencing the future direction of the School of Business Administration. Interested students will meet in Rm. 1 of SBA Thursday Nov. 20, at 4 p.m. If you are concerned with the above issues or want to air any student grievances, please plan to be there.

My wife and I thank the Martin Luther King Council for its work in organizing and carrying out the University of Massachusetts participation in the Washington Peace March on November 15th. The sense of responsibility, the efficiency, the commitment to peace and above all, the gentleness of spirit shown by the members and leaders of the Martin Luther King Council were remarkable. People of any generation should be proud to walk with them.

UMass Crowd Control A "Burning Issue"

By JOHN STAVROS
Tuesday Issue Editor

Crowd control policy has been in effect at the University for several years and yesterday was described by Colonel John C. Marchant, Director of University Security, as trying to use a "garden hose" to stop a fire, unless additional manpower is supplied from outside University Security.

Marchant explained that a mass disturbance policy was created several years ago because of the experiences with the waning panty raid and massive snowball fights. This was the origin of the crowd control measures the University now employs although today it is often applied to the more serious matters of protest marches and demonstrations.

"The procedure," he stated, "goes into effect between the Office of the Dean of Students and Security, or vice versa." When a disturbance is reported to one, the other is informed immediately, while the dean's representatives or area coordinators are dispatched to the scene, he continued.

After arriving at the area of disturbance, the representative places a call directly to Security to inform that office of the situation. "Depending how serious the matter is, we jointly decide whether to dispatch a cruiser to the location merely to stand on the outskirts of the disturbance," Marchant said.

"Generally we let the administration handle it. But, if the first report is serious enough, we do call off-duty policemen and let them know they might be called."

PICKETING CODE: THE DOW SIT-IN

Concerning the origin of the administration's handling these matters, Marchant referred to the picketing code and specifically to statement 4 which reads, "The procedure to be followed by the President of the University or his designated representative in the event of violation of the standards set forth above are..." Marchant stated this is the rule giving the president the authority in any matters of disturbance.

He went on to explain the "Dow Bust" when the administration called police to a Whitmore sit-in. He said it was up to the president to decide what to do. "With the size of our security force being small, one man has been added in the last three years, it does not allow us to efficiently handle the situation, he said. In the Dow situation, Marchant replied, the consultation between Security and Administration led to the decision to call in State Police. Perhaps it is getting ready for the worst, he said, but it was an attempt to adequately and efficiently take care of the situation. It wasn't a question of right or wrong to Marchant but merely the fact that the situation called for the removal of people who would not leave a building when asked to do so.

ON THE OUTSIDE

Relations between the Amherst Police and University Security remain "informal", according to Col. Marchant. "In this respect, I wouldn't be able to comment on the demonstrations held during the Moratoriums. I imagine they followed the general procedure of alerting the police and merely attempting to keep the peace."

THE SPORTING CROWD

Football games, on the other hand, can attract a gathering of 15-20,000 during a relatively short period. And, regarding security, Marchant explained that it is necessary to provide officers just to direct traffic, and enforce the general law that people can do what they want so long as it does not bother others.

"Because the stadium is in Hadley, we ask the Hadley Police to be there to assist," he said. Marchant also explained the deputy's men, the officers dressed in the green attire of the sheriff's department are there to attain the needed manpower. "We attempt to put on all available personnel and must request some outside help to do the job," Marchant said. About 35 serve at each game.

SECURITY IN SEASON

With the temporary police force increasing and decreasing in number, as needed, Col. Marchant was asked to outline cases in which more officers are called for police duty. He stated, "Of course, we have our seasons, like Spring, when the general population gets a little restless. Winter Carnival also brings large crowds to the University. That's when the old grads return to the good old life and begin to carry on a little."

Generally, the extra men are brought to the University only when the sheer numbers of people demand the presence of a security force.

In retrospect, Col. Marchant expressed the opinion that the University Security attempts to handle the situation with the interests of all involved. Concerning the larger demonstrations that get out of hand or the potentially explosive situation, Marchant described the University Security position in a nutshell: "It's hard to put out a fire with a garden hose."

South Viets Accuse GIs In Slaying 567 Civilians

TROUNG AN, South Vietnam - A group of South Vietnamese villagers reported yesterday that a small American infantry unit had killed 567 unarmed men, women and children as it swept through their hamlet on March 16, 1968.

They survived, they said, because they had been buried under the bodies of their neighbors.

The villagers told their story in the presence of American officers at their new settlement, which lies in contested territory less than a mile from the ruins of their former home.

The officers refused to comment pending the outcome of an Army investigation into charges of murder against 1st Lt. William L. Calley Jr., 26, of Miami.

A squad leader in the Lieutenant's platoon, Staff Sgt. David Mitchell, 29, of St. Francisville, La., has also been charged in the case, with assault with intent to murder.

In Washington, a spokesman for the Army said yesterday it would have no comment, in accordance with American Bar Association standards on pretrial discussion.

Capt. James Bowdish, attorney for Mitchell, said in Houston that estimates of 400 to 600 dead went "far beyond" any estimate he had heard.

"Sing Choirs of Angels" Attempts Form Of Novel and Collection of Stories

Amherst, Mass. -- "Sing Choirs of Angels," a new book by George Cuomo of the UMass English department, was published Friday by Doubleday.

The author is a professor at the University of California in Hayward on leave as visiting professor in the creative writing program at UMass.

His new book is a collection of thirteen related stories designed to be read as a unified book.

The author describes the volume as an attempt to work in a form that lies midway between a collection of stories and a novel. "The stories were written to make a book that would have a shape and and organic unity," Cuomo said.

The stories are all about people in some way connected with a large men's store in New York City. The main character, Tom Bollington, the store manager, appears throughout and is seen with his wife, his daughters, his one-time lover, and his employees.

The longest work in the collection, "A Part of the Bargain," has already achieved considerable recognition. It was a major prize winner in the Bantam-Esquire story contest, was first published in Bantam's "Stories for the Sixties," and has since been anthologized and produced as an hour-long TV drama on the Kraft Suspense Theater.

GEORGE CUOMO

Other stores have been published in Story Magazine, Antioch Review, and other literary magazines.

The stories represent a variety of styles and moods. "Sophisticated Lady" is the tale of a poised and attractive woman's encounter with a sinister comedian. "Exactly What do You Want, Lady?" describes the reaction of the men in the store to a strangely motivated black woman who appears to them almost as an apparition. The title story, "Sing Choirs of Angels," is about the bizarre consequences of a visit to a health spa by the manager's wife. "A Real Good Price" concerns a young man's revenge for having been pushed around all his life.

Cuomo is the author of three novels: "Jack Be Nimble" (1963), "Bright Day, Dark Runner" (1964) and "Among Thieves" (1968). The last, a long novel that deals with the psychological causes and results of crime and prisons, was the August 1968 Selection of The Literary Guild of America.

Gluckstern Appointed As Associate Provost

Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, head of the UMass department of physics and astronomy, has been named associate provost at UMass, according to Provost Oswald Tippo.

Physics Professor Leroy F. Cook, named acting head of the department of physics and astronomy will replace Dr. Gluckstern.

A graduate of the City College of New York, Dr. Gluckstern received his Ph. D. in physics from Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1948. He then held Atomic Energy Commission post-doctoral fellowships at the University of California and Cornell University.

Before coming to UMass as professor and head of the physics department in 1964, Dr. Gluckstern was an associate professor of physics at Yale University.

An outstanding research scientist, physicist and teacher, Dr. Gluckstern is the author of over 60 publications. He is a specialist in the fields of theoretical and high energy physics, and is an authority on high energy particle accelerators. He is principal investigator of an NSF grant to support his research as well as two other grants to support projects in the department of physics and astronomy.

Dr. Gluckstern served as consultant to the Physical Science Study Committee in the preparation of its now widely used high school physics text. Currently he is a consultant to Brookhaven National Laboratory, Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory and the National Accelerator Laboratory on problems in accelerator theory.

In his new post, Dr. Gluckstern will have primary responsibility for academic budgets and allocation of academic resources.

ROBERT GLUCKSTERN

A UMass faculty member since 1965, Dr. Cook is the author of 18 major scientific papers. He is presently co-principal investigator on a $55,000 National Science Foundation grant on theory of elementary particles.

Dr. Cook holds B.A., M.A., and Ph. D. degrees from the University of California at Berkeley and is a specialist in high energy theoretical physics.

Helio Super Courier Touches Down For Public UMass Demonstration

Wednesday, November 19, the University community will have a unique opportunity to view first-hand one of the newest innovations in aviation. A Helio Super Courier STOL (short take-off and landing) aircraft will touch down on the field just west of Alumni Stadium at 11:00 a.m.

The public is invited to witness the landing and to participate in an inspection and discussion of the new aircraft with Helio representatives from 11:00 through 2:00 p.m. A lecure will be presented on the unique design procedure of the STOL, which can land and take-off clearing a 50-foot obstacle within 660 feet.

The STOL is a highly sophisticated aircraft for general aviation. The Helio Super Courier seats six passengers.

The exhibition is being sponsored by the UMass Student Chapter of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics (AIAA). Mr. Duane Cromack, Assistant Professor of Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering, advises the group. The Collegiate Flying Club will also participate.

The plane, flying in from Hanscom Field in Bedford, Mass., is coming to UMass courtesy of the Helio Aircraft Company and was arranged through Mr. Robert DeVine, Director of Engineering for Helio Courier.

Modular Courses Offered In School of Education

UMass is trying a new way to free the learning process from the traditional classroom-credit hour structure.

Something called modular credit experiences is being offered this year to UMass undergraduates by the UMass School of Education. These are shorter, diverse learning experiences, in and out of the classroom, organized in new ways.

The main aims of the module idea are "to move away from the standard 16-week, three credit course" and "to legitimize education taking place out of the classroom," according to Philip Christensen, graduate student assisting in the program's development.

Here are some examples of this year's modular credit experiences: teaching and tutoring at the Northampton jail, editorship of a single issue of the School of Education publication, a two-day marathon training program in human relations, a one-hour introduction to the UMass remote terminal computer system, a brainstorming seminar on alternatives to the reading establishment.

These and a variety of other educational experiences are evaluated on a scale that assigns one credit module for approximately two hours of learning. Fifteen credit moduls equal one academic credit hour, 45 modules being the equivalent of the typical three credit classroom course.

This year, undergraduates are limited to 45 modules or three credits. The remainder of their semester's credits come from conventional classroom courses.

A cultural experience section of the module system is limited to education majors only. These students, on their own word, will be given one credit module for an event listed on the Five-College Calendar. This is the joint calendar of events for the University and its four neighboring private colleges -- Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith.

Umpiring the system is MAC -- the Modular Arbitration Committee. It has two faculty members, one graduate student and one undergraduate, with Earl Siedman, assistant dean of the school, as ex-officio member. MAC's job is to develop guidelines and evaluate and approve modular offerings. Evaluation of the students' work in the modular experiences is by the instructor concerned, with grading on a pass/no record basis.

"The current goal is to work within the present credit system by making it more flexible and more responsive to learner needs," according to Christensen. "An ultimate goal is to help produce an educator who is a reasonably well-rounded person with a diverse range of experiences.

Perfect Champs Savor Beanpot

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Assistant Sports Editor

Mindful that they were already the Yankee Conference champs but desiring to be perfect champs, the UMass football team rode over New Hampshire, 48-7, on Saturday to complete a 5-0 Conference season.

In the words of head coach Vic Fusia, "We won the Conference, that was our objective. Our job Saturday was to win it as a champ and we did it."

The Redmen couldn't get untracted in the first half as five fumbles prevented them from assembling more scoring drives. Fusia commented, "The most prized possession is the football and, when you give it away five times, it's not the best thing in the world."

Fusia also hinted that the Redmen might have found it harder to get "up" for the Wildcats. "There isn't concentration there otherwise might be if the competiton was greater."

Fusia pointed out that, in the second half, there was more sertousness expressed by UM as it led by only seven points, 14-7. The Redmen got the second half kickoff and promptly marched to paydirt in six plays. They got possession of the ball seven more times and scored on four of those occasions.

In getting the attack rolling properly, the visitors were directed by the deft play-calling of quarterbacks Tim Adams, Ken Hughes and Mike Marchev. Adams led three drives while Hughes and Marchev each sparked two mar-

SIDELINE SCRIBBLES - UMass set a record for the most points scored against Conference opponents in one season with 194 . . . The previous record was held by the '64 Redmen who tallied 181 . . . The Yan-Con record for average yards gained per contest was also broken by the Redmen as they eclipsed the previous mark of 411 yards per game established in '65 by guess who . . . One additional record, that for most touchdown passes caught in one season by a UMass player, was tied when tight end Nick McGarry caught his fifth ches which is the exact situation as occurred in UMass' identical 48-7 win over Vermont two weeks ago.

While the offense rambled particularly well in the second half, the defense was impregnable all afternoon. The only Wildcat score was the result of a mistake by the Redman offense. Any big gainers by UNH came only in infrequent spurts.

The statistics speak for themselves. New Hampshire registered only five first downs, gained but 86 yards through the air and minus nine yards on the ground. Outstanding on defense were Paul Toner, John MacLean, John Sabulis, Bill DeFlavio, Dennis Collins, Bill Sroka and Bob Cabrelli. TD in the second quarter . . . Jerry Graseo had an outstanding game rushing as he picked up 95 yards in 12 carries . . . New Hampshire has a very lively and vibrant set of cheerleaders, who put on a better show for the home folks than did the Wildcat football team . . . The high point of the first half was a small outbreak of emotions which occurred early in the first quarter right after Redman guard Pierre Marchando administered a clean-smashing shot to a UNH player who was trying to find the handle on a loose football . . . UMass' Mark Russell has now scored three touchdowns in two games which is worthy of note considering that his playing time in both of these affairs has been limited to the fourth period . . . The Redmen displayed good reserve strength at kicker . . . In the fourth period soph John O'Neil got off a 53-yard punt which danced out of bounds on the UNH three, an excellent coffin-corner kick . . . Moments later Hughes kicked off for UMass, with his high boot traveling all the way down to the Wildcat three . . . The Beanpot, one of the fruits of Redman grid efforts this fall, still lingers in the New Hampshire trophy case anxiously waiting its transfer to Boyden . . . UMass has yet to lose on the road this year and, in away games, has outscored its opponents, 139-30 . . . UMass' last game, also away, is next Saturday against the Eagles of Boston College.

BIG TICKETS (Tickets?!?) - Plenty of tickets are still available for the UMass-Boston College football game scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 22 at 1:30, price of the ducats is $4 and they can be purchased in 252 Boyden through Friday, if they last that long.

Riflemen Beat Brown & URI

The UMass rifle team travelled to URI to defeat their New England division rivals by 1312 - 1251. Earlier last week the riflemen had trounced Brown by 250 points 1322 - 1152 and thus the UMass team has a 3 - 0 start on which they hope will be their second straight unbeaten season.

The riflemen have fallen below full team strength often members during the past few weeks and although they are still winning easily, extra marksmen are needed to fill in the lower slots. Any upperclassmen who are experienced target shooters and wish to join a winning UMass team are invited to try out at the rifle range (Dickinson Hall basement) any Tuesday or Thursday evening 6 to 8 p.m.

After three matches Captain John Lacouture leads the team averages with an excellent 269 but hard on his heels are fellow teammate senior Dud Darling with 268.3 and the team's most improved marksman, junior Dave Craig with 266.6.

Last year these averages would have placed the three Redmen 1st, 2nd and 5th on the all New England top ten list.

INCREDIBLE NEW EXCITEMENT ON DECCA RECORDS

Wayne, Duart Qualify for NCAA in IC4A

Ron Wayne and Leo Duart qualified for the National championships in yesterday's IC4A Championship Meet, as they lead the UMass harriers to a twelfth place finish in a 22 team field.

The Redmen were the second team from New England to finish, as UConn, the New England champs placed fifth. UMass however, outscored Providence and Holy Cross who had beaten them in last week's New Englands.

Villanova, with 60 points, won the team title for the fourth straight time. Art Dulong of Holy Cross took top honors for the second time in his three varsity seasons, as he breezed to victory in 24: 06.8 on a ruggered five mile course. Dulong missed his own record which he set as a sophomore by two seconds.

Wayne, who finished 25th and Duart, who took 40th bothwere well under the cut-off limit of to for next week's NCAA meet in New York.

Wayne moved into 20th place after a mile of the race and held his position for nearly the entire up and down course, but was passed by five runners in the final quarter mile. Of his race, co-captain Wayne said, "It was my best race. It was the first time in four weeks my back hasn't bothered me. I was also mentally ready for it after setting the New Hampshire course record in our last meet."

Co-Captain Duart started his race slowly as he usually does, but finished real strong going by 30 runners near the end to take his 40th position. Following Duart, was Larry Paulson who ran a good race and finished 72nd, improving on his 144th place finish of last year. Also improving on his last year finish of 181 was junior Tom Derderian who placed 101.

Sophomores Bruce Blackburn and Steve Whicher were fifth and sixth for the Redmen,placing 112 and 139 respectively. Dave Evans, the only senior on the top seven, sprained his ankle and had to drop out of the race.

In the freshman race, UMass New England champs placed fifth in a good field. The frosh were the top New England team again as a quick William and Mary squad ran off with top honors.

Leading the frosh was Tom Swain who placed eighth overall and finished first of all the New England runners. Swain was running about 15th at the mile mark of the race, but moved through the runners over the last two miles.

Rick Barry finished second for the Redmen with a great race placing 21st. Barry dropped back from his first start and 10th spot at the mile. Tom Jasmin had a bad day and could only finish 24th.

Fourth man Phil Riley ran a good race also and placed 42nd for the Little Redmen. He was followed by Gary O'Dell who was 70th, Bob Sullivan 72nd and Mike Daly 90th.

The frosh season ended on a successful note as they did make the East Coast's top five. The Little Redmen, after an opening lose to Harvard, ran up 10 straight wins and easily won the New England title. Possible revenge against Harvard just fell short yesterday, as the Crimson frosh just outpointed UMass for fourth, even with Jasmin and Daly not running up to par.

Booters Blank UNH, 1-0 Finish with 6-4 Mark

by BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

A Duane Brown goal in the fourth period gave the UMass soccer team a 1-0 victory over New Hampshire on Saturday. It was the final game of the season for the Redmen and the win gave them a 6-4 season record and they finished 3-2 in the conference.

The Redmen completely dominated the Wildcats, outshooting them 20-2. Co-captain Dick Meyer and forward Larry Defelice missed the game but the Redmen offense played well despite their absence. UMass had several scoring opportunities throughout the game but couldn't put the ball in the net, a problem which plagued the team throughout the season. However the defense, anchored by goalie Tom Malone, held UNH in check until co-captain Rick Matuszczak set up Brown for the game's only goal. Brown, Matuszczak, Augie Calheno, Lindo Alves and John Mercury, playing in his last game, all turned in fine performances on Saturday.

Redmen coach Peter Broaca was very happy with the game. "We completely outplayed UNH, but we had a little trouble scoring," he said. "The win tied us with Rhode Island for second place in the conference and this is more than we expected at the beginning of the season."

Brown was the team's leading scorer for the second season in a row with nine goals. Defelice followed with five and Lindo Alves had three. Other Redmen scorers were Marc Cantor (2) and Paul Slack, Dick McCarron and Gus Penon with one each. Defelice was the top playmaker with four assists followed by Alves and Calheno with three each. Matuszczak had two assists and Brown, Dave Piccus and Tony Nunziante had one each.

On the season, UMass outscored its opponents 23-17. Goalie Malone had 64 saves and Greg Hamilton had 6 saves. Fullbacks Mercury, Gary Hart, Paul Slack and Joe Ciernawski were the mainstays in a defense which allowed less than two goals per game. Mercury led the Redmen in minutes played with 878 minutes out of a possible 880. Halfbacks Augie Calheno and Lindo Alves also played most of the time with 802 and 783 minutes respectively.

Broaca was pleased with the performance of the team over the course of the season. "This was the first winning soccer team the school has had in three years," he said. "Our objective at the beginning of the season was to win six games and this was accomplished," he added. Broaca felt the biggest wins of the season were one goal victories over Tufts, UConn and Rhode Island "and we took Vermont into the fourth period before losing 3-2." A 2-0 loss to Trinity marked the only time the Redmen lost by more than one goal. The best evidence of how good the team played was the fact that the Redmen were ranked in the top 15 teams in New England for the first time in the school's history.

The UMass soccer team finished out its most successful season in three years Saturday as they downed UNH, 1-0. The win gave the booters an overall season mark of 6-4. Here the Redmen are shown in earlier season action in which they met Boston College. (MDC photo by Rich McIntyre)

Ruggers Downed, 29-0

On Sunday the UMass rugby club took on the veteran Beacon Hill rugby club on the ditch (field) west of Boyden. In the two game test the Redmen succumbed 0-29 but the "B" team finally put one together to win, 8-6.

In the first game the UMass ruggers faced a most impressive ball-handling backfield which, using scissors plays, short kicking and rapid passing, scored six times in the first half virtually at will.

The UMass "A's", led by John Long and Don Chamberlayne, decided not to submit itself to further indignation in the second half. The Redmen forwards pushed more and maintained control of the game, but did not score. Beacon Hill did score once in the second half mounting the totals to 29-0.

Beacon Hill backs were led by two Welchmen at inside center and flyhalf. The two worked together remarkably, changing the flow of play at will and confounding the defensive efforts of UMass.

The lessons learned in the first half of the "A" game, used satisfactorily in the second half, bore fruit in the "B" game. From the outset it was apparent UMass had the will to win. With three minutes gone in the game a Beacon Hill back was tackled soundly by Gino Cass and Long. He left the game with a bruised shoulder only to return a few minutes later.

In the interim Beacon Hill drew a penalty which Ed Chamberlain converted into three points via a kick.

The UMass pressure continued until, with a few minutes left in the half, Bill Puskee snatched a loose ball from the air and raced forty yards for a score, dropping and evading tacklers on his way. Chamberlain converted, setting the score at 8-0 at halftime.

The second half was a holding action. Beacon Hill regained its posture and scored twice on a 45-yard penalty kick by John Lees, another Welshman, and then on a try from loose play. Lees, however failed to convert and the score stayed at 8-6. Lees again had a penalty kick with seconds remaining but he failed at the attempt.

UMass players turning in some of their best rugby to date were Long, Chamberlain, Brian Denger, Dan O'Connor and Cass.

This weekend the rugby club closes out its season with a trip to Boston College. The games at BC will be played before the UMass-BC football game, quite likely in the morning at about 10.

UMass hopes to put together a winning effort to close out what has been a frustrating season. Boston College has a good club which lost recently, 14-9, to the Beacon Hill club, but should present a challenge to UMass' search for victory.

N.D. Accepts Bowl Bid

By JERRY LISKA
Associated Press Sports Writer

SOUTH BEND, IND. (AP) - Notre Dame Coach Ara Parseghian said Monday he was "tickled to death" to go to the Cotton Bowl and was elated that the university now has set a precedent for bowl bids in the future.

Notre Dame reversed its policy against post-season football and accepted the Cotton Bowl invitation to meet either Texas, currently rated No. 2, or Arkansas, No. 4, in the New Year's Day classic in Dallas.

Texas plays at Arkansas Dec. 6, the winner getting the Cotton Bowl spot as Southwest Conference champion. Notre Dame, No. 9, has had no opportunity to study films of either team this season because they had no common opponents.

Field Scovell, chairman of the Cotton Bowl selection committee who made the formal invitation in person before going with Parseghian to attend the Chicago Today Quarterback Club luncheon in Chicago, said Notre Dame's proceeds from the game should come close to $350,000.

He said the split last year, when Tennessee played Texas, was a record $342,000 per team.

Notre Dame can keep its entire share since it is an independent and thus has no split of the receipts with a conference.

Rockne and his team consumed nearly a month in a leisurely train trip and from Pasadena, and the absence of students from classes irritated the university's heirarchy. The ban was clamped on then and lasted until now.

Citing reasons for changing the policy, the Rev. Edmund P. Joyce, executive vice president of Notre Dame and chairman of the Faculty Board in Control of Athletics, said:

"The crucial consideration was the urgent need of the university for funds to finance minority student academic programs and scholarships, and Notre Dame's share of the proceeds will be dedicated to his pressing need."

The earmarking of the proceeds for minority student programs discounted reports that the bowl policy was changed to help finance the university's recently completed multimillion-dollar sports and convocation center and a proposed artificial turfing of its football fields.

"I've waited 20 years to go to a bowl game so this is quite a day for me," Parseghian said.

Man Lands On The Moon Once More

HOUSTON (AP) - With their little mooncraft Intrepid ready for the wild ride to the lunar surface,the Apollo 12 explorers took inventory of some niggling nuisances Tuesday - a stuffy head, an open sore and a pesky solar storm.

Command Pilot Charles Conrad Jr. awoke to complain about a weeping sore on his chest caused by a reaction to heart-rate censors and the jelly used to apply them.

Intrepid pilot Alan L. Bean awoke early to complain about a stuffy head cold.

The only one not complaining was Richard F. Gordon, pilot of the mothership Yankee Clipper who will not walk on the moon.

Circling the moon for 38 hours in a spaceship built for three, the command Module Yankee Clipper, will be Gordon's task while Charles Conrad Jr. and Alan L. Bean take the lunar lander Intrepid to the moon's surface.

"It will be lonely," Gordon said in a preflight interview. "There's just no doubt about that.

"But at the same time, I have to be prepared to rescue the LM in the event of any abnormal occurrence. That in itself is a formidable task."

The planned schedule of Apollo 12's flight to the moon:

12:45 a.m. - Now undocked from the Apollo 12 command ship, being piloted alone in lunar orbit by Richard F. Gordon Jr., astronauts Charles Conrad Jr. and Alan L. Bean trigger main braking rocket of Intrepid landing craft 28 seconds to begin drop to lunar surface.

1:42 a.m. - Braking rocket fired for critical 11-minute burn to slowly settle astronauts to Moon;s Ocean of Storms.

1:53 a.m. - Landing on moon.

4:00 a.m. - Preparations begin for moon walk.

5:42 a.m. - Lander craft cockpit depressurized.

6:02 a.m. - Conrad exits through hatch. Television camera activated to show him descending ladder to surface. Scoops up first rock specimen.

6:32 a.m. - Bean exits and descends ladder to surface. After deploying television camera on moon, he and Conrad spend next three hours taking pictures, deploying scientific experiments and collecting rocks.

9:18 a.m. - Bean,then Conrad, re-enter Intrepid and close hatch.

10:20 a.m. - Astronauts begin one-hour eat period, insert new batteries and oxygen supply in life-supporting backpacks in preparation for second moon walk, and set up hammocks inside lander for rest period.

12:14 p.m. - Start of nine-hour rest period.

9:17 p.m. - Conrad and Bean end sleep period, start one-hour eat period, then prepare for second moon walk.

U.S., Russia Discuss How to End Arms Race

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) - The United States and the Soviet Union held their first down-to-business session Tuesday on how they can stop the nuclear arms race, but gave no inkling about the results.

A second working meeting was scheduled for Thursday, indicating that the strategic arms limitations talks, dubbed SALT, will be held on alternate days in Helsinki.

The U.S. and Soviet negotiators were all smiles in public and vied with each other in gestures of cordiality. But their talks were held under tight security precautions and the members of the delegations refused to say anything about the proceedings.

The day was climaxed by a gala reception at which Finnish President Urho Kekkonen sipped champagne and chatted amiably with Gerard Smith and Vladimir Semenov, the chief U.S. and Soviet delegates.

Semenov and his delegation, had arrived punctually at the American Embassy for the first round of working talks. They lasted 90 minutes. The shortness of time indicated only general presentations were made.

The entrance to the embassy building was cordoned off by Finnish policemen. U.S. security officers described the room in which the negotiations took place as plainly decorated and dominated by a large green-topped table.

The next meeting will be held at the nearby palatial Soviet Embassy, where equally strict security measures can be expected.

U.S. officials said that the silence on negotiations will continue.

The Kremlin does not like publicity about any of its dealings and is showing particular sensitivity about the SALT talks.

These involve advanced military equipment much of which the Soviet Union has never even acknowledged possessing, though its existence is known in Washington.

The talks, which started with a ceremonial opening Monday, are expected to last three or four weeks. They are officially described as preliminary, though Smith said upon his arrival that the United States was ready to consider substantive issues.

Debate on Recruiting

Salk Criticizes Univ. "Slave Marts" Alcivar: Recruiting is Informing

By BERNARD BLAIN
Senior Reporter

Gil Salk, Executive Secretary of MLK, criticized what he called the University's "slave marts." He said at last night's debate on recruiting, "Our educational system has become corrupted."

Students are being taught more and more to accept the military and economic system.

The training they get is brought about by recruiting on campus and particularly, military recruiting. Recruiting on campus "reveals today that the University has nothing to do with education but training."

"We are put into molds. We are trained to be a silent majority, and we're trained not to ask questions by the University." Salk said this training is only to benefit the economic and military needs of our country.

Michael Alcivar, a graduate student at UMass, disagreed with this view saying, "Military recruiting on campus is an information service. No bodies are bought and sold."

Alcivar posed the question, "What are the advantages of military recruiting on campus?" He declared that the draft system is a reality and that military recruiting offers alternatives to the draft by informing students of varying opportunities such that a college placement officer would be needed full time to keep up with military programs. He also felt that military recruiting assures liberal and acade-

Third Debate Centers On War Related Research

The third in a series of debates on "War and the University" was conducted in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday afternoon. The speakers were Charles Hutcheson and Guenther Lewy presenting arguments in favor of Department of Defense sponsored research; Sid Finehurst and Howard Gadlia offering argument against DOD sponsored research.

In his opening remarks, Hutcheson, as Associate Professor in The Electrical Engineering Department, explained that "research is innermost to the University, it is integral to teaching and promotes good teaching. The Themis Project is controlled solely within the University and is designed to research vehicles capable of conducting scientific research on the ocean floor."

Hutcheson also stated that Project Themis "never was nor will be classified."

Finehurst, a graduate student in mathematics at UMass, prefaced his remarks by saying that he was "not attacking the Engineering Department, nor research." But was attacking the fact that "the University is involved in war research."

He went on to say that the definition of academic freedom has a limit, "that research damaging to human life would not be allowed."

Finehurst claimed that the University is "not politically neutral. It is part of the military and part of the war in Vietnam." He said he would like to see all military funded research projects cancelled, the money refunded and other "basic" research backed by an organization that didn't have the dubious interests of the Department of Defense."

Professor Guenther Lewy, of the UMass Government Department, said that "academic freedom meant the freedom to teach, learn and choose the topic of research." He also said that to "achieve arms control knowledge of the destructiveness of weapons, and detection devices for nuclear weapons had to be developed along with good will."

Prof. Howard Gadlia of the Sociology Department, was the final speaker. His opening remarks were concerned with the consequences of research done under "good intentions", that "you can't predict the effect of research by the source of funding."

The debate was then open to random questions by members of the panel and the audience. The topic range included research on the UMass campus, the Themis Project, and the long term effects of research sponsored by the Department of Defense.

THE SPEAKERS in last night's debate were business school graduate student Michael Alcivar, Milton Cantor of the history faculty, Gilbert Salk of the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council, and Stanley Young of the business administration faculty. The Moderator was Glen Gordon of the department of government. (MDC photo by Rich McIntyre.)

News Analysis

Academic Freedom Includes Research

By Louis DiMonaco
News Editor

At yesterday afternoon's debate on "War and the University: Focus on Research", Professor Guenther Lewy of the Government Department brought up an interesting point when he said, "academic freedom means the freedom to teach, learn and choose your topic of research".

It was interesting because Sid Finehurst seemed to be under the impression that "research damaging to human life would not be allowed at the University".

Apparently the topic of research is a maiter concerning only the researcher. The immediate and eventual effects of research, whether sponsored by the Department of Defense or by the American Cancer Association, are the responsibility of the researcher.

One gentleman in the audience explained that his research on high speed efficiency transportation vehicles was relevent in that it was designed to solve a social problem. However, he stated that the same information could be used by the military to solve problems of weapon and troop transportation. Thus it was impossible for him to foresee the implications of his research. He expanded this specific point by saying it is impossible for any researcher to fully understand the implications of his particular line of investigation.

If a researcher is supposed to be free to choose his line of research, but is unable to foresee the implications, whether "good or bad", then we (or whoever is responsible) have set up a situation condusive to a Frankenstein catastrophy.

This may be an exaggeration, but it is in the realm of the possible that an irresponsible and ignorant person would choose a topic of research, leading eventually to unjust murder, or, at worst, genocide.

Howard Gatlin suggested that something is decidedly wrong with a social order that produces people who freely choose to research elements of warfare.

In the course of the "War and the University" debates, and this debate in particular, participants, notably those supporting military recruitment, research, and ROTC seemed to rely on linguistic phrase twisting, or more objectively, linguistic misunderstandings.

To site a few examples, there was a faculty member who left the debate in frustration because the topic of conversation at the time was concerned with past and future extensions of the Vietnam war. That is, the United State's involvement in anti-insurrectionist movements in foreign countries since the turn of the century.

This line of argument was relevant to the determination of this country's continual war efforts, its implication on war research and military recruitment. Somehow we have made it possible to separate issues that are inseparable (research AND war).

Professor Hutcheson was asked if he would hold himself responsible if the results of his Project Themis research was used to harmful ends by the Department of Defense or any other organization. "You are asking me if I am responsible?" he replied. That is where he hit the nail on the head.

But, Professor Hutcheson took the question as a personal attack, or he at least appeared to be irritated by it, and there was no detailed answer, except "Yes, I would be responsible." But responsibility and moral conscience after the fact is really not much good to anyone.

The relatively few people who attended the debates and the linguistic hassle that the participants invariably got into suggests that perhaps the virtues of free and open discussion are inaccurate, and some other means should be investigated to come to a verdict on the effect of military sponsored research.

Joseph Kennedy Dies at 81

HYANNISPORT, Mass. (AP) - Joseph Patrick Kennedy, sire of one of the most politically influential families in the history of the United States and a stunning success in his own right, died Tuesday at his seaside home on Cape Cod. He was 81.

Kennedy, whose offspring included the 35th President of the United States and two U.S. senators, had battled fiercely for life for eight years.

The end came peacefully, a family spokesman said, with his wife Rose and sole surviving son Edward at his bedside.

Others present included Edward's wife Joan, daughters Eunice Shriver, Jean Smith and Patricia Lawson, former daughter-in-law Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, son-in-law Sargent Shriver, niece Ann Gargan and nephew Joseph Gargan.

Kennedy had been all but bedridden since suffering a crippling stroke while playing golf Dec. 19, 1961, in Palm Beach, Fla. He came perilously close to death then and on several occasions afterward. But with an unswerving determination to live that became as awesome as the scope of the Kennedy dynasty, he managed to survive.

His latest crisis arose Saturday, when he suffered what his doctor said was a mild heart attack. He had been unable to eat for several days, and his long-time friend and confidant, Richard Cardinal Cushing, Roman Catholic archbishop of Boston, announced sadly Sunday that the end appeared imminent.

Kennedy will be buried in Brookline Thursday after a "white Mass" in Hyannis, a family spokesman said Tuesday after the former ambassador's death.

The "white" funeral Mass, so described because the priests wear white vestments, is a departure from Roman Catholic tradition, but the spokesman said the family decided upon it because they wanted the service to be of a "joyous theme."

The Mass will be celebrated at St. Francis Xavier's in Hyannis, a small unpretentious church which the Kennedys have attended for years. Only family members and close friends are to attend, the spokesman said.

Richard Cardinal Cushing, archbishop of Boston and a long-time friend of the Kennedy's will be the celebrant, the spokesman said. He will be assisted by the Rev. Joseph Maguire, a member of the cardinal's staff and the Rev. Joseph Fitzgerald, a nephew of Rose Kennedy, Joseph's widow.

Afterward, Kennedy's body will be taken by hearse to the family plot at Holyrood Cemetery in Brookline, near Boston, for burial.

Kennedy's six eldest grandchildren will be honorary pallbearers, the spokesman said. They are Joseph P. Kennedy III, eldest son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy; Christopher Lawford, 11; Robert Shriver, 15; Stephen Smith Jr., 12; Edward M. Kennedy Jr., 8; and John F. Kennedy Jr., 8.

Mrs. Kennedy asked through a statement Tuesday afternoon that in lieu of flowers, donations be sent to the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Fund, 1816 Jefferson Place N.W., Washington, D.C.

Thousands Express Sympathy Kennedy Leaves Long Record

(AP) - "Joseph P. Kennedy leaves a long and distinguished record of service to his country," President Nixon wrote Tuesday, "a genuinely unique record that involves his entire family in the making of American history.

"Mrs. Nixon and I know that we are joined by countless Americans and by people all over the world as we express our deepest sympathy to the Kennedy family."

The statement was one of thousands of expressions of sympathy that followed the Kennedy patriarch's death Tuesday at his seaside home on Cape Cod. Kennedy, the father of the 35th President of the United States and two U.S. senators, was 81.

House Speaker John McCormack eulogized Kennedy as "a great American" and added that he was "a dear friend of mine."

"I'm very, very sorry," said Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana.

In Boston, Richard Cardinal Cushing, Roman Catholic archbishop of Boston and long-time friend of the Kennedys, eulogized the late statesman - turned - financier as "father of the Family."

"I capitalize the phrase like that," Cushing said, "because the central and loving authority of the father has been so diminished in what presently exists as family life in our time . . . we can truly say of Joseph P. Kennedy that he was a Father of the Family in our time."

Transportation Secretary John A. Volpe, former governor of Massachusetts, said in a statement that Kennedy's "abilities became legendary long before his passing."

"Father of leaders, master of finance and veteran of both politics and diplomacy," Volpe said, "this man's mark on the world will last for generations."

Gov. Francis W. Sargent, Volpe's successor at the State House in Boston, said Kennedy's achievements "went beyond his own historic record and encompassed a heritage passed on to his sons . . . Massachusetts is diminished by his loss and honored by his life."

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., sent his condolences to the family saying: "Joseph Kennedy was a special breed of American, a rugged individualist who served his country with distinction and helped to guide his sons into a great tradition of public service."

mically trained personnel get into the military.

As for the question of business recruitment, Alcivar believes the placement office has the responsibility to keep the lines of placement opportunity open. He said that these services are needed for, "If we are deprived of these services, our future decisions would be much more cloudy and expensive." "There can be no choice unless there is information."

Milton Cantor from the dept. of history was the most emotional debator of the evening. He stated, "I am hostile to industrial and military recruiting," while the administration takes refuge in their policy of "freedom of information."

Expounding his feelings in a cunning critique of University recruitment he protested, "The University is not an employment agency," and there is no educational gain in allowing recruiting by military or industry representatives.

He suggested that the industry and military people rent local. hotels where students could go to see them if they wished.

Cantor said, "The University does discriminate against recruiters." An open door policy would flood the campus with recruiters and allow organizations like the Klu Klux Klan on campus.

The question, "Should a free recruiting policy be restricted in any manner?" was asked by Stanley Young, a professor in the dept. of management.

He pointed out that a change in policy requires a decision criteria that is, how will it affect student welfare? "Will more students be better off or worse off."

The criteria then is to achieve the greatest number of advantages to the greatest number of students. Prof. Young said that we do have that. Our open recruiting policy is consistent with student career development. It is convenient and economic to the student and does provide the greatest student advantage because most students at the University are professional students.

He remarked that the University facilitates employment by providing choices where private channels are awkward and expensive from the students point of view.

Nonnuclear Nations want to Modify Draft Nuclear-Free Sea-bed Treaty

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - Led by Canada, the non nuclear countries voiced opposition Tuesday to U.S.-Soviet efforts to win speedy U.N. approval of a treaty aimed at keeping the seabed free of nuclear weapons.

These same nations also objected to drafts of agreements for preventing biochemical warfare.

Canadian Delegate George Ignatieff led the attack in the General Assembly's main political committee with a demand for further modification of the U.S.-Soviet draft treaty on a nuclear-free seabed.

He said also that Canada and other countries would introduce a resolution to toss back to negotiators in Geneva the task of seeking agreement on a treaty banning chemical and biological weapons of war.

The United States and the Soviet Union opened the annual U.N. disarmament debate Monday with pleas for speedy approval of their joint draft treaty on the seabed.

Ignatieff said revisions made in the treaty in Geneva - the main arena of detailed disarmament negotiations - failed to meet the expectations of Canada and many other countries.

He objected that the revised draft failed to clarify procedures in the event a non nuclear power objected to methods used by a nuclear power to verify suspected nuclear installations under the sea.

He added also that there was not sufficient provision for assuring close inspection of suspected installations, nor adequate protection of the rights of a coastal state with respect to the continental shelf.

The committee is considering two rival draft treaties on biochemical weapons. One was submitted by Britain and the other by nine Communist countries, including the Soviet Union.

Ignatieff expressed doubt that the committee could do any more than conduct a general discussion of problems involved. What is needed, he said, was detailed study of the problem with point-by-point negotiations by the multination negotiating body in Geneva.

The seabed treaty and the British draft treaty on biological weapons came out of Geneva.

Ambassador Joao Augusto de Araujo Castro of Brazil said the British draft treaty was lacking in effect because it provided for disposing of biological weapons first and leaving chemical weapons to a later stage.

As for the Soviet draft, he said it "stopped in the middle" and made no provision for verification procedures.

MLK Poverty Committee Reports on S. Carolina

The Committee on Poverty of the Martin Luther King Council is currently distributing around campus the first part of its Report on Poverty in the United States. Entitled "Dorchester County, South Carolina," the pamphlet describes the economic deprivation of the blacks and Indians of Dorchester County and probes the prevailing political system which is responsible for this deprivation. The pamphlet also reviews the struggle of Mrs. Victoria Delee, a black civil rights leader from Ridgeville, S.C., to provide equal educational opportunity for blacks and Indians in the Ridgeville school system.

Members of the research task force which produced "Dorchester County, South Carolina" are hopeful that this initial segment of the Poverty Committee's complete report will awaken concern for the plight of Mrs. Delee and her people.

Publication of the pamphlet is timed to coincide with a week-long campus fund-raising drive for Dorchester County, which is being conducted by members of the Afro-American Society, the Freedom Committee, the Committee on Poverty, and the Young People's Socialist League. The drive was centered on the Orchard Hill area last night and will be carried into Southwest tonight, the Northeast Quadrangle on Thursday, and the Central Area on Monday.

The Committee on Poverty will be publishing a second segment of its report dealing with hunger and malnutrition among the poor, before Thanksgiving. Additional segments of the report concerned with consumer exploitation, overpopulation and birth control, and President Nixon's proposed welfare plan, will be forthcoming in December.

Contemporary Univ. Program Seeks Funds to Do Research

Conservation is definitely a NOW subject. In response to lacking educational and research programs in the field of conservation, students participating in the Contemporary University (C.U.) program here at UMass are actively seeking Foundation money to develop case studies of existing curriculum at selected Universities in this country.

Aiding in this effort are Contemporary University students from Federal City College in Washington, D.C., and the University of South Carolina. Also involved in the research are students from student curriculum change groups, such as the Cambridge-based N.E.C.T.E.R.

UMass and the surrounding five college areas was selected as one of the sites for C.U. study.

Recently, information has been received by several C.U. students of already existing educational and research efforts in conservation, on the campus and in the surrounding area.

Since the topic is of interest to many people, a meeting has been arranged to exchange information about currently on-going projects.

Anyone interested, or a member of an established group, is invited to the Council Chambers of the Student Union at 7:30 on Monday.

Three results are expected from this meeting. 1. The exchange of information; 2. Development of a mailing list of all those interested in conservation in this area; 3. A better coordination of future projects.

For further information, contact either Staff Sheehan at the Student Senate Office or Dave Perasso at 5-2048.

Student Injured In Renewed Outbreak At Springfield High

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - One pupil was injured Tuesday during a renewed outbreak of scuffling at racially-tense Springfield High School.

Police said Roger Dutilly, 17, a senior, was treated after allegedly being kicked and falling down a flight of stairs.

Following the minor outbreak, the number of police stationed inside the school was increased from four to nine.

The school has been the scene of racially oriented fights and brawls for the past two weeks.

The incident Tuesday came on the heels of a School Committee decision approving amnesty for students charged in connection with recent disturbances. The School Committee also agreed to a proposal for investigation of charges of teacher racism.

The committee turned down a request by black students that they be permitted to conduct "sensitivity interviews" for prospective black teachers.

Niagara Falls To Fall Again

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP) - The dribble that has barely wet the American Falls since summer will spring soon into the roaring cascade that, along with the still-flowing Horseshoe Falls, has lured honeymooners and tourists for years.

The Army Engineers announced Tuesday that a cofferdam that turned off the falls for an erosion study will be removed next week.

Col Ray Hansen, Buffalo district engineer for the Army Engineers, said power equipment will begin removing the earth cofferdam next Tuesday and the dam should be entirely removed by Nov. 29.

Geologists studies the riverbed and the rocky face of the falls during the summer months trying to learn what has caused a pileup of 400,000 cubic feet of rock at the foot of the cataract.

The results of their study are to be turned over to an international joint commission by October 1971.

Hansen told newsmen removal of the pile of rock is being considered. Also under study, he said, is the possibility of building a control dam downstream to raise the water level at the bottom of the falls and cover some of the fallen rock.

U.S. to Make Reply To Libyan Demands

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States will deliver its reply this week to Libyan demands that it pack up and get out of the giant Wheelus Air Force Base.

Ambassador Joseph Palmer will inform the new revolutionary regime in Tripoli that the United States is ready to start negotiations on the future of the $100-million, 2,100-acre base.

Palmer was called home for consultations after the new pro-Arab regime served notice on Oct. 30 that the current base agreement will be terminated when it runs out at the end of 1970.

The U. S. ambassador is now en route back to his post with the Nixon administration's reply.

A spokesman at the base said, meanwhile, that no official work had been received there on a reported Libyan ban on all U. S. planes, except for supply planes.

Col. Adam Hawwaz, Libyan defense minister, was quoted as telling the Egyptian newspaper Al Ahram on Monday that force may be used to enforce the ban.

"We have received no official notice on this subject, and all flights are proceeding normally," the base spokesman said. He said this included normal flights of dependents "which are still coming in as of today."

U. S. officials say that under the agreement, either side can give notice after Dec. 24, 1970, that it intends to terminate the pact. In this case the agreement would expire one year later.

Cool. Muammar Mohamed Kadafi, chief of the ruling revolutionary council, told a rally in Tripoli Oct. 16 that Libya will fight if necessary to oust U. S. and British bases from its soil.

This statement was discounted here as typical Arab oratory. Neither the United States nor Britain wants to fight, and Kadafi must be aware of that, officials commented.

These officials acknowledge that there is some concern here, however, as to what might happen to Wheelus if and when the United States gave it up. Egypt is suspected of being interested in the base in the event of a new war with Israel.

Regional Hillel Institute To Host Shlomo Carlebach

Shlomo Carleback, will give a concert on Saturday, November 22 at 8:30 p.m. in the Ballroom and will be the guest of the UMass Hillel Foundation. The Hillel Foundations of UMass, Smith and Amherst College are sponsoring a New England Regional Hillel Institute.

From Friday evening through Sunday morning the Institute, entitled by Shlomo's song "the Song of Sabbath" will explore through creative participation the ensouling experience of the Jewish Sabbath.

Shlomo Carlebach, a Rabbi within the Hasidic (Pietist) Jewish tradition has had much success with students and hippies in his San Francisco Synagog, the House of Love and Prayer, where the congregation often stays overnight in sleeping bags to retain the atmosphere for the whole Sabbath and following evening.

The loss of roots in one's own cultural tradition can produce within a person a sense of being in exile without a memory of home. This weekend with Shlomo will be a search for roots in one's own culture.

The cost, including all meals from Friday night through Sunday morning and all the programs will be only $6.00 for UMass students. Students seeking to be a part of this Institute on a personal experience of the Jewish Sabbath, who have not yet registered may do so in the Hillel Office.

Give Peace a Chance

"All we are saying is give peace a chance."

So sang almost 500,000 persons this weekend in Washington while protesting this nation's policy in Vietnam.

It was the largest anti-war rally in the history of the country. The demonstration was peaceful with the exception of several incidents caused by extremist elements. The general peacefulness of the entire moratorium activities was a sharp rebuke to the efforts of the Nixon Administration in attempting to create an atmosphere of alarm.

On several occasions President Nixon has stated that he would not be influenced at all by street demonstrations. His Vice-President refers to the demonstrators as "snobs" while his Sec. of Transportation (remember John Volpe) calls the demonstration a Communist plot.

The Nixon Administration apparently has no plans for attempting to bridge the so-called generation gap and instead is trying to divide the country still further by convincing Nixon's "silent majority" that anti-war demonstrators are really anti-American.

The anti-war demonstrations must continue, and as time goes on, more and more persons must participate. The President must be made to realize that the nation is sick of war and the only cure is immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Vietnam.

Rays of Hope

I would like to say a little bit about Washington. I didn't go, so I can only rely on first-hand reports. I chose not to read the newspaper accounts or watch TV.

The size of the crowd was a disappointment to me. I had failed to anticipate the cold weather. This had to cut down on the number of hitchhikers and outdoor sleepers, so the crowd was that much smaller. My own prediction aside, the number who made it to Washington appears to me an iceberg; there was tremendous sentiment throughout the country for the Moratorium. Those who can't afford the Little Hatch at night will realize how many students would have gone had they been able to afford it. I had the money problem expressed to me many times on this campus; I assume it was more acute at UCLA. So multiply that 500,000 by five or ten times; I believe that is a truer indication of those who believe in the Moratorium. And don't be too hard on those who didn't go for reasons that don't seem good enough for you. Or those who believe in peace, but chose not to go. Different strokes for different folks. Personally I did not feel I should go. My reasons are my own, and I did not try to talk anyone out of going. I'm very glad others are participating in the Moratorium. I follow the beat of my drummer, and others should follow theirs.

I'm also led to understand that the crowd was mostly young. In terms of practical political military industrial Congressional power in 1969, that's too bad. Being practical, I wish, merely for the sake of the lives of everyone in Vietnam, that Richard Nixon was demanding an immediate pullout. I wish he would do so for political reasons, to try to act young, to please Pat, to keep David out of the Army, because his back itches. I don't care what his motivation is. Love of peace is too much to ask for; therefore I'd gladly settle for peace, and accept his reasons with a grain of salt and gratitude that my brothers' lives are beginning to be spared.

Getting away from unpleasant realities of 1969, it's beautiful that the crowd was young. We're "coming of age," even by their definition, and I hope this generation will be incapable of war. The true meaning of peace is among the most precious feelings available. Its opposite is sickening, and peace is so desirable. So while the pro-war forces continue to swear by the Reagan-Goldwater motto, "Don't let the bastards wear you down," we will wear them down, peacefully, not relenting. If the Moratorium takes until 1980, I hope there will still be people moritoring. And I hope this generation is the signal of a sane, loving race that will move into the 21st century while salvaging the rest of this one. We can be sane and loving, know we can.

Many people have been comparing Washington to Woodstock. They don't mean to be complimentary. I am about to make the same analogy, although I mean it as a high compliment.

Woodstock WAS peace and love. I've never felt better about my fellow man than in those three days in New York. By fellow man, I don't mean a lofty ideal, I mean actual physical neo-Freudian American neurotics who steal your parking space. No one was stealing anything from anybody; rather complete strangers were giving things away. The vibrations have never been better anywhere. If Washington was like Woodstock, dig it. That's what peace is all about.

Roses and Spiros

The march on Washington Saturday represented a previously unheard of form of political expression. It was more a celebration or massive drama than a political action because it did not pretend to have the power to either force Nixon to stop the war or convince him that he should. The demonstration combined the joy and solidarity of Woodstock with an understanding of the need for political change and to some extent the specific form of that political change.

Unlike previous demonstrations in Washington and throughout the country, the demonstration on Saturday viewed the abuse of power represented by the Nixon/Agnew conspiracy as basically, inherently, and unequivocally absurd. There was not the frustration of trying to convince each other that the war was horribly wrong and must be stopped. On November 15 this was obvious. The march on Saturday was concerned with how to respond to a political situation whose existance previous demonstrations sought to publicly establish.

The response to the absurdity of Vietnam, that was shared on Saturday, was to celebrate, practice and embody the opposite of Vietna. It was more a pro-peace demonstration than an anti-war demonstration. There were over one million people together chanting with Pete Seeger "all we are saying is give peace a chance." Four members of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra played a Beethoven string quartet. Performers from the show "Hair" sang "let the sun shine", while doves were released to fly above the people who extended for as far as anyone could see. No one engaged in the political masturbation of trying to relate to or communicate with, the man who writes Spiro Agnew's speeches.

But as the people at the Ellipse were heralding the age of Aquarius other protesters, observers, and some of the doves who had just been set free were being tear gassed at the Department of Justice. The demonstration at the ellipse was successful in an aesthetic way but it did not address itself to bringing about change or the kind of peace it had tried to define. Too many consciences were satisfied too easily. People there forgot too soon that the Blacks and Indians in this country and oppressed people throughout the world are not yet prepared to join the November 15 demonstrators in a declaration of an age of Aquarius.

The major effect of the demonstration was on the people who participated in it. It was a necessary refusal to comply with President Nixon's request for blind support. It was a pie thrown in the face of a closedminded president who insists on prolonging a Keystone cops war. It treated the absurdity of Spiro Agnew as an absurdity.

The only place where real political issues were addressed was at the Justice Department where a confrontation with a system that is now prosecuting political prisoners occurred and at the South Vietnamese embassy where a similar disruption was attempted. But as in most attempts to deal with the real political issue of stopping the war and the false logic that brought it about, these actions were quixotic and self-defeating.

The November 15 demonstration in Washington actually changed very little. It did, however, show that as Ferlinghetti assures us "there are people with roses behind the barricades," which is good to know as long as one doesn't forget about the barricades.

Sour Cherries?

Cherry flavored grapes? I don't understand why we were served cherry flavored grapes in the dining commons. They were in a dessert called Cherry Jubilee. They tasted like cherries, looked like cherries, but they were really grapes. So just for the sake of my curiosity would anyone in this University show a reason for this odd deception? My first reaction was to suspect that they were instruments of the establishment, placed there so that while I was investigating my dessert topping to see if it was really cherry or grape, it would be investigating me. But, I realized I couldn't be right so there must be another answer. Would anyone provide a solution to this question?

Environment

To the Editors:

I should like to focus attention on a recent statement by Murray Gell-Mann, the 1969 Nobel prize winner in physics, a professor at the California Institute of Technology. It was published last week by SCIENCE under the title "Technological Abstinence Advocated."

"We are all of us appalled at man's ravaging of his environment. The problem comes about as a product of three factors: population, the propensity for each individual to destroy the environment, and his capacity to do so through being armed with technology. All of these are increasing; and ultimate- these are increasing: all must be worked on in an effort to find some way to control the trend and ultimately make it level off or reverse.

It used to be true that most things that were technologically possible were done. . . Certainly in the future, THIS CANNOT AND MUST NOT BE SO. As our ability to do all kinds of things, and the scale of them increase--for the scale is planetary for so many things today-- we must try to realize a smaller and smaller fraction of all the things that we can do. Therefore, an essential element of engineering from now on must be the element of choice.

. . . In trying to change the trend, we all look forward in the near future to certain landmark actions. Landmarks of TECHNOLOGICAL RENUNCIATION. For example, if no supersonic transports fly supersonically over land, that would be an example of something we can do and don't do for environmental reasons. If there are NO SST's at all, that's possibly even better.

. . . The major problem is to reorient the application of science and technology so that a major part of the application is in curing the problems that have arisen as a result of the applications so far."

Rain Bill

To the Editor,

I, like many of my fellow students, am concerned about the uncalled for amount of precipitation we have been experiencing in the past week or so. Being thoroughly disgusted with the Student Senate's indifference to this problem, I have decided to take action on my own.

I have formulated a bill which I am offering to the readers of the "Daily Collegian" for their approval or disapproval before I submit it to the Student Senate.

The following are the articles of my bill:

1.) From the date of passage, it shall rain only on every second Monday between the hours of 3a.m. and 6 a.m.

a.) If a holiday falls on a Monday scheduled for rain, the rain is to be postponed to the next weekday, which is not a holiday, with the exception of Friday.

2.) The rain is not to exceed 1/2 inch.

3.) The water is to be completely evaporated by 8:00 a.m. that same morning, leaving no muddy spots.

4.) The rainfall is never to be intense enough as to disturb the lightest sleepers.

5.) This bill is only to concern the UMass campus where the Student Senate has jurisdiction, but is to exclude the agricultural land controlled by Stockbridge, realizing that this land requires more moisture.

I further suggest that following the probable passage of this bill, it should be subject to a referendum. With due confidence, I further propose that 19 signatures be necessary for the referendum and subsequent defeat of my bill.

In the near future, I intend to submit a second bill concerning snowfall on sidewalks and roads.

Themis

To the editor:

This is directed to the underprivileged member of the Coalition whose lack of knowledge and limited point of view is unrealistic. It appears that anyone can write for the largest New England college newspaper; as long as the writer bases his presentation on emotion and not on fact, he can be published.

Project Themis is not directly connected to any war except the war against ignorance. The project is aimed towards enlightening earthlings about the earth. The earth is composed largely of oceans, a brilliant remark which nobody understands. Project Themis is aimed at the designing and construction of research vessels, that will help in developing the ocean as one of our greatest natural resources.

Since this is fact and not emotion, it will probably never be published.

Projected Change: Time To Think

To The Editor:

From Women's Liberation: A Projected Change in the Friday, Nov. 14 issue seems to have been written by someone who is narrow minded or just didn't take very much time to look around or think. Many of the points made may be valid, but they certainly do not present the whole picture. Has the author ever thought of what it would be like to have a hospital administrator, a business executive, or an academic dean absent from work for four to five months every few years while she has a baby? And if they returned to their job, leaving the children unattended, what would become of society? By the time the children are grown enough to permit a mother to return to work full time, her male counterpart already is the executive and rightly so because he has had quite a few more years' experience.

As to the statement "Women get less money for the same job with the same experience." That may be true in some places, but I know a male X-ray technician who makes the same wages as his female coworkers. Is he underpaid or are the girls overpaid? And how come he is the first boy ever to graduate from that particular school? Are men also afraid to be laughed at? To be alone?

I think women work very hard to overcome myths about inferiority weakness and lack of logic. Most of the school buses in our town are driven by women. Numerous schools have female principals. I know several women doctors, lawyers, and aldermen.

Being married is not necessarily equivalent to letting a man run one's life. Haven't you ever seen a matriarchal home where the husband's chief role seems to be to bring home the money? Where the wife is in charge of the budget? Where the wife has to suggest that her husband ask for a raise or change jobs? Haven't you ever met a man who attributes his success to his wife's encouragement and faith in him?

Who says it's easy to get married? Who says it is easy to stay home and care for the children, cook, wash, iron, sew, and make the home a comfortable, pleasant place for the husband and father to return to after a hard day's work? Many married women are not just being "supported" but find part-time jobs in order to make ends meet and at great personal sacrifice.

The wife and mother who stays home does not necessarily stop learning, thinking, feeling, experimenting and growing. Women read quite a bit, much of their work is creative, i.e., decorating, cooking, sewing. Women who have not stopped feeling are those who are keeping the volunteer organizations of this country going by giving as much of their time as they can afford.

Perhaps, there is another reason why there are not more women in "male" fields. Women, precisely because of their difference, have different interests which can be demonstrated by an example I once read. When the headlines state that there was a plane crash, a woman is most likely to say immediately, "Oh, those poor people" while a man thinks "I wonder what went wrong". It isn't that the man does not care about the people who lost their lives, he would do all he could to make planes safer for people. But his natural inclination is more towards doing while that of a woman is more toward feeling. So, maybe, Mr. Author, you missed a very important point. Women don't care to be directors of the space program or great architects. They don't get the same satisfaction as men do from being able to say, "I built that bridge or that building." If a woman were inclined that way and wanted such a job, I'm sure she wouldn't submit to any man also competing for the post just because he is a man and she a woman.

Function of 5 College Coordinating Board Questioned

Couched in the midst of the myriad miscellaneous organizations currently operating within the University as well as the other institutions in the Valley is a group of students called the Five College Student Coordinating Board. To many students, it remains a nebulous organization which has no particular function. To most, it doesn't even exist.

However, it is a reality actually funded by the student governments of Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke and the University. This unpresuming group has reached an inevitable identity crisis. The past few meetings have been concerned with the validity of the Board's existance as well as its function within the Five College community.

In the past it has provided a Five College Lecture Series, helped change the requirements for course exchange at the other schools and worked to provide a Five College Bus.

Currently, an information booklet is being printed which includes maps of the campuses, rules for course exchange, a phone directory of pertinent phone numbers at each institution as well as general information on the activities in the Valley.

Dr. Robert Grier, co-author of BLACK RAGE, is scheduled to speak this year as a part of the lecture series.

But this has posed a problem for the Board. The question remains: what next? Ideally the Board would like to act as a vital organ in promoting student-sponsored activities that will benefit the area as well as an information center where students can find out about available courses at the other schools, receive information on the bus schedule and even keep up to date on lectures, concerts, movies and general events at each institution.

The Board would also like to help beginning groups interested in activities which will promote active cooperation between institutions in the Valley.

The Joint Venture, 382 North Pleasant is one such group. They are currently setting up a gallery and workshops for artists, sculptors, and craftsmen in the area.

A non-profit organization, Joint Venture wants to build a creative atmosphere where students can exhibit their work as well as sit in on informal workshops.

The Five College Student Coordinating Board may not be able to fund all such projects, but it can as it has with Joint Venture, direct the members of the organizations other sources of advice and financial aid. And this is, perhaps what the Board should become: a kind of Ombudsman for five college students and activities.

The Five College Student Coordinating Board is therefore, now open to student proposals involving any projects which will promote five college cooperation, its meetings are held every Thursday night, 7:30 p.m., in 301 Converse Hall, Amherst College. Bring proposals to the Board or contact your University representatives: Betsy Goldman, 253-9325; Ann Jablonski, 546-0553; and Jerome Moriarty, 546-5410.

Aiken Says Antitrust Law Should Cover Atomic Plants

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen George Aiken, R-Vt., said Tuesday the atomic power plant should be recognized as a profit-making enterprise and should be subject to antitrust law from the planning stage onward.

In a statement at a hearing of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, Aiken said some major private power companies oppose such antitrust legislation.

This indicates, he said, that "they intend to seek economic power, even monopoly of the nation's supply of electric energy, which would be denied to them under the antitrust laws."

Aiken, who has a nuclear antitrust measure before the committee, is especially concerned, one of his aides, said, with a New England situation where one private combine is excluding some 40 municipal power companies from sharing in its nuclear-generated power.

Present Atomic Energy Commission practice is to issue licenses to plant builders only on a research basis. Thus, opponents claim, when these same plants blossom into a commercial reality, they are exempt from antitrust scrutiny.

The AEC does have power to issue commercial licenses under an interpretation of its governing law, but so far it has not been done. AEC Commissioner James Ramey said the matter of commercial licenses is to be considered in hearings next year.

However, Ramey did say the AEC in principle support licensing reform largely as outlined in the various bills before the committee at the moment.

Brazil Govt. Arrests Nun, Priests In Campaign Against "Terrorism"

SAN PAULO, Brazil (AP) - In a nation that is 95 per cent Roman Catholic, a nun is in jail and a number of priests and seminarians also have been arrested in a campaign of Brizil's military government to stamp out "terrorism."

The campaign has also resulted in the excommunication of two police officers.

Concerned Church leaders, including a representative of the Vatican, are meeting to consider possible " infiltration of terrorists into the Church," a Church spokesman said.

The arrest last week of Maurina Borges de Silveira, the mother superior of a convent in the southern city of Ribeirao Preto, brought the excommunications of the city's police chief and his top assistant. Her archbishop accused them of torturing her.

Police and military authorities claim their raids, mostly in the south region, have resulted in the destruction of 22 terrorist cells and the arrest of more than 30 persons, most of them of the Catholic religion.

A military court released four of them Tuesday but ordered that the mother superior be help in "preventitive detention." It said she and several other suspects had confessed to helping terrorists.

The anti-terrorist campaign was stepped up early this month when two friars were arrested. Authorities said this led them to Communist Carlos Marighela whom they ambushed and killed on a San Paulo street Nov. 4. Marighela was Brazil's most wanted criminal.

The arrest of about 30 priests and seminarians followed. Police accused them of helping terrorists escape to Uruguay, Paraguay, and Argentina and of distributing antigovernment literature.

Scrolls Try to Broaden Scope

This year the Scrolls, the sophomore women's honorary service society, is trying to broaden their scope of activities. Two weeks ago, the group helped Delta Chi fraternity collect for UNICEF in various residence halls. Presently, the group is making Christmas cards for servicemen to be distributed by the Red Cross.

An entirely new service is being provided by Scrolls for interested applicants to the University. In cooperation with the Admission staff and Arcon, the group is offering tours for girls to see dormitories, classes, and other points of interest that girls have often asked to see. This service is being offered all day Monday - Friday for all interested. To arrange for a tour guide, those interested should go to the Admissions office of the Arcon booth in the Union.

CASIAC Makes Course Announcement

As a consequence of the recent change in the graduation requirements of the College of Arts and Sciences, some students have sought a late change in registration in a course which is no longer a requirement for their graduation. Some wanted a change to registration on a pass-fail basis, others wanted to withdraw without the grade WF. Both of these actions constitute exceptions to University regulations about registration and require approval of an academic dean.

The academic deans of the College of Arts and Sciences will, for a limited time, review requests for such a change of registration which have, as a decisive factor, the changes in graduation requirements. These changes were thoroughly publicized in the COLLEGIAN during the week of November 3-7. The guidelines for this review are:

(1) The student must be passing the course to withdraw without a WF.

(2) The student must have no other pass-fail course (except in Education) this semester to change to pass-fail.

(3) The student must have already completed the new requirement in the division of the course in which he wishes to change his registration.

(4) The petition must be filed in the CASIAC office on or before Wednesday, November 26th.

Go to CASIAC (153 South College) to initiate such a change of registration.

THE SINGING FRIARS will make their campus debut in a concert here Saturday, November 29. (MDC photo)

Singing Friars Make Debut At University this Month

On Saturday, November 22, 1969, the Newman Club will present the "Singing Friars" in concert at 8:00 p.m. in the Newman Center Social Hall. The Singing Friars are a group of Franciscan seminarians studying for the priesthood at the St. Hyacinth's Seminary and College in Granby, Mass.

They are not professional entertainers but rather they look upon their singing as a way of spreading the Christian message of joy and the brotherhood of man through the use of the Folk Idiom.

Presently the group consists of eight Friars coming from New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Massachusetts. They have appeared at various other New England colleges and on a local television station several times.

Tickets will be sold for 99¢ at the Newman Center this week and at the door Saturday night. Proceeds will go to the Thanksgiving Food Drive.

Moratorium Television Coverage Consisted Of One Camera

(Editors Note: The following article is reprinted from yesterday's Boston Globe.)

WASHINGTON - The television networks can broadcast live and in color from the moon but not from the base of the Washington Monument. NBC had one, mind you, one live camera to photograph the largest political meeting in the history of the United States. It was used three times for a total of five minutes, and that was all the live coverage there was on American television; the other networks had none.

Think what it would have cost if the networks had gone out to buy the talent that was performing on the stage across the field from the great marble spike: Arlo Guthrie, Dick Gregory, Leonard Bernstein, Richie Havens, Pete Seeger, Earl Scruggs, Peter, Paul and Mary; Mitch Miller, John Denver, Tom Paxton, Hohn Hartford and the cast of "Hair" singing the super hit songs from the show. If that isn't a spectacular, then what is? Companies like Plymouth and Westinghouse pay hundreds of thousands of dollars to put entertainment of that quality on the tube, and here it was for free.

But that wasn't all. There was a supporting cast of hundreds of thousands costumed in everything from the saffron robes of Buddhist monks to cowboy outfits. There was street theater, impromptu traveling bands of music makers, giant puppets, a thousand different kinds of visual jokes, signs and slogans. Just the kind of stuff that drives a writer to make movies or try for a job in television.

On the more sober side, there was the political meaning of this event, which was either missed or mutilated. If, five years ago, somebody had told you that between a quarter and a half million people would turn up at the White House carrying hundreds of red flags you would have had him committed to the booby hatch. But it happened; there were countless red flags of revolution and black flags of anarchy there on Saturday.

On the flag poles planted in a circle around the base of the Washington Monument where the American flag usually flies, there was a Viet Cong flag, peace banners with the upside down Y, Yippie pennants and emblems from organizations too new or too obscure to be easily identifiable.

It would have been performing a service television is supposed to perform to show these symbols and how they were used. It would have been useful to let the television audience see and make its own judgment of how many people in that throng were signifying their politics by making the V-sign and how many were using the clenched fist and shouting, "Right on! Right on!" Because of the television blackout - and that's what it was for practical purposes, the public will have to accept reporters' estimates of these highly indicative acts.

Now let's look at what the networks' schedules show them putting on the air during the hours the President of the United States was hiding in his house behind barricades of buses and battalions of soldiers lest maddened waves of peace-crazed young Americans see him in the flesh and ask, "Why?" NBC was offering, among other items, "Banana Splits Adventure Hour," "The Flintstones" and "The All-American College Show." About the time this unbelievable march kicked off down Pennsylvania Avenue, Metromedia was airing "The Spirit of Notre Dame," a 1931 movie starring Andy Devine and Lew Ayres, for its Washington audience.

Later in the day, Metromedia showed the following musts: reruns of "Di," "I Love Lucy," "Gidget" and "I Spy." The American Broadcasting Company had a football game on, while CBS checked in with some real heavy stuff: "The Perils of Penelope Pitstop," "Scooby-Do, Where Are You" "Superman," and "The Red Skelton Show."

However, never let it be said that CBS, with its staff of highly paid, veteran newsmen is not alert to the exigencies of the times. No, no, CBS was on the spot with an evening special telecast, an hour and a half long, and do you know what it was because you weren't watching. You were too worked up and excited about the march, so you missed it. You missed, "Miss Teenage America with Dick Clark."

A lot of people are going to blame this disaster on Slugger Agnew. Slugger's all right. Don't pick on him, because he's one of the few elected officials we've got who shows himself for what he is. If he feels that his boss isn't getting enough adulation from th..se Alpo Dog Food salesmen who read the Associated Press wirecopy on the air, Slugger muscles himself some airtime to threaten the network executives.

He needn't have bothered. It appears from asking around that the decision to black out this enormous rally in favor of "The Archie Comedy Hour" and "Wacky Races" (CBS, the both of 'em) was made before Slugger opened America's biggest mouth. And that's the pity of it. They don't need to be threatened with censorship. They'll castrate themselves and call it "sound news judgment."

Fine Arts Center To BeStarted Soon

Preliminary plans for the new Fine Arts Center have been released by the University Planning Office.

The $13.8 million building will cover approximately 206,000 square feet and will be situated South of the Campus Pond and East of Herter Hall.

The location of the building, long since determined on the master plan, reflects the growing importance of fine arts to the University and the public because it will adjoin the main entrance mall to the campus

The massive structur e will contain theatres, auditoriums, studi space and a much needed gallery.

The art gallery will be below ground level. There will be 7,834 square feet of artificially lighted galley space.

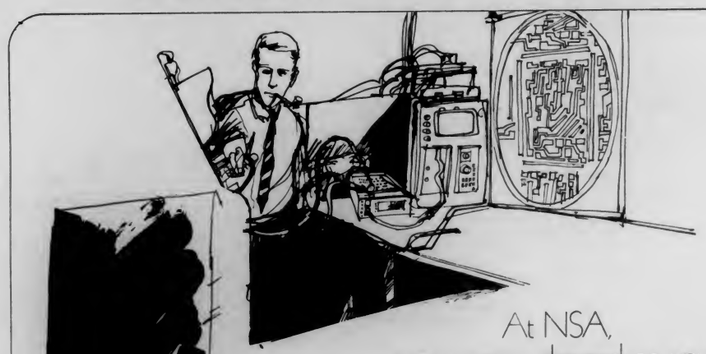
The architect, Kevin Roche of Eero Saarinen Associates, has organized the building around a network of paths which will permit entrance from many points. The principal entrance will be located between the theater and concert hall as a means of spreading pedestrian traffic.

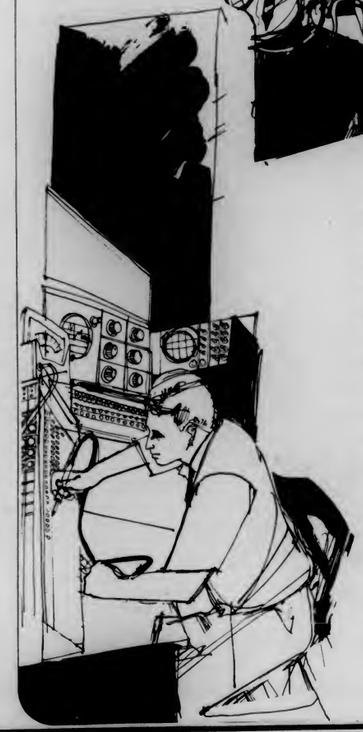
Construction will begin next spring and should be completed by 1973.

AN ARTIST'S CONCEPTION of the new Fine Arts Center shows the view one would see by looking over the pond.

FROM THE MALL one would see this artist's conception view of the Fine Arts Center.

ENGINEERS, MATHEMATICIANS:





At NSA,
our successes depend on yours.

Because of the nature and scope of the National Security Agency's mission, our successes are in direct relation to your achievements.

At NSA, we are responsible for designing and developing secure/invulnerable communications and EDP systems to transmit, receive and analyze much of our nation's most vital information. The advancing technologies applied in this work are such that they will frequently take you beyond the known and accepted boundaries of knowledge. Consequently, your imagination and resourcefulness are essential qualifications for success.

The Career Scene at NSA: ENGINEERS will find work which is performed nowhere else . . . devices and systems are constantly being developed which are in advance of any outside the Agency. As an Agency engineer, you will carry out research, design, development, testing and evaluation of sophisticated, large-scale cryptocommunications and EDP systems. You may also participate in related studies of electromagnetic propagation, upper atmosphere phenomena, and solid state devices using the latest equipment for advanced research within NSA's fully instrumented laboratories.

MATHEMATICIANS define, formulate and solve complex communications-related problems. Statistical mathematics, matrix algebra, and combinatorial analysis are but a few of the tools applied by Agency mathematicians. Opportunities for contributions in computer sciences and theoretical research are also offered.

COMPUTER SCIENTISTS participate in systems analysis and systems programming related to advanced scientific and business applications. Software design and development is included, as well as support in hardware design, development and modification.

Career Benefits: NSA's liberal graduate study program permits you to pursue two semesters of full-time graduate study at full salary. Nearly all academic costs are borne by NSA, whose proximity to seven universities is an additional asset.

Starting salaries, depending on education and experience, range from $9,169.00 to $15,000.00, and increases will follow systematically as you assume additional responsibility. Further, you will enjoy the varied career benefits and other advantages of Federal employment without the necessity of Civil Service certification.

How It was Done: UMass 48, UNH 7

A tough defense combining with a well tuned offense accounted for UMass' runaway 48-7 win at New Hampshire Saturday.

In photo at near left Steve Parnell is shown returning second half kickoff for 41 yards. Taking ball at his 25 and making good use of some blocks and a few smart moves, he put on quite a show.

Defensive end Russ Wood (87 at right) seems to have something to say about where Art Randlett(34) is going.

Second photo down on left shows Andy Guarino(74) and Dennis Collins(43) rushing in on Bob Hopkins fumble in second quarter. Collins eventually got the ball.

1969 Disappointment for Boston College Eagles

Injuries, Defense, Schedule Plague BC

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Assistant Sports Editor

What has happened to Boston College, UMass' upcoming grid opponent, this fall? A very probing question when one considers that the Eagles, who have managed only three victories in seven games, were expected to be a powerhouse in '69, an improvement over '68's fine 6-3 squad.

To generalize, things just haven't materialized for BC in this, Joe Yukica's second year as head coach. Yukica, who fielded the third best total offensive unit in the country last year, has run into troubles with injuries, a porous defense and a rough schedule which includes the likes of Penn State, Army, Villanova, Buffalo and Syracuse, just recently added to replace Holy Cross.

The Eagles have fallen to each of the four former clubs and have yet to face Syracuse. They started their season with two hard-fought victories over Navy and Tulane but then dropped four straight to Villanova, Army, Penn State and Buffalo in that order. Last weekend they rebounded by outpointing hapless Virginia Military Institute, 49-32 and now must prepare themselves for the invasion of the Redmen.

Following is a recap of Boston College's game-by-game progression.

BC vs. NAVY---

Boston College embarked on its '69 campaign with a comeback 21-14 win over Navy. BC trailed for most of the game and, late in the third quarter, was down 14-7. At this point junior quarterback Frank "Red" Harris rallied the club with two long scoring drives which were capped off with touchdown passes of 24 and seven yards to halfback Jim Catone, and the Eagles registered their first victory.

BC vs. TULANE---

Two TD's in the last five minutes and 52 seconds of this game were needed for BC's second win, 28-24 over Tulane. Catone scored the clincher on a 66-yard gallop. Although the durable halfback duo of Catone and Fred Willis gained 209 yards in this contest, quarterback Harris was able to hit on only 15 of 56 passes for 175 yards.

BC vs. VILLANOVA---

Following a one-week layoff, Boston College hosted a scrappy Villanova unit which clobbered the Eagles, 24-6, to start them on their four-game losing streak. Dark omens permeated from this fray as BC's ground attack was stopped, as Willis suffered badly bruised ribs and would be out of action against Army and Penn State, and as Villanova rolled up 399 yards against the defense.

BC vs. ARMY---

Army completely dominated BC, 38-7, and handed the Eagles their second loss in a row. Cadet Lynn Moore ran for an 82-yard score on the first play of the game while the entire Army ground attack punctured Boston College's defense for 360 yards.

The Eagles, minus Willis and fullback Joe McDonald, managed only 81 yards rushing, but Harris showed signs of full recovery as he hit on 18 of 34 tosses for 154 yards.

BC vs. PENN STATE---

Not only were two losses hard to take but BC had an away date with Penn State, which was riding the nation's longest win streak at 25. Rising to the occasion however, the Eagles fought hard and led their hosts, 16-10, late in the third period. But, to no one's surprise, the Nittany Lions stopped pussyfooting around and countered the challenge of the invaders with two long touchdown marches which totaled 164 yards, all on the ground, to put the affair out of reach.

Regardless of the final 38-16 score, Boston College played its best game of the year with Harris throwing for two touchdowns and Ed Rideout picking up 133 yards on kickoff returns.

BC vs. BUFFALO---

The Eagles returned to Chestnut Hill the following Saturday, anxious to even their record at 3-3 against the University of Buffalo. Although a three-point favorite, the home team lost, 35-21, as it blew most of its chances by losing three fumbles and surrendering six interceptions. The overall statistics were close with BC nipping the Bulls in total yardage, 326-316 but Eagle mistakes caused close observers to view this as BC's worst showing of the season.

BC vs. VMI---

With Fred Willis completely sound the Eagles snapped their losing streak by besting VMI, 49-32. Very early in the second quarter, BC was up 28-0. Yukica then substituted to the point where VMI closed the gap to 28-17 at halftime.

In the second half the first liners returned but couldn't get any breathing room until Harris hit split end John Bonistalli with a 23-yard scoring strike to put Boston College in front, 42-25, with five minutes left in the game.

Yukica is confident that his team has finally found itself after Willis gained 203 yards and Harris passed for 295 more against VMI. "We got back into the swing of things," he was quoted.

As entertainers for the Redmen, the Eagles will be healthier than they have been in a while with the potent backfield of Harris, Willis, Catone and McDonald all ready for action. Boston College will be hungry for a victory as it tries to maintain some satisfaction from a miserable year. UMass has ideas of its own, thus Saturday's tussle looms as a great matchup.

DeFlavio, McGarry Cited For Stellar Play at UNH

Connecticut halfback Vin Clements (Southington, Conn.), Massachusetts tackle Bill DeFlavio (Worcester, Mass.) and Maine fullback Bob Marchildon (Augusta, Me.) have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Clements, a 6'3 215-lb. junior, gained a UConn record of 273 yards rushing on 31 carries, including touchdown runs of 75 and 66 yards, completed a six yard scoring pass and returned a kickoff 18 yards to the Huskies' 25-15 win over Rhode Island. An injury sidelined Clements in the fourth quarter as UConn made its record 5-3 and finished in a second place tie at 3-2 in the Conference.

DeFlavio, a 5'9 215-lb. sophomore, caught the New Hampshire quarterback for losses four times and was the key to the UMass defense that held the Wildcats to five first downs and minus nine yards rushing. DeFlavio's play highlighted the 48-7 UMass win that brought the Redmen championship record to 5-0 and overall mark to 6-2.

Marchildon, a 5'9 180-lb. sophomore, returned to the lineup after missing four games and gained 90 yards on 23 tries. He ran for one touchdown and caught a TD pass as Maine topped Vermont 38-30 to finish in a tie for second place at 3-2 and conclude a winning 5-4 season.

Other nominations were: Offense - halfback Dan Sullivan (Maine), fullback Pete Clifford (Vermont), tackle Cliff McDonald (New Hampshire), flanker Pete Martin (Rhode Island) and halfback Jerry Grasso (Massachusetts); Defense - linebacker Mark Richardson (Maine), middleguard Phil Doran (Connecticut), safety Frank Mazanec (Vermont), halfback Bob Cross (New Hampshire) and end Warren Negri (Rhode Island); Sophomores - defensive back Jim Sproul (Connecticut), halfback Bob Rodger (Vermont), defensive tackle Nelson Cassavaugh (New Hampshire), quarterback Bob Ehrhardt (Rhode Island) and offensive tackle Bob Donlin (Massachusetts).

UMass tight end Nick McGarry, 6'5 230, has been named to the ECAC All East team for his performance at New Hampshire where he scored on a 19 yard pass from Tim Adams. McGarry has not caught a large amount of passes this fall as Vic Fusia has chosen to go with the ground attack but week in, week out, he is one of the steadiest players on the field for the Redmen.

When he has been thrown the ball he's done his job as his 18 receptions for 268 yards and five touchdowns attest. He is also a tough blocker on the run.

BU's Taylor Wins Agganis

BOSTON (AP) - Bruce Taylor, spectacular kick return specialist and defensive back for Boston University, was named yesterday as the 1969 winner of the Harry Agganis Memorial Award given annually to the outstanding senior collegiate football player in New England.

The speedy cornerback and safety man, who has broken open several games with his long runs, was the unanimous choice by a committee representing the New England Football Writers Association.

He was the first defensive player named for the honor in the award's history and also the first from BU, where Agganis was an all-time great athlete in the late 1940s and early 1950s before going on to play major league baseball with the Boston Red Sox until his untimely death of natural causes in 1955.

Taylor, a 6-foot, 190-pounder from Perth Amboy, N.J., is one of the big factors in BU's best season in history 8-1 with one game to go and is generally expected to be a high draft choice by the professionals.

He leads the Terriers in scoring this season with 30 points on five touchdowns - all via long runs. They came on a 104-yard jaunt with a short field goal attempt, punt returns of 82 and 56 yards, a 45-yard pass interception, and a 49-yard run from scrimmage on an end-around play when he was put on the offensive unit for one play.

Booters Hold Banquet

Last night, in the Berkshire Room of the Student Union, the UMass soccer team capped off its season with a team banquet in which senior certificates were presented, small talks were given, most valuable and most improved players were cited and 1970's co-captains were elected.

Varsity "M" Club certificates were given to seniors Tom Malone and John Mercury by Jim Mulcahy, chairman of the organization.

Noteworthy addresses were delivered by Larry Briggs, a soccer expert, and varsity soccer coach Peter Broaca. Briggs concluded his brief talk with his personal description of the '69 booters, "Good coaching, good leadership and a damn good soccer team."

Broaca took time to praise his captains, Dick Meyer and Rick Matuszczak for their outstanding leadership. He also expressed his appreciation to his seniors.

Most valuable and most improved player recognitions were given to John Mercury and Scott Nickerson respectively. Rick Matuszczak was re-elected as co-captain and was joined by Augie Calheno to lead the Redmen next fall.

Over 500 tickets for Saturday's UMass grid clash with Boston College are still available in Boyden 255 and will be on sale through Friday noon. price of these ducats is $4 and represent the last opportunity UMass students will have to see the Redmen in action in this, their biggest game of the year.

Senate President Leaves University

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

Student Senate President Bruce R. Balboni last night announced his resignation from the Senate and his withdrawal from the University, "effective immediately."

He stated that his action was not a quick decision and that it was made "with a certain amount of regret." Balboni, who was elected to the Senate presidency last spring, spoke of the University as being a "dry and unrewarding experience," and claimed that most of his courses in three and one-half years of undergraduate study were "irrelevant." Balboni remarked that the University was unable to answer his questions on life, . . . "Questions of Who am I? Where am I going? and What shall I do with my life?"

Balboni stated he was pleased with the Senate actions so far this year. He expressed the opinion that the Senate has "set a new style" and has passed "much important legislation." He spoke of his disappointment over the results of last week's referendum and urged the Senate to move "more actively into outside political activity."

He was adament in maintaining that the student government was not a mediator for the Administration or the Trustees. He stated, "We the Student Government are . . . responsible to the student and we will always honor that responsibility." Balboni expressed the hope that "people can get together to solve the problems that face the University and the nation."

He left the Senate chambers wishing all those with whom he had worked and shared life "peace and good luck."

Upon Balboni's resignation, Student Senate Vice-President Cynthia Olken automatically became President. Miss Olken, a senior from Sharon, Mass., was elected vice-president last spring and prior to that served as Senate secretary.

It is expected that an election will be held to fill the post of vice-president within the next few weeks. Glen Elters, chairman of finance committee, and Jim Albert, chairman of budgets committee are expected to run for the office.

Previous to serving as Senate president, Balboni was President of the class of 1970 two years ago.

". . . I must leave to attempt to find the answers."

Revised SGA Constitution Presented to Convention

By JOHN J. DUBOIS
Senate Reporter

Because the referendum on the new S.G.A. constitution failed to attain the necessary 40 percent turnout, the Student Government Affairs Committee last night reported to the Constitutional Convention a new document (S 78).

Among the most significant changes in the committee document is the absence of a popularly-elected student body President, which had been adopted at the last constitutional convention by a near unanimous vote. S.G.A. Chairman Dawn Dudash reported that the committee felt that the delineation of powers of said office was insufficiently clear, and that further study of the question, including a survey of other schools, was needed. Senator Nims moved the previously-adopted measure as an amendment to the committee document, but the amendment failed by a lopsided voice vote.

In other action, the convention adopted an amendment allowing Stockbridge students to vote in University referenda, with the exception of those concerning strictly S.A.T.F. funds (the student activities tax is not assessed on Stockbridge students).

Student Senate V.P. Cynthia Olken became President upon Balboni's resignation. A vice-presidential election will be held in December. (MDC photo by Wayne Lilyestrom)

An attempt to maintain a constitutional convention (the Senate plus the class officers) as the body to establish financial and other class policies failed. The new constitution now provides for no such body.

Senator Twiss, a member of the Student Union Governing Board, sought unsuccessfully to exempt the Campus Center complex from the general provision placing all student-financed buildings under the ultimate purview of the three student senates (Undergraduate, Graduate, and Stockbridge). Senator Twiss argued that such an arrangement would cause greater inefficiency by placing another bureaucratic level between the management of the Union and the ultimate authority, the Board of Trustees or its representative, Senator Verrochi in rebuttal contended the largest student-financed building certainly ought to be under the purview of the student government, which can reasonably lay claim to being, at least potentially, the most representative student governing body on campus.

The Senate was slated to take up the question of the status of ROTC on campus, with a motion on the agenda to endorse the motion of faculty Senator Isidore Silver.

Reflection . . .

By RON LABRECQUE
Senior Reporter

"Above all else, to thine own self be true".

Someone said that once, I don't remember who did, but it doesn't really matter anyway. The point is, it is trite and just doesn't have any meaning in our world anymore.

It seemed as though there just wasn't any room for us to be individuals anymore, or time.

But someone rejected the whole damn system last night, trustees, Nixon, Soc 101 and apple pie.

He stood up and said, no, it isn't right.

President Balboni will be missed, a lot.

But isn't it good to know that someone has stopped wallowing in the muck here to find full and truthful answers to the questions "Who am I? Where am I going? What does my life mean?"

To those of us who came out of The Student Senate Chambers last night with tears in our eyes, it is good to know.

He made us realize that we were people. It came as a shock.

The AIR POLLUTION: TEACH-IN sponsored by Action For Quality Environment will be held tonight in the Public Health Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. The speakers will include Dr. John Naegely, Head of the Environmental Sciences department at UMass and the Waltham Experimental Station, Dr. Peters of the Public Health Service, State Representative John Olver from Amherst, and Dr. William Rosenau of the Dept. of Plant and Soil Sciences.

The forum will be opened to public discussion after brief talks by each of the distinguished guests.

Courses "Irrelevant"

Following is the text of Student Senate President Bruce R. Balboni's resignation speech delivered to the Student Senate last night.

It is with a certain amount of regret that I must tell you of my intention to withdraw from the University and to resign from the Senate - effective immediately. This is not a snap decision, for as some of you know I had considered not returning to school this fall and for most of the time that I have been here since September I have questioned my presence.

There are a whole host of reasons why I have taken this step, not the least of which are personal. But aside from these I have found the academic climate here at the University very dry and unrewarding. Although it is trite - my courses over 3-1/2 years have been for the most part irrelevant. A dropping of requirements is certainly a step in the right direction but beyond this we must redefine the role of the professor and his relation to the students in the classroom.

We have been struggling for control over social regulations now for three years, but clearly academic reform should be the Senate's main thrust. The establishment of the powerful departmental student committees is vital, and hopefully this step, in concert with a strengthening of dorm and area governments, will lead to the day when a central massive bureacracy known as the Student Government Association will no longer be needed.

The recent Trustees' decisions regarding alcoholic beverages and dormitory self-determination are more or less acceptable, but they ignore our basic demand and, that is, that students should be deciding these concerns for themselves. The Board of Trustees is quick to tell us that according to Chapter 75 of the Laws of the Commonwealth they are charged with the maintenance of all aspects of the University. This may be, and if it is, the basic question changes. Now we must ask - Is the Board of Trustees willing to help us make the necessary changes so that student control of all social regulations becomes a reality? I believe that the fight to gain this right is worth fighting and that its results will be favorable.

The recent referendum concerning the November 15th March on Washington was a great disappointment for me. The outcome did not prove to me that I was wrong or that the Senate was wrong; instead it served to strengthen my desire to see this student government and this student body move more actively into outside political activity. Hopefully the Senate's new Social Action Committee will spearhead such efforts.

I believe that we have accomplished much this fall. We have passed important legislation and are about to enact a much needed new constitution, but more important we have set a style and taken a stand that says - We, the student government are not mediator, we are responsible to students and we will always honor that responsibility first and foremost rather than one that might be felt towards the administration or the Board of Trustees. Whether the student body appreciates this position or not, I hope that you all will remain determined to lead because pure representation will result in stagnation and a wasting of talents.

I have enjoyed the Senate presidency. It is a rich and rewarding experience with much educational value. I do believe, however, that it is two jobs - internal Senate requires all the time of at least two people and external Senate business the same.

After I have settled the questions that burn within me I may return with a different outlook. I cannot now work to change a system I want no part of.

I hope that a real community can be built here at UMass - one including administrators, faculty, and students. Many people fail to recognize the importance of the means. I hope and I do believe that you all can get together on the problems that now divide this University as wil as the nation . . . now I must go but I am comforted by the thought that people make a life and a life is too important to forget.

I wish all of you peace and good luck.

Sincerely,
Bruce R. Balboni
Student Senate President

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

WASHINGTON (AP) - U. S. combat deaths in Vietnam have risen for the second straight week. But officials say the level is still low enough to permit President Nixon to order additional American troops withdrawn. Military sources said the official weekly casualty report, due Thursday, will show that more than 100 American soldiers were killed in battle last week, compared with 97 the previous week and 83 the week before that.

SAIGON (AP) 0 North Vietnamese gunners pounded the Special Forces camps at Bu Prang and Duc Lap in the central highlands Wednesday despite massive air strikes aginst enemy positions.

LONDON (AP) - People around the world reacted generally with almost a ho-hum Wednesday on Apollo 12's venture. It seemed to indicate they now are taking moon voyages for granted.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Backers of Clement F. Haynsworth Jr.'s nomination to the Supreme Court gained significant numerical support Wednesday while losing the support of one senior Republican and gaining that of another. The vote is due early Friday afternoon.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Legislation to increase Social Security benefits by more than 10 per cent probably will pass at least the House this year, Ways and Means Committee members said Wednesday. This could pave the way for an increase retroactively effective to January 1970.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Most Americans doing business in Vietnam, Senate hearing witnesses said Wednesday, buy local currency on the black market - a billion-dollar operation said to be run by international profiteers. The result, senators were told, ravages the economy and must ultimately be met by U. S. tax dollars.

ROME (AP) - About 12 million Italians left their jobs Wednesday in a genera l strike called to enforce demands for more low-cost housing.

Draft Lottery Passes

By WALTER R. MEARS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate passed President Nixon's draft lottery bill Wednesday and sent it to the White House. That means the next men inducted may be chosen under the new system.

Based on a national drawing of birthdays, and designed ultimately to concentrate the draft on 19-year-olds, it will supplant induction rules under which the oldest eligible men are the first summoned to military service.

The bill passed by voice vote after a scant hour of sparsely attended debate.

Sen. Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., cast the only opposing vote, saying the measure does not adequately deal with the inequities of selective service.

Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, promised his panel will open comprehensive draft hearings by Feb. 15 in an effort to fashion a general reform bill.

Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said the next draft call will come in January, and the administration will try to have the system in operation by then.

"We hope to have the new random selection in effect for the next draftees," he said.

When the new system is fully effective, it will mean a single year of draft liability for most young Americans, instead of the seven uncertain years they now face.

Nixon already has announced he will designate young men in their 19th year as the prime group for induction.

While the program is being phased in, however, all draft-eligible men up to 26 years of age will face equal liability to selection by lottery.

Under present law, the President is empowered to designate the prime age group, but once he does so, the oldest men in that goup must be summoned first.

The bill the Senate passed repeals that requirement, opening the way for the lottery.

The lottery itself amounts to a scrambling of birth dates. The days of the year will be drawn, and each date assigned a number.

"If No. 1 is Nov. 15, all those born on Nov. 15 would be in the highest priority for call," Stennis explained. "If Nov. 20 were to receive No. 365, all those born on this day would be in the lowest order for call."

Another national drawing would scramble the alphabet to assign priorities among men born on the same date.

A man deferred as a student during his 19th year would go into the pool when his deferment expired.

Sen. Ted to Bid Farewell At Dad's "White" Mass

By CORNELIUS F. HURLEY
Associated Press Writer

HYANNISPORT, Mass. (AP) - Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, the only surviving son of Joseph P. Kennedy, will speak during the Mass at his father's funeral Thursday.

Kennedy performed a similar duty when he delivered the eulogy for his slain brother, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, in St. Patrick's Church in 1968.

A white funeral mass will be celebrated for the 81-year-old former ambassador at St. Francis Xavier's Roman Catholic Church in neighboring Hyannis, which the Kennedys have attended for years. Afterward the body will be taken by hearse to Brookline, south of Boston, for burial in Holyhood Cemetary.

Kennedy, whose sons included the 35th President of the United States, and two U. S. Senators, and who as a financier amassed one of the nation's largest fortunes, died Tuesday after eight years of failing health.

At the funeral Mass Sen. Kennedy expects to read from a privately printed book that was put together several years ago. The book is called "The Fruitful Bouth," and is a collection of essays about the late ambassador.

A spokesman emphasized that the family was planning the funeral and added that in essence it would be a family-only affair. Mrs. Rose Kennedy, the widow - always strong no matter how crushing her sorrow- was overseeing the plans, the spokesman added, and was taking personal charge of selecting the music.

Wednesday morning the family attended Mass together in the Kennedy home. It was celebrated by the Rev. John Cavanaugh, former president of Notre Dame and a long time family friend.

Thursday's funeral was to begin at 9 a.m. with the Mass at St. Francis Eavier's, a small, white church in the heart of Hyannis.

The service was to be a "white funeral Mass," different from traditional Roman Catholic funeral Masses in that the priests wear white vestments rather than the usual purple or black.

Mrs. Kennedy, deeply religious, requested the white Mass, a spokesman said, because she wanted the service to accent the message of resurrection and joy after death rather than mourning.

Richard Cardinal Cushing, archbishop of Boston and another long-time family friend will be the celebrant.

Dorchester Donations Solicited in Dorms

Two weeks ago, Mrs. Victoria Delee of Dorchester County, South Carolina visited UMass to ask for student support in her fight against poverty in that state.

The Afro-American Society, the Martin Luther King Council, and the United Christian League have taken the responsibility to assist her in this struggle. According to leaders this crisis not only gives college students to do something to help others, but also gives them a chance to work together for the good of their fellow Americans, a chance to put their beliefs into action instead of just words.

To aid in this fight against malnutrition, students are asked to donate food in the form of canned goods or other imperishable items to dorm representatives who will send the food to residents of Dorchester County. Representatives will be in the following dorms to accept student contributions today:

Dickinson...Stephanie Harrison, 6-6668. Field...Nysa Richardson, 6-6750, Glenn Walker, Karl Sanders, 6-6904. Grayson....Jim Parks, 6-6917 Webster....Leslie Bragley. Van Meter North.... Gloria Bourne, 5-2744. Cance... Ernie Griffin, 6-5806. Pierpont ..Sandi Mitchner, 6-5246. Washington Upper...Leon Wells, 6-9222. Washington Lower....Calvin Bradley, 6-9030. Astros End Lunar Stay, Rejoin Fellow Traveler

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - The two Americans who have spent almost thirty hours on the surface of the moon are scheduled to blast off at 9:23 this morning and rejoin their fellow astronaut in orbit around the moon.

Charles Conrad Jr. and Alan L. Bean re-entered the lunar landing module, Intrepid, earlier this morning after spending several hours walking on the moon for the second time. During their second excursion outside the Intrepid, Conrad and Bean were scheduled to collect rocks and then hike to Surveyor 3 spacecraft to snip off pieces of it to return to earth.

Intrepid is scheduled to dock with the Apollo spacecraft, Yankee Clipper manned by Richard F. Gordon, Jr., at 1:02 p.m. today. After 2 a.m. tomorrow, the astronauts will fire their main rocket engine to blast out of lunar orbit.

On their first moonwalk, Earth got only a brief view of Charles Conrad Jr. and Alan L. Bean before their television failed. There was little chance the camera could be repaired. It was apparently burned out and blinded by the harsh rays of the sun.

But both Conrad and Bean kept up a constant comic commentary as they went through the serious business of exploring the moon and setting up experiments.

They established the first nuclear power station on the moon, set up a seismometer so sensitive it will pick up their footsteps and will listen for moon impacts after they're gone, and other instruments to measure what happens to gases released on the moon and the strength of the solar wind that pervades the solar system.

When they retired for the day, Conrad, his voice businesslike again after the excitement of the first moonwalk, said they wouldn't take as long to eat, and they might not be able to sleep as long as planned.

The astronauts wanted to begin their second moonwalk early.

"We're not going to sit here," Conrad said, "so we'll give you a holler whenever we get up and we're going to start clipping right then and there, and be ready to go over the sill as soon as possible and not cut ourselves at the end."

It was that mixture of hard-headed thinking and gleeful exploration that was the pattern of these two men on the moon.

"Hey," Conrad exclaimed with boyish wonder. "I just threw something and it bounced up and must have gone 300 feet. The stuff discoveries are made of."

"Hey," Bean said, "quit playing and get some work done." Conrad only giggled back, "I could stay out here all day."

That same playful explorer was the man who guided the moonship Intrepid down to a perfect, deadeye landing, 20 feet from the edge of a crater in which lies the remains of an old unmanned moon probe, Surveyor 3, the object of their second moonwalk Thursday morning.

So accurate was Conrad's piloting that Surveyor was only some 600 feet away from the spot where Intrepid touched down at 1:54 a.m. EST. When he first emerged from the spacecraft, it was the Surveyor that gave Conrad one of his greatest thrills.

He stepped away from Intrepid cautiously testing his ability to walk on the moon, and then let out, "You'd lever believe it," he said chuckling.

Everything seemed to delight Conrad. But it was tiring too.

"We won't have any trouble sleeping tonight," he admitted.

The astronauts finally retired about 1:15 p.m. after their long first day on the moon and their futile attempts to fix their television camera. Shortly afterward, Richard F. Gordon Jr., piloting the mothership Yankee Clipper patrolling in lunar orbit, also called it a day and went to bed.

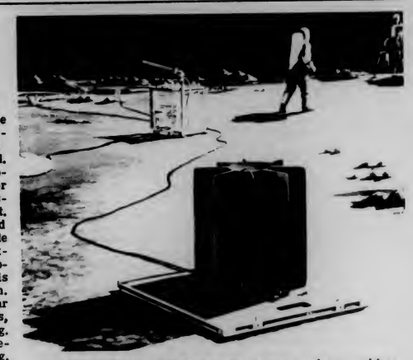
Conrad and Bean on the surface during their first scouting expeditivn had all the flavor of small boys in their own private world.

From the moment Conrad stepped off the ladder shortly after 6:30 a.m. he was a man transformed by his own excitement, everywhere he went he hummed a private song, "Dum, de dum, de dum dum dum." And he constantly giggled and chuckled at the objects he found and the tricks his new environment played on him.

The sun was low in the lunar sky, dawn at the Ocean of Storms, and the shadows cast were long. Mission Control estimated Intrepid's shadow was 230 feet long. Conrad, 5 feet 6-1/2, cast a 45-foot shadow on the lunar plain.

As much fun as it seemed, it was hard work too. Both moon explorers had peak heart rates during the moonwalk of 150 beats a minute. Conrad would spot an interesting rock embedded in the powdery black soil, and lean down and dig it out with both gloved hands. Before long their white spacesuits were covered with the clinging lunar dirt. "We're really filthy," Conrad said.

In the time they were out on their first excursion, more than an hour longer than the Apollo 11 astronauts in the pioneer landing last July, they collected some 45 pounds of rocks and soil, as much as Neil A. Armstrong and Edwin E. Aldrin Jr. collected.



MOON SIMULATION shows the generator that provides about 60 watts of continuous power for Apollo lunar surface scientific experiments. The generator, named SNAP 27 weighs but 45 pounds. The Apollo 12 astronauts Charles Conrad and Alan Bean rejoin Richard Gordon this morning.

Collegian to Publish Description of Courses

On Monday, November 24, the DAILY COLLEGIAN, in cooperation with the Student Senate, will publish its second descriptive guide to courses. The course guide, composed wholly of written descriptions furnished by faculty members, will cover courses to be offered in the Spring of 1970. The guide will be incorporated into the pre-registration booklet; and will be distributed to resident students at the usual COLLEGIAN distribution points.

The first such descriptive course guide was published last Spring for Fall 1969 courses - its usefulness and success warranted a second publication, according to those responsible for its compilation.

Comprehensive descriptions of courses to be offered were solicited from all faculty members during October; and large numbers of faculty responded with detailed write-ups of their courses. All courses for the Spring semester are not included, because many faculty did not reply. Enough course are included, however, for the guide to be helpful to students. Response from the largest schools and colleges was particularly good; and students in these areas will find many courses described in greater detail than in the usual catalog.

Donald Epstein, editor in chief of the COLLEGIAN, said, in his letter to faculty members soliciting course descriptions, "We expect that students will use this guide in their selection of courses, looking for those offerings which are particularly suited to their interests. One effect of such a choice will, of necessity, be a greater personal relevance of your teaching to your students."

This second course guide, unlike the earlier effort, will include a number of graduate courses from many departments. While primarily undergraduate in emphasis, and including mostly undergraduate courses, some graduate offerings will be announced and described.

All undergraduates are invited to read and use the second descriptive course guide, to be included in the official pre-registration schedule booklet distributed on Monday, November 24. Faculty and graduate students will receive the booklet in their major departments.

The Provost's Office assisted with the printing and distribution of the circular letter to faculty; and extended its services in collecting and processing course descriptions.

Demonstrators Mob State House For More Money

BOSTON (AP) - About 150 angry welfare demonstrators clogged the hallway outside the State House office of Gov. Francis W. Sargent Wednesday. Demanding bigger winter clothing allowances, they chanted "We want Sarge," and "We want boots."

Nine uniformed State House policemen kept the demonstrators from entering the governor's office itself.

At one point, State House Supt. George Luciano told the protestors they could remain as long as they were orderly, but would be removed if there was any unruliness. They evoked only jeers from the demonstrators, one of whom shouted that they had a "right to five minutes of the governor's time."

Lucinao said Sargent would not see the demonstrators. The governor was inside his office, Luciano told newsmen, three rooms removed from the demonstration.

Text of NewPolicy On Use of Alcohol

The Board of Trustees at its meeting of November 14, 1969, voted to replace the present alcoholic beverage policy described in Paragraph G (p. 69) of the 1969-70 Student Handbook with the following new statement:

"G. Alcoholic Beverages

1. The acquisition, possession, transportation and consumption of alcoholic beverages, including but not limited to ale, beer and wine, are governed by various provisions of the laws of The Commonwealth of Massachusetts. In general, the statutes provide that (1) no person or group may sell alcoholic beverages with out an appropriate license granted by the Commonwealth through a local government licensing authority, (2) no person shall appear in a state of intoxication in a public place, or disturb the peace in any place while intoxicated, (3) no person shall drive a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcoholic beverages, (4) no person or group shall purchse or otherwise procure alcoholic beverages for the purposes of consumption by a minor (under 21 years of age) unless the acquiring person is the spouse, parent or guardian of the minor, and (5) a minor (a) shall not use the liquor identification card of another, or furnish false information in obtaining any such card, or alter or deface such a card, and (b) shall not knowingly transport or carry on his or her person any alcoholic beverages, unless accompanied by his or her parent or legal guardian.

2. These statutes are a part of the criminal laws of Massachusetts. Penalties for violating them include fines of various amounts and imprisonment for varying terms. They are enforced by the police authorities, but the University expects that University students will comply with them. Violation of them will constitute grounds for disciplinary action under this Code.

3. In addition to observance of the Massachusetts law, with exposure to the penalties provided by law if statutes are violated, students shall not transport, possess, offer or consume alcoholic beverages on University property in violation of the following regulations:

a. Alcoholic beverages shall not be offered for sale but may be offered for consumption on a social or gratuitous basis.

b. Alcoholic beverages shall not be offered or consumed in group functions except in places, whether in or out of doors, and at times and under circumstances previously approved by a responsible University agency.

c. Definitions:

i. University property includes property owned by the Commonwealth and used by the University, property owned or leased by the University of Massachusetts Building Authority and property, whether or not owned by the Commonwealth or owned or leased by the Authority, occupied as a fraternity, sorority or premises of any other organization of University students.

ii. A group function is a function presented or attended by more than six persons.

iii. The responsible agency as to any place is the agency designated as such by the President of the University or his designee."

This new policy is effective at once. All sections of the code of student conduct pertaining to behavior resulting from misuse of alcoholic beverages continue in effect.

Ric Masten to Appear in Amherst, Sings of the Journey That Is Life

Ric Masten, a poet, songwriter, and folksinger from Big Sur, California, will be making two appearances in Amherst this Sunday. He will appear at 2:30 p.m. at the Unitarian Church on 121 North Pleasant St., and at 7:00 p.m. in the main lounge of Pierpont House. There is no admission charge.

Masten has lived a kaleidoscope life, dropping in and out several times. While dropping in and dropping out of a half-dozen colleges and universities, he managed to make a living as a trashman, short-order cook, cement finisher, day laborer, and offset pressman. He finally settled down as a Hollywood songwriter, producing the music for "Muscle Beach Party" and similar unforgettable Hollywood classics.

Fed up with it all, he left the money scene and dropped out again, moving to a mountain at Big Sur. He now writes material that may not sell as well as beach party movies, but then it wasn't written to be sold, only to be sung. Masten writes and sings primarily about the journey that is his life. His words and music reach for the universal threads that bind him with each member of his audience.

He describes himself this way: "I'm not really a 'folksinger', or a very good guitar picker. I don't think what I do is entertainment, so what am I? Well I guess I'm just the best Ric Masten you will meet today. I collect myself in song so that when I'm doing my 'singing thing' I am doing myself. If you don't like my songs, you wouldn't like me."

Those who have seen him perform have described him as "impossible to discuss objectively" (U. of Del. daily) and as "a smiling man who told me he was plastic. He isn't." (Fla. Alligator). Many have called it a religious experience.

Ric Masten's two appearances are being sponsored by Student Religious Liberals (SRL), a group of students affiliated with the Unitarian Society of Amherst. SRL focuses on personal and social issues which the group feels are fundamentally religious in nature, For example, members of Student Religious Liberals conducted a 24-hour Vigil and Fast for Peace at the Unitarian Church on October 15 and are active in the movement to extricate the university from the war machine, believing that these issues are basically moral ones, thus essentially religious.

Hillel Sponsors Folk Concert

Folk singer Shlomo Carlebach, an ordained rabbi who left his pulpit to bring his message in music to audiences in concert halls, coffee houses and to student gatherings throughout the world, will make his second appearance of this year at UMass this weekend.

The concert, sponsored by the UMass Hillel Foundation, will be held in the Student Union Ballroom Saturday, Nov. 22 at 8:30 p.m.

Combining the contemporary search for awareness and involvement with a reinterpretation of the Hasidic musical tradition in his own warm style, this artist has transmitted his message from San Fransico to Tel Aviv.

Tickets for the concert are on sale at the UMass Student union Box Office, and will be available at the door.

Weekend Entertainment

Talent Review Features Area College Students

The Jeffersons, recently described by Billboard magazine as "an exceptional new duo out of Massachusetts", will perform in concert this Saturday at the UMass Intercollegiate Talent Revue, 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Consisting of Al Tompkins ('68) and Barry Wendell ('70), The Jeffersons have been praised as "a great new sound on the contemporary music scene" by Joe Harper of WBZ-TV, who hosted the group twice last summer on "New England Today". They have also appeared on Channel 3, Hartford, and Channel 22, Springfield.

Their first record, "Bring Me Your Love While You May" and "Changes", received favorable critical review from many New England radio stations. It was programmed as far as the midwest.

Saturday night's appearance will preceed a winter tour of colleges and night clubs, including an engagement at the Boston Playboy Club in January.

The Revue will also include Frannie Botelho, The Musigals, The Statesmen, and other exceptional 5-college area talent.

The show is being sponsored by the UMass Chorale, which hopes to establish the Revue on an annual basis. Tickets are available at E 14 Machmer or at the door.

Educational TV Almost National

Four of every five persons in the United States are now within viewing range of educational television, according to the U. S. Office of Education.

The potential educational TV viewing audience has grown from 105 million to 165 million since 1963, when Federal funds first became available to establish and expand ETV stations.

More than 100 ETV stations have been activated and 77 expanded since 1963 with Federal financial support, and the number of States without ETV service has been reduced to three--Alaska, Montana and Wyoming.

Under the EBFP, the number of reserved ETV channels utilized has more than doubled. It is estimated that some 69 million persons have better television reception as a result of ETV station expansion and improvement.

COMMENTARY

The Way We See It

A Cry for Peace: And the Audience is Gassed

STREET THEATRE: another gig by the Chicago Eight? Continued Conspiracy serial #13. Yippies. Weathermen, CDU tactical police, mass media people, DC residents, US marshals, impromptu revolutionaries, Mobe personnel, thousands of extras - the audience is gassed.

Came to the capitol to March Against Death; end the war; end earth death. The leaflets and banners said STOP THE TRIAL and FREE BOBBY. Department of anti-Justice at 5 p.m.

"It was not that the masses had or imagined that they had the plan of a new social, political, and economic system. They had not, and they did not believe they had. The defects of socialism we have pointed out in the socialist scheme were no secret from them. It was a much more dangerous state of affairs than that. It was that they were becoming so disgusted with the current system, with its luxury, its waste, and its general misery, that they did not care what happened afterwards so long as they could destroy it. It was a return to a state of mind comparable to that which had rendered possible the debacle of the Roman Empire." - H.G. Wells on the moral exhaustion of Europe during World War I in "The Outline of History."

March 21, 1969. A federal grand jury indicted Bobby Seale, Dave Dellinger, Lee Weiner, Tom Hayden, John Froines, Jerry Rubin, Abbie Hoffman, and Rennie Davis. Charge: having a state of mind to "combine, conspire, confederate, and agree . . . to travel in interstate commerce with the intent to incite, organize, promote, encourage, participate in, and carry on a riot and to commit acts of violence in furtherance of a riot, and to aid to make weapons to be used against the police: to shout obscenities at, throw objects at, threaten and physically assault policemen and National Guard troops; and to obstruct traffic and damage and seize property in the city of Chicago." Awkward rhetoric, clumsy case.

The seven now have a nine-to-five government job on the 23rd floor of Chicago's federal building. Brother Seale is out of the way for years. The trial continues. "The trial is a farce." "The trial is legal insanity." "The trial is American non-justice." "The trial must be stopped." "The trial must be stopped." "Stop the trial." "Free Bobby."

Hundreds of protestors hastened pace. There were thousands. Banners, flags, signs: they were colored, but my memories are in black and white and grey.

McLuhan begins to chuckle. Look who's trying to put Chicago, I mean Washington, into linear terminology. WPOP reporter-authority sounding objective describes what's happening - happened. No apparent widespread violence. No apparent police brutality. Small crowd. When things began to go, he was phoning in his story to the station. Didn't see the National Guard hiding in the Justice Building. Did see the President's press secretary taking notes in the window. Didn't see the arriving raincoated (kid you not) fed person shake hands with the smiling police captain. Then putting their gas masks on together they walked into the police line.

"I see you, and you see me. I experience you, and you experience me. I see your behavior. You see my behavior. But I do not and never have and never will see your experience of me." -R.D. Laing, "The Politics of Experience."

The D.C. Civil Disorder Unit had surrounded the Justice building. A hundred of them streamed out of a nearby building. The moving mass started to slow down. "They must be losing gas now," one cop said watching them. The moving mass began slowing down as a group of them gathered around the front of the building. "They must be using gas now," one cop said watching them.

"I cannot experience your experience. You cannot experience my experience. We are both invisible men. All men are invisible to one another. Experience is man's invisibility to man."

Meanwhile back in the toyland of 9:05's. The students continue to bicker over coed proposals and the best use of student taxes. Lunch conversations once of geodesic domes and Paul McCartney now - "Did you go to Washington?" "Yeah." "Get gassed?" "Real bad." Newborn radicals. Baptised on the streets. Enter kazoo music: Just ain't got no home in the world anymore."

ROTC debates babbline. Feasibility and cost analysis. The university has lost its critical abilities. Sold to MIC. Rhetoric confrontation compared to that in Washington. The debaters swim in abstractions. Linear.

Life-substaining vs. life-damaging. In the Chicago courtroom and outside the Justice building. Came close to reaching the peak of the struggle, here the motion just begins to build.

In media terms, Washington was a more subtle police defense-attack. Used car salesmen are adept at manipulating automobile appearances. Similar skills applicable to influencing the media (public) image of the street theatre. Hard to photograph in gas. CBS films Chicago-clubbing clearly. Nixon didn't want to be another Daly. Window as in DC-GAS makes the perfect home. CDU didn't fulfill the Chicago Cop devil image. "I don't know why they used the gas," said the sergeant. The MP's gave the students directions then pulled on their gas masks.

The devil was hidden from the media - Nixon in the White House, Mitchell and his boys hiding behind window blinds and in helicopters. Their (notice-Us-Then) perceptual models are obsolete. Cranberry analogies with war research. C'mon. Walking out of a ROTC debate head clouded. Running through the capitol business section head all gassed up. Mr. Jones rolls up his cadillac windows crying, you don't know what's happening . . . Marat Sade screaming: "When will you see? When will you learn to take sides?"

The burning of the paper mache symbols, running back into the gas with the masks and football helmets, the breaking of a few windows, screaming pig. Helped one visualize the existentialist struggle in-against the American state. A disruption of normal orientations, a three credit module exp. No business as usual, briefly. Can't happen here. Not this week anyway.

"Better get straignt, baby. No one understands what's being said. I think I better get my stuff together." - Eric Burdon. to be continued, be sure.

War Research: Perverted U.

The Coalition was formed to move the University to totally disengage from war related activity. Its demands embody this goal plus something else. The something else is the demand that when the University does disengage from the War, ROTC scholarships be replaced by University scholarships. This demand indicates that the aim of the Coalition is not to get the cadets, as perhaps previous anti-ROTC actions have, but to get the War Machine. The Coalition has attacked the War Machine on campus from two perspectives. First the War Machine destroys the University because the values inculcated by the military - patriotism, and ability to follow orders - conflict directly with the value universities are supposed to inculcate - critical inquiry into all questions. Certainly the ROTC department's refusal to take part in debates on its role on campus shows clearly its inability to consider all questions openly. The same is true for war and war industry recruitors and war researchers. The War Machine is the richest institution in the U.S. and has used its money to buy institutions and men through research grants and the promise of jobs.

Second the Coalition has attacked the War Machine on campus as directly involving the University in America's disastrous foreign policy. It is strange that those who claim the University is politically neutral also defend the University's involvement in war. The University is not politically neutral, it is deeply involved in supporting the War. It is involved in the War, not only because it trains officers to fight the War, but also recruits for war industries like Lockheed, General Electric and General Dynamics and the University does research for war. Presently in the Government department, an $89,000 research project is being conducted for the Pentagon on the topic, "Religion and Revolution." The project is obviously important in the military's counter-insurgency program around the world. In the Mechanical Engineering Department research is being done under Project Themis. The objective of Themis according to an Army publication is "to create new centers of scientific excellence responsive to Department of Defense solution of problems in the future." In warfare, effects of aerosols (mace), and training pigeons to blow up aircraft while they are on the runway. At UMass, Themis involves deep sea submersibles. The project is obviously important in the Pentagon's effort to place weapons on the ocean floor. One project for Themis was specifically designed for this application. All research from Themis goes to the Army Department of War Research. Themis explodes the myth of the University's political neutrality on the WAR.

The Coalition does not consider that the disengagement of the University from war related activities will radically change the political nature of the University. The perversion of the university begins when it accepts its role in society as a service institution instead of the gad-fly of society. But the Disengagement of the University from the War Machine will make the University a better place and make a real instead of symbolic attack on the War. The Coalition deserve support.

To the editor:

Somewhere in the United States Army is an officer who has "America, love it or leave it" sticker on his car. He doesn't know of the liberal college atmosphere. He was never in an ROTC program. He either came up through the ranks or was graduated from West Point. In both cases he missed living with an influential segment of American society, the students at colleges and universities. He has been educated in a closed environment.

The University-ROTC educated officer has been exposed to both worlds and is better able to pick between them. He may choose to become a "Hawk" or "Dove" as he wishes from the evidence before him. If the anti-war elements have a defendable position against the war then why do they want to throw the military off the campuses where they won't be able to see the anti-war faction's reasons for denouncing the war? Is the anti-war argument so weak that it can't withstand the close criticism of the military? I don't think so. The presence of ROTC on campus is not a threat to the anti-war sentiment on campus but rather the small military groups "hawk" tendencies will become diluted. For the sake of the anti-war movement ROTC should stay on campuses for more credit. The SDS should do everything in their power to keep ROTC on campus, even to the extent of washing the floors of Dickinson Hall and polishing the buttons on their uniforms. While these potential military commanders are nearby, concerned pacifists should talk with them and convince them that the war is foolish. The anti-war people on campuses nationwide should try to win the ROTC members to their non-violent camp not to banish them. Only in this way will the universal soldier learn.

An Open Letter to Pope Paul
Your Excellency
Pope Paul XXIV
Vatican, Italy
Your Holiness,

In the New York Sunday Times of November 17, 1969 it states that "Pope backs Nixon's policy on Vietnam." As spiritual leader of the Catholic Church, doesn't President Nixon's policy contradict your Christian Teachings (i.e. Thou shalt not kill, Thou shall love thy Neighbor, Love thine enemy).

President Nixon is prolonging the War, continuing the killing of Human Beings, and forcing other Human Beings to Kill against their will. Was it a Christian who said "Blessed are the peace makers as they shall be called the Children of God."

Massachussetts Review Publishes Anthology

W.E.B.DuBois, Martin Luther King, Nat Hentoff, Stokely Carmichael and Leonard Baskin are among the contributors to BLACK AND WHITE IN AMERICAN CULTURE: AN ANTHOLOGY FROM "THE MASSACHUSETTS REVIEW", recently published by the University of Massachusetts Press ($10.00). Edited by Jules Chametsky and Sidney Kaplan, the anthology celebrates ten years of publication and unique achievement.

THE MASSACHUSETTS REVIEW has established its reputation as an outstanding journal of literature, the arts and public affairs. Since its founding in 1959 it has provided a forum for black and white thinkers and writers concerned with the importance of black culture in America. The strength, variety and power of the poetry, fiction, essays and art inserts gathered in BLACK AND WHITE IN AMERICAN CULTURE make the anthology a major contribution to the cultural history of this country.

Rec Majors

A survey is being conducted within the Department of Recreation regarding the students' feelings on present curriculum and their role in the Department. All recreation majors are asked to pick up their questionnaire at the Curry Hicks Building. The survey will b collected at a special meeting of all recreation majors on Monday, December 1, 1969 at 7:30 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge at the Student Union.

UM Professor Finds Segregation In American Professional Sports

The color barrier is only partially broken in American professional baseball and football, a University of Massachusetts sport sociologist contends.

UMass associate professor John W. Loy dug into official sport record books to support his contention that "a very small proportion of black athletes occupy central positions in America's professional baseball and football teams."

The findings are presented in "Racial Segregation in American Sport," a paper given at an international seminar on sport sociology in Switzerland earlier this fall (Sept. 7-13). The paper's co-author is Joseph F. McElvogue of University of California at Los Angeles.

Their analysis of the records finds few black athletes in such central positions as center, quarterback, guard or linebacker in football and infield or catcher in baseball.

According to one well-established sociological theory, one of the major factors that denotes an important or central position in a group is how close a person is to th e center of the group's interaction network. The closer a person is to this center, the more frequently he participates in interaction with other members and the more he must coordinate his tasks and activities with other members.

The Loy study found that in baseball the positions of catcher and the four infield slots - first, second, third base and shortstop - fitted the sociological definition of central position. The outfield, on the other hand, contains "the most peripheral and socially isolated positions in the organizational structure of a baseball team," the study noted.

Applying the same sociological yardstick to professional football, the study says "the most central positions on the offensive team consist of center, right guard, left guard and quarterback; while the most central positions on the defensive team are the three linebacker positions."

The study then turned to the record books. On the basis of the 1968 Baseball Register all professional players in the American and National Leagues who played at least 50 games during the 1967 season were classified according to race and playing position. The same classification was made for pro football players, using the Official 1968 Autographed Yearbooks of the American and National Football Leagues in conjunction with Zanger's "Pro Football 1968."

The totals for both baseball leagues revealed only 19 blacks in all infield positions, as opposed to 94 white s in the same positions; and 36 blacks in the outfield, as opposed to 38 whites. The researchers conclude that Negro players definitely predominate in the outfield and are less likely to hold infield or central positions.

On offensive football teams in both leagues, the study found only four blacks in central positions - not one center, only one quarterback and three guards - while whites in the same positions numbered 100. Corresponding figures for non-central positions were 62 blacks and 120 whites. On the defensive side, a total of six blacks were listed in the three central positions of middle, right and left linebacker as opposed to 72 whites in the same three slots. The corresponding totals for non-central positions were 88 blacks and 120 whites.

The study bypasses major conclusions in favor of a call for further study of integration in American sport. It does advance some tentative conclusions about the causes and consequences of sport segregation.

Regarding causes, the researchers state: "We speculate that segregation in professional sport is more a function of management than of playing personnel. For example, there appears to be a myth among coaches that Negro players lack judgment and decision-making ability."

Brady Extradited

BOSTON (AP) - George L. Brady, the former chairman of the Massachusetts Parking Authority charged with larceny and conspiracy in the theft of $748,468 in state money, will be driven to Massachusetts Thursday from New Jersey.

A spokesman for Massachusetts Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn said that Brady, arrested by the FBI in Atlantic City after more than six years of eluding warrants for his arrest, will be arraigned at a bail hearing later Thursday in Suffolk Superior Court.

Lt. Edward Schofield of the state police, who had hand-carried to New Jersey extradition orders signed by Gov. Francis W. Sargent, will escort Brady back.

Coalition to Discuss War Debate Results

The Coalition will meet Friday at noon in the Worcester Room of the Student Union to discuss the results of the War and University Debates and decide on future action to get the War Machine off the campus. The Coalition created the impetus for the debates which took place Monday and Tuesday of this week by requestiong President Lederle to use his good auspices to set the series of debates. The request was made simultaneously with the announcement of the creation of the Coalition on October 15. At that time it was announced the Coalition consist of several campus groups Greeks, Liberals, and Radicals whose aim is contained in four demands:

1) Abolish ROTC
2) Replace ROTC scholarships with University scholarships
3) Terminate military recruitment and recruitment by war related industries
4) Review all research with the end to terminate war related research.

The last demand does not indicate that all projects funded by the Department of Defense should be terminated, but only those which prove to be war related. However, the Coalition supports an end to acceptance of Defense Department funding for research. Those projects which are peaceful in intent should be funded by other sources.

The Coalitions welcomes attendance at its meetings of all persons interested in working for the realization of its demands.

The University of Massachusetts Department of Music will present a chamber music concert on Sunday, November 23rd in Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. in memory of Howard Lebow, a pianist formerly on the faculty.

This event is open to the public without charge and will include performances of Mozart's Quintet in E flat major for piano and winds; "Contrasts" by Bela Bartok as performed by violinist Julian Olevsky, Joseph Contino, clarinetist and Estele Kersenbaum Olevsky, pianist. The University Chamber Singers and Chamber Orchestra under Richard DuBois' direction will perform Bach's Cantata No. 21 "Ich Hatte Viel Bekummernis". Participating in this performance will be Professor John King, organist; Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Donna Harler, alto; Jon Humphrey, tenor and John D'Armand, bass.

Concert to Denote Anniversary of Author

A special concert to note the 100th anniversary of the birth of the late Andre Gide, French author and 1947 Nobel Prize winner, will be presented Sunday, November 23, at Smith College.

The concert will be held at 8 p.m. in Sage Hall on the campus. The public is invited to attend without charge. Members of Smith's music department will perform pieces Gide liked and compositions inspired by his works. The event is part of a weekend symposium commemorating Gide's centennial being sponsored by the Smith French department.

Opening the program pianist Lory Wallfisch will play Three Preludes and Fuges from the Well Tempered Clavier by J. S. Bach. These are among works by Bach Gide mentioned as favorites.

Pianist Robert Miller will then play three works by Frederic Chopin: Ballade No. 3, in A Flat Major, Opus 47; Nocturne in C Minor, Opus 48, No. 1; and Scherzo in B Flat Minor, Opus 31. A fine pianist, Gide liked to play these particular pieces and wrote about them in his journal.

After intermission, soprano Adrienne Auerswald, accompanied by Miller, will sing Two Poems of Rabindranath Tagore translated by Gide that were set to music by Henri Sauget.

Then Miss Auerswald and Miller will perform Darius Milhaud's Excerpts from "Alissa." Based on Gide's novel "LaPorte Et - roite," these pieces use the middle range of the soprano voice. The songs derive their distinctive appeal from the composer's use of chromaticism in the vocal line and the melodic interest in the piano accompaniment.

The program will close with Milhaud's Second Sonata for Violin and Piano, performed by Ernst Wallfisch, violin, and Lory Wallfisch, piano. Dedicated to Gide, this 1917 composition is distinguished by the use of politonality in a rather traditionally arranged sonata.

United Negro College Fund Makes Nationwide Appeal to Students

NEW YORK -- An appeal for support on behalf of the United Negro College Fund is being made again to college and university students across the country, it was announced today by Martha B. Lucas Pate, chairman of the Fund's College and School Division.

Citing the latest census bureau statistics, which show a marked increase in black student enrollment, Mrs. Pate said, "because of this important development, much of the burden of educating these students will be on black colleges. In order to help alleviate this burden I'm calling upon students of the nation to help make this trend a success by supporting the College Fund and its 36 member schools."

This year's appeal is being made to more than 4,000 colleges, universities, professional schools, junior colleges and private secondary schools throughout the country. Last year, Colby College Maine, made a gift of $12,200 in memory of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., and Princeton University has contributed $3,000 since 1967. The Fund's pre-alumni council raised a total of $129,000, and the college and school appeal raised another $45,000 for the 1968 campaign drive.

In making the announcement Mrs. Pate added, "If colleges are experiencing difficulty financially these days, black colleges and universities are having an even more trying time. For more than a quarter of a century the United Negro College Fund has worked to provide young black students with a first-rate education to enable them 'to do their thing' towards a better world."

Today, the UNCF's 36 member schools have become one of the most important single sources of education for young black men and women. With a current enrollment of more than 45,000 students, their graduates include nearly 85% of the nation's black physicians, three-quarters of all the country's Ph. D.'s and many of the top leaders of the black community.

Currently in its 1969 fund drive, the United Negro College Fund has set a national goal of $7.5 million. The money raised is earmarked for scholarships and other financial-aid programs for students, for faculty salaries, for teaching equipment, libraries and for continued development of remedial programs.

Mrs. Pate is the former president Sweet Briar College and the widow of Maurice Pate, founder and until his deth executive director of UNICEF.

Donlin, DeFlavio Receive Awards from 'M' Club

Two UMass sophomore football tackles, Bob Donlin of the offensive line and Bill DeFlavio of the defensive line, received Varsity "M" Club awards Wednesday as the top offensive and defensive performers in the Redmen's 48-7 conquest of New Hampshire.

At the Club's weekly luncheon Donlin was cited for his blocking efforts against Wildcat defenders and DeFlavio was singled out for his frequent attacks on UNH quarterbacks. The latter had previously won an "M" citation for his work against UConn, while Donlin had earned one after the Buffalo game.

UMass assistant grid coach Bob Graham gave those who attended a brief scouting report on the upcoming Redmen opponent, Boston College. He had high praise for Eagle quarterback Red Harris, Halfback Fred Willis, offensive tackle Bob Bouley, defensive tackle John Fitzgerald and cornerback Gary Dancewicz.

Head coach Vic Fusia, before showing New Hampshire films, commented that the Redmen have been pointing toward BC for two weeks, a reason why they were not at their best in the first half against the Wildcats.

Chairman of the "M" Club, Jim Mulcahy, made it known that the Club will hold its weekly get-togethers throughout the Redman basketball season, a procedure not followed in the past. He expressed hope that they might even continue through to the end of the academic year.

A morning and afternoon scrimmage against Colgate will be held this Sunday in the cage. (MDC photo by Bob Christmann)

A large number of tickets for Saturday's UMass grid clash with Boston College are still available in Boyden 255 and will be on sale through Friday noon. Price of these ducats is $4.

N.E. Ratings

(AP) - Dartmouth, a 24-7 victor over Cornell last Saturday while tuning up for this week's Ivy League showdown at Princeton, reaped all 18 first place votes for the fifth week in a row.

It also marked the sixth week in succession that the Indians 8-0 have been chosen No. 1 in the balloting by sports writers and sportscasters in the six-state region.

Boston University which defeated Delaware 30-14 to hike its record to 8-1, best in Terrier history, finished second in the balloting for the third straight week.

The Terriers had 158 points to Dartmouth's perfect 180 on the basis of 10 points for a first place vote, 9 for a second, etc.

Massachusetts, which routed New Hampshire 48-7 to hike its record to 6-2, was a solid third with 141 points, while Yale, an upset 17-14 conqueror of Princeton and now also 6-2 for the season, took fourth place with 108.

Boston College which roared back on the winning track with a 49-32 conquest of VMI, was voted into fifth place with 108, leaving the top five teams in exactly the same order as they were a week ago.

UMass Faces Boston College Sat. in Season Finale

Eagles, 3-4, Should be Tough Despite Defense that Has Made Mistakes

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Assistant Sports Editor

Fielding a young unsure defense but featuring an explosive attack, the Boston College Eagles prepare for the visitation of the UMass Redmen, Yankee Conference title-holders, who will grapple with them on Saturday afternoon at 1:30 in BC's Alumni Stadium.

The home contingent, suffering through a losing 3-4 season, has had its troubles on defense. It is a unit which has surrendered 205 points to seven opponents and one which gave up 339, 569, 398 and 316 yards total offense in four straight BC losses to Villanova (24-6), Army (38-7), Penn State (38-16) and Buffalo (35-21) respectively.

In their victory over Virginia Military Institute last weekend, the Eagles allowed 32 points to a team which was winless and which had scored only 46 points in its previous seven games. BC score 49, was enough to break their four-game losing streak.

Boston College plays the same 4-4-3 defense that UMass employs. It is a young unit, sprinkled with six sophomores and only two seniors. One of those seniors is John Fitzgerald, 6'5-255, a stellar defensive tackle. Listed as "the biggest, strongest and fastest interior lineman on the Eagle squad" Fitzgerald has been a star performer for three years.

The remainder of the defensive line consists of 6'4-240 junior Jim Millham at the other tackle and two sophs, 6'2-200 Mike Mucci and 6'3-200 Gregg Broskie, at ends.

Three sophs, Kevin Clemente, 6'2-213, Paul Travers, 6'4-185, and Lou Silva, 6'-185, and one junior Ed Ransford, 6'-185, are the linebackers. Each of them is seeing his first full season of action as an injury kept Ransford on the sidelines for most of '68.

The defensive secondary is comprised of 5'11-185 Skip Coppola, a senior and 6'2-190 Gary Dancewicz, a junior, at the corners and soph Steve Kirchner, 6'1-170, at safety. Dancewicz, a starter for two years, is a bonafide star who intercepted six passes last fall.

On offense the Eagles can bold their own with just about anybody, regardless of what they have shown this year. Injuries, particularly to halfback Fred Willis and fullback Joe McDonald, have hampered the attack. Opposing teams have also hurt Boston College by concentrating strength in their defensive secondaries in order to limit the passing effectiveness of quarterback Red Harris.

Entering Saturday's fray, BC will be without injuries on offense ris, Willis, Joe Catone and McDonald will be intact. Harris, a 6'1-180 junior, is probably the most famous player on the BC squad and rightfully so.

His credentials as a soph were 106 of 186 passes completed, or 57%, for 1398 yards and 13 touchdowns. Although he has had his ups and downs this fall, he is presently on a resurgence after having hit 17 of 30 for 295 yards against VMI.

Willis, a 6'-200 junior, is Boston College's do-everything back who, after being plagued by injuries a few weeks back, is now a full strength. Against VMI he complimented Harris' throwing with 203 yards on the ground, although he played for only two and half periods. Not only can Willis ramble but he is a solid receiver and is adept at throwing off the halfback option.

Seniors Catone, 5'11-188, and McDonald, 5;11-200, are steady veterans who take the pressure off of Harris and Willis. Catone scored all three TD's in BC's win over Navy, 21-14, and galloped 66 yards for the game-winner against Tulane, 28-24.

McDonald contributes mightily to the Eagle cause with his fine blocking talent. Adding depth to the backfield are soph Bill Thomas, 6'2-218, and senior Mike Johnson, 5'9-160, at the running back slots, and soph Ray Rippman, 6'1-185 at QB.

For passing targets Harris has junior split end John Bonistalli, 6'1-195, and 6'3-223 tight end Jim O'Shea, also a junior. Bonistalli also had a big day against VMI with six catches for 93 yards and three touchdowns. O'Shea is a hard-consistent worker.

At center is Kent Andiorio, a 6;2-215 soph. He is flanked by guards Walt Cullen, a 6'1-228 senior, and junior Gary Guenther, 6'3-228. Manning one offensive tackle post is junior John Brennan, 6'4-248, while manning the other tackle slot is star senior Bob Bouley, 6'4-249, who is tagged as "one of the finest offensive tackles in college football."

In summary, '69's BC grid squad is typical of past Eagle teams, big and loaded with talent. It fields among the best personnel in New England, it plays the toughest schedule of any New England team and is led by a fine young head coach, Joe Yukica.

Boston College needs wins over UMass and Syracuse, its next week's opponent, to end up with a winning 5-4 record and looms, without a doubt, as the biggest test the Redmen will have faced all fall.

Harriers Savor 8-3 Season Record Paulson Presented with Derby Award

"As the season began we had few experienced runners and had lost three top seniors. We set a goal at the training camp to improve everyone as much as possible. I think we accomplished this." So said Coach Ken O'Brien as he reviewed the 1969 Redmen cross-country season.

The 1969 team compiled an impressive record of 8 wins, 3 losses dual meet season, a close second place finish in the Conference, a fourth in the New Englands and 13th in the IC4A. This was accomplished by a team that didn't have great material.

"To accomplish this" said the Coach, "the team worked harder and had a better attitude then any team that I've coached. It was an attitude on the entire team. It went through the entire 18 man squad and the physical and mental improvement of the top seven were affected by the whole team, bringing success."

In looking back over the season, the Coach picked two turning points in the season. "The first was when we beat a good Northeastern team, with our record at the time being 0-2. We started talking about what was in our reach. The second big turning point was against Holy Cross at Worcester, when we put four men between their first and second men. It was then we realized our potential."

The Conference meet was the team's best effort when they came within two points of powerful Connecticut. After having an off-day in the muddy New Englands, the team rebounded to run well in the IC4A, beating Holy Cross and Providence, who beat them in the New Englands.

Yesterday, members of the team chose junior Larry Paulson, who ran third of fourth for the Redmen during the season, as the recipient of the Llewelyn Derby Award. The Award is given to the runner, who in the opinion of his team mates improved, worked hard and set a good example in both running and attitude.

Coach O'Brien talking about Paulson, said, "His great improvement and fine performances influenced the success of the team. Larry helped the team overcome inexperience. His leadership in practices and in the meets helped bridge the gap between our top runners, Ron (Wayne), Leo (Duart) and Tom (Derderian) and the large group of runners behind. Larry helped pull up Dave Evans, Bruce Blackburn, Steve Whicher, Don Dunsky, and Bill Donaldson who ran in the top seven from time to time."

The Coach also gave credit to these runners who had the motivation to move up. He has special praise for sophomore Blackburn who "improved more than anyone" since last year.

Paulson and Ron Wayne were named next year's captains at last night's team banquets. Wayne who led the team for the second straight year had a good season placing 3rd in the Conference, 9th in NE, 25th in the IC4A with the best time a UMass runner has recorded on the IC4A course, and won six races. Paulson, the Derby winner, placed 9th in the Yan-Con, 26th in NE, and 61st in the IC4A with the 5th best time on Van Cortland Park.

For the first time, the freshmen team was invited to the team banquet in honor of their great season. The frosh posted a 10-1 mark, a first in the New Englands and 5th in the IC4A, beating such track powers as Villanova, Maryland, Manhattan and Fordham.

Explaining the frosh's success, Coach O'Brien said, "The reason for success was not pure talent but was the seriousness and aggressiveness of the group. It's unusual when you get a group of ten runners who are like this. When they beat UConn, they realized they could win the New England. They never let that goal out of their minds. They felt they were the best and they were going to be the best."

The Coach added that Tom Jasmin and Tom Swain who lead the team all year deserved special mention. "They have the best times on the New England frosh course in UMass history. That includes Ron and Leo. Swain also has the fastest frosh time on the IC4A course."

"But", continued O'Brien, "what made the team go was the tight knit group of Rick Barry, Phil Riley, Mike Daly, Gary O'Dell, and Bob Sullivan. Each made up for others on days when one may have had a bad day."

With losing only two seniors, Bill Donaldson and Dave Evans, next year UMass chances for having a top team are good. The coach didn't want to make any predictions because he said, "You can't assume anything in track." However, he added, "The frosh's aggressiveness and confidence, combined with the hard working varsity, makes UMass' cross-country future look good."

MOST ROTC CREDIT DUMPED

Some Broadened Courses OK By Faculty Senate Action

By Richard C. Hanson Staff Reporter

ROTC, legally placed on the University of Massachusetts since the Morrill Act of 1862, is about to lose its posture as an independent accredited curriculum.

The Faculty Senate passed amendments to the motions presented by the Military Affairs Subcommittee of the Faculty Senate which would, in effect, take away academic credit for all ROTC courses taught by ROTC personnel.

At the same time, "courses with diffuse "academic area" content spanning several disciplines" will be continued making use of University personnel. The motion further stipulated that "Courses of indoctrination, and/or drill and/or training in military skills . . . shall be reduced to an absolute minimum."

The action was debated at length. The final vote to accept the amended motion was 37-36. The arguments against the motion centered around the military man's ability to teach the ROTC courses. It was argued that the ROTC personnel were best qualified to teach courses in military science, the physics of navigation, and air science. Opponents called an attempt to keep military personnel from teaching the accredited courses "snobbish" on the part of the University faculty.

The arguments for the motion touched upon the "conflict of interests" posed by appointment of personnel "initiated from the outside" and "paid by outside sources." The ROTC personnel were not allowed to participate in the "WAR Machine" debates, many argued this denied the academic freedom necessary at a University. It was pointed out that the ROTC on campus, in its present form was an unwanted "aspect of militarization of the highest sphere of society."

There was a motion to completely eliminate the indoctrination and training aspects of the ROTC program, but this was soundly defeated by a 42-25 margin.

All Faculty Senate action and recommendations must go through the Administration for final approval and implementation. All due speed was urged by faculty senators.

The entire motion, in its amended form is as follows:

MOVED:

A. That both the Military Science and Air Science curricula be revised so as to provide courses in each of the following three categories:

1. Courses with substantial 'academic area' content, offered by the appropriate academic departments and taught by the regular faculty. These courses would carry academic credit and would be open to non-ROTC students also.

2. Courses of indoctrination, and/or drill, and/or training in military skills, taught by military personnel and carrying no academic credit. The amount of such training offered on campus shall be reduced to an absolute minimum, the summer session at a military reservation providing a more suitable opportunity for this kind of training.

B. That the curriculum proposed above should be implemented within the framework of the present two-year commissioning program; the four-year program should be discontinued altogether.

C. That the Department of Air Science and Military Science remain as distinct units, answering directly to the Military Affairs Subcommittee and to the Provost.

D. That where Air Force or Army manuals for category-2 courses are used, it shall be the responsibility of the Military Affairs Subcommittee to review these, every third year, to ensure their suitability.

MOVED: That Part A, Category 2 be amended to read:

2. Courses with diffuse "academic area" (and also technical) content spanning several disciplines, and also courses concerned primarily with military tactics and strategy, and, and/or specialized military history. These courses should be taught by regular university departments, individually or jointly as the need requires. If the ROTC personnel are unable to secure the cooperation of the relevant departments, these courses may be offered by the Division of Military and Air Science. However, courses taught by the Division of Military and Air Science will not carry academic credit.

Haynsworth Allies Lead With Voting on Tap Today

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two more senators declared themselves - one for and one against - Thursday on the Supreme Court nomination of Clement F. Haynsworth Jr. But the outcome continued to rest with members whose positions may not be known until the roll is called Friday.

Republican Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland, calling it one of the hardest decisions he has had to make in nine years in Congress, said he will oppose the nomination.

Democrat Jennings Randolph of West Virginia said he will vote to confirm because he believes Haynsworth would serve on the court with "fidelity, high purpose and compassion."

The declarations brought to 45 the number of senators publicly committed to vote for confirmation, according to an Associated Press poll.

The AP poll showed 42 committed against and 13 undecided.

GOP Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, most prominent Republican among the uncommitted, said he made up his mind several weeks ago but has told no one.

"This is the hardest vote I have ever had to cast," he said.

Scott denied that there has been any pressure on him from the White House or any administration officials. But another of the uncommitted Republicans made the first public report of a threat influence his vote.

Sen. Mark Hatfield of Oregon said he received a telephone call earlier in the day from a good friend who reported a number of former financial supporters were saying "a vote against Haynsworth can become the trigger to set up a conservative candidate against me in the 1972 primary."

The Senate is scheduled to convene at 11 a.m., leaving two hours before the start of the roll call that will determine whether Haynsworth will become the 95th nominee to be approved or the fifth in the history to be rejected outright.

The 57-year-old Haynsworth, who has become a millionaire through investments and inheritances, was nominated during last August's congressional recess.

Strongly opposed by labor and civil rights groups, he has been criticized for failing to disqualify himself from cases in which he had a direct or indirect financial interest in one of the parties.

His backers have claimed the charge of unethical conduct have been a smokescreen to conceal opposition to a convervative philosophy.

Kennedy Buried In Brookline Plot

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) - "The measure of a man's life is not the money he's made," Joseph P. Kennedy once said. "It's the kind of family he's raised."

Kennedy's family buried its patriarch Thursday in august yet simple ceremonies that included a 15-minute eulogy by his only living son, Edward, and a recitation of the 23rd Psalm by John F. Kennedy Jr., 8-year-old son of the late President.

The services were concluded here beneath a bright autumn sky in the family plot at Holybood Cemetery, only two miles from the home where Kennedy and his wife Rose raised most of their nine children.

They began four hours earlier and 80 miles away in a driving rain on Cape Cod, where the former ambassador died Tuesday at the age of 81 after eight years of illness.

The body was taken first from the gabled 17-room home in Hyannis Port that had been the senior Kennedy's summer residence and family headquarters to small, unpretentious St. Francis Xavier's Church in neighboring Hyannis, which the family has attended for years.

There, a white funeral Mass, so designated because the clergy wears white vestments rather than the traditional black or purple, was celebrated.

Edward, his voice husky with emotion, prefaced his eulogy by saying it was "not so much a final prayer for dad but a reminder to those he left behind of his deep love for us . . ."

Then he read essays about Joseph written by himself, brother Robert and Rose, Joseph's wife of 55 years.

Newsmen were unable to attend the service, but one friend who was present said Robert's essay read in part:

"The most important thing to him was the advancement of his children. His sole concern was to contribute to their advancement . . . Any lasting contributions we might have been in a large part due to the effect he had on our lives."

Environmental Crisis Near

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

"There are cities where you can get up in the morning and hear birds cough."

Such is a common joke concerning the Air pollution problems that must be faced in the very near future. Joe Hardy, chairman of Action For Quality Environment, opened the Teach-In held last night in Public Health Auditorium with those words. However, as the speakers spelled out some of the many crisis we face in our atmosphere, the jokes somehow weren't as funny.

Speaking at the Teach-In were the top people on the subject of air pollution. Dr. Howard Peters of the Public Health Service explained the aspects of pollution related disease. Using emphasema, bronchitus, and lung cancer as prime reactions to air pollution, Peters cited many of the "disaster effects" of air pollution such as the 4000 deaths in London during air pollution crisis in 1952.

Dr. Rosenau of the Plant and Soil Sciences Dept. at the University spoke on the history of air pollution in the area and in the state. Dr. Rosenau who was associated at one time with the Waltham Experimental Station, estimated that some $36,000,000 worth of agricultural products are destroyed in the area between Washington, D.C. and Boston annually.

He also pointed out that the crops most effected by the air pollution were the most economically advantageous, such as tobacco. He pointed to the irony of a disease causing plant being adversely effected by a pollution problem that causes many of the same type of diseases.

Dr. William Naegely from the Waltham Experimental station and Head of the Environmental Sciences Dept. at the University spoke on the air - quality standards hearings which will take place November 25 in Boston. He emphasized the "great concern over establishing a non-effect level" for certain pollutants.

He cited the "horrendous problems" for political implementation of the quality standards. State Rep. John Olver ended the speaking by briefly telling of the legislation which has been passed and is in the process of being passed concerning air-pollution. He explained the system of pollution controls now forming in the state as dating back to the 1960 establishment of the Metropolitan Air Pollution Control District.

There is a similar district governing some ten communities in the Lower Pioneer Valley Control District. Olver pointed out that although some six measures were proposed by the Governor this year, only one was not "lost". He expressed the opinion that the Governor could with the present legislation, require all automobiles to have anti-pollution devices. Cars were pointed out as causing half of the air pollution, followed by industry, power plants, the individual homes and the public waste disposal facilities.

Action For Quality Environment is sponsoring a car pool to go to Boston with petitions and picket signs next Tues., Nov. 25 to urge stringent air quality standards be adopted for the state. People are urged to write their state representatives urging good quality air standards.

The Teach-In was one of what AQE hopes to be a series of such activities promoting a better environment. The problems which must be faced are numerous. All are urged to join and participate in this movement to promote a better environment.

Metawampe Speaks?

Despite his appearance on today's back page, many Daily Collegian readers still maintain that Metawampe is dead, and has been dead since the Vermont game in 1966.

"Someone else with a perverted sence of humor could have written that column this week," Elmer Foos said last night. "I just think that an imposter has been trying to pass himself off as the great one all these years."

However, former MDC sports staffers and present reporters all give the same genral description of the Great One, and maintain that a hand writing analysis, taken in 1964, matches the scrawls used by Metawampe before this year's Delaware game.

Some devoted followers of the Sage report that the Great One went out of his way in this week's column, and hid a clue to his fate in the bevy of prose filling his column.

Lodge Resigns

WASHINGTON (AP) – President Nixon accepted the resignation of Ambassador Hnery Cabot Lodge Thursday in an action which may mean at least a temporary downgrading of the level of U. S. participation in the stalemated peace talks in Paris.

High administration officials said that was not the purpose of the moves involved in a White House announcement that both Lodge and his deputy, attorney Lawrence E. Walsh, are leaving the Vietnam negotiations effective Dec. 8.

But no one disputed that the practical result could be to lower the political prestige of the U.S. negotiating team - though that depends on how rapidly Nixon names a successor.

White House and State Department authorities indicated they had no firm idea yet on a possible successor.

Leadership of the U. S. delegation will fall to 49-year-old Philip C. Habib, a career diplomat who served last year on the negotiating delegation headed by Ambassador W. Averell Harriman.

Spiro Goes After Newspapers Now

MONTGOMERY, Ala (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, asserting there is "gowing monopolization of the voices of public opinion," aimed particular criticism Thursday night at the New York Times and The Washington Post.

In a followup speech to one last week in which he hit at the news programming of the television networks, Agnew said the day is over when the news media "enjoyed a form of diplomatic immunity from comment and criticism of what they said."

In remarks prepared for the Montgomery Chamber of Commerce, the vice president asserted:

"Just as a politician's words-wise and foolish - dutifully recorded by the press and television to be thrown up to him at the appropriate time, so their words should likewise be recorded and likewise recalled."

Arguing that many of the critics of his attacks on the networks ignored the main thrust of his remarks, Agnew elaborated on what he said is his principal point:

"When they, the news media, go beyond fair comment and criticism they will be called upon to defend their statements and their positions just as we must defend ours. And when their criticism becomes excessive or unjust, we shall invite them down from their ivory towers to enjoy the rough and tumble of the public debate."

The vice president said:

"I do not seek to intimidate the press, the networks or anyone else from speaking out. But the time for blind acceptance of their opinions is past. And the time for naive belief in their neutrality is gone."

Agnew hit at The Washington Post Co. after saying that should a shoe company and a shirt manufacturer form a conglomerate, ther would be righteous demands that the combination be broken up. He went on:

"But a single company, in the nation's captial, holds control of the largest newspaper in Washington, D.C., and one of the four major television stations, and an all-news radio station, and one of the three major national news magazines - all grinding out the same editorial line. . ."

Apollo Crew Dumps Intrepid Prepare to Head for Home

SPACE (AP) - Safe in the Yankee Clipper mothership, the Apollo 12 explorers abandoned the mooncraft Intrepid Thursday and sent it crashing back into the moon, a final sacrifice to man's curiousity about the strange lunar sphere.

Intrepid's rockets were fired at 4:50 p.m. EST, and less than half an hour later the little moonship smashed into the moon's surface some 24 miles from the former home base on the Ocean of

The three Navy Commanders, Charles Conrad Jr., Alan L. Bean and Richard F. Gordon Jr. displayed only passing curiosity about the fate of the little craft that had carried two of them safely to the moon and back.

It struck the moon traveling some 3,700 miles an hour at 5:17 p.m.

At impact, the slight hull of intrepid carved out an elliptical crater on the moon's surface estimated at 20 feet by 40 feet, and only 20 inches deep.

But the shock waves rumbling through the moon's surface provided a bench mark for earth scientists watching readings from the seismometer left on the moon's surface by Conrad and Bean in their 31 1/2-hour expedition.

Lines on the seismic charts on earth showed a slight wiggle at impact.

With that known reading from the seismometer, scientists can measure the impacts of other meteors striking the moon, and by the same readings infer information on the interior of the moon.

It was the last major experiment in a long day that included Conrad and Bean blasting off from the moon in Intrepid, the end of their lunar scouting, and finally docking with the Yankee Clipper.

By 3:10 p.m., the three Navy Commanders were together again.

Twelve minutes later, they cast Intrepid adrift in the lunar skies, without audible reluctance. Oddly, neither the Apollo 11 crew nor the Apollo 12 crew had expressed any sentiment about their respective moon craft, Eagle and Intrepid, when they were finally abandoned.

Laugh, Children

Laugh, children, laugh. Laugh as you celebrate your living corpse. Laugh at he who has been resurrected. Laugh children. He laughs at you.

"Balboni? He's on an ego trip. All he wanted and all he wants is to see his name on the front page. He tried to radicalize the student body and give away the students' money to the radicals. He's no loss."

He's laughing at you, children.

"Balboni? He was a good President, maybe the best UMass ever had. I'm sorry to see him go. He did more for the students than any other President before him."

He's laughing at you, children.

"Balboni? It's too bad he's leaving, but maybe he'll find himself. He has my respect because he did what his conscience told him to do."

He's laughing at you, children.

"Balboni? Who cares? The Senate's a farce anyway."

He's laughing at you, children.

"Balboni? He shouldn't have asked for a confrontation with the Trustees over dorm autonomy. There were other ways to do it."

He's laughing at you, children.

"Balboni? Good riddance to bad rubbish. He had some nerve and some ego. Lot's of kids quit school, but only he gets headlines for it."

He's laughing at you, children.

"Balboni? Bruce was my friend."

He's laughing at you, children.

"Balboni? It would have taken more courage to stay here and change the school. He dropped out and gave up."

Yes, he's laughing at you, children. He's laughing because he's going to live and you, children, you are already dead. Live, Balboni, live free.

ART BUCHWALD

The Undercover Agents

WASHINGTON - It is generally known that the FBI had many undercover agents dressed as students and hippies during last week's mobilization march in Washington. What isn't known is the difficulty the FBI had in making their agents look authentic.

On Friday morning 100 FBI undercover men all wearing war surplus apparel, dungarees and ponchos gathered in the Justice Department courtyard to be inspected by J. Edgar Hoover.

They were all lined up at attention when Hoover arrived.

"Slouch, dammit!" Hoover helled at them. "You'll never pass as protesters if you keep your shoulders back and your stomachs in."

Hoover stopped in front of one agent. "Fitzpatrick, what are you doing with your shoes shined?"

"I always keep my shoes shined. It's the first thing I learned in FBI school."

"Well, dirty them up."

"How, sir?"

"Go to the Mud Department and have them touch them up. You show uponce more with shined shoes and it goes in your record."

The FBI director continued down the line. "McAlister, what are you doing with an American Flag in your buttonhole?"

"I want them to know where I stand, sir."

"They're not supposed to know where you stand. You're an undercover agent. Now give me the Flag, and put on this peace button."

"Do I have to, sir?"

"Give it to me and . . . wait a minute, McAlister. Did you take a bath this morning?"

"I took a shower, sir."

Hoover was enraged. "You had specific orders not to bathe for three days."

"That's alright for you to say, sir, but I was beginning to have body odor."

"That was the idea, McAlister. You were supposed to have body odor so you wouldn't be suspect."

"But, sir, cleanliness is next to godliness."

"Very good, McAlister, but in this case I want you to stink. Now go in the gym and work out for three hours in your clothes and then let me see you."

Hoover said to his assistant, "This is one of the worst inspections I've ever attended."

"The men mean well, Mr. Hoover."

Hoover suddenly stopped in front of an agent. "Your hair!"

"What's the matter, sir? Isn't it short enough?"

"You have a crew cut. Who told you to have a crew cut?"

"I've always had a crew cut, just as department regulations require."

"Get this man a wig and sideburns."

"Please, sir. Don't make me wear sideburns. My mother would never forgive me."

"Give him 10 demerits," Hoover said as he walked away.

He started up the second rank and stopped in front of a man who was wearing a trench coat.

"What are you doing in that trench coat?" Hoover shouted.

"I don't want my dungarees to get dirty, sir."

"Take off that trench coat and start rolling in the yard until your dungarees are filthy," Hoover said.

The next man Hoover stopped in front of was carrying a football banner which read "Love America or Leave It." Hoover grabbed the banner. "No, Holliston. No patriotic banners."

Tears welled in Holliston's eyes. "No one would have seen it."

Hoover stomped out of the courtyard and said to his assistant, "This is too much. You inspect the rest of them. I'm going to the race track."

Balboni: Patience Lost

To the editor:

The following is written in anticipation of the countless reactions to the resignation and withdrawal of Bruce Balboni which are certain to occur - some favorable, recognizing the real meaning and implications of both his decision and the means by which it was publicized and some derogatory - blind and insensitive accusations of "sought-after martyrdom", "copping out", childishness (if only a bit more childlike honesty and sensibility would manifest itself in the "adult" world). It is toward those who will hold, and verbalize, the latter attitudes that I direct my thoughts - not because Bruce Balboni was a close friend. My direct contact with him was minimal, and then only in a "business" context. I observed him occasionally in the role of Senate President and often questioned the "rightness" of that role for him. He struck me as being too gentle, too trusting of people's ability to make the naturally right decisions, too honest for the role of politician. Be that as it may, it is his actions which concern me more so than his personality.

A year ago, I did what Bruce did Wednesday night; I withdrew from a University after a much briefer stay than Bruce's, but for many of the same reasons. Some of those reasons were of a personal nature, but beyond that, I found myself demanding the right to assume responsibility for my own life, to be confronted with decisions about my own capabilities and the direction I wished my life to take, and to assume the responsibility for making those decisions. Such was not the nature of that University. My decisions there had been made years ago - I had simply to fall into the prescribed patterns - of meaningless, unchallenging courses TAUGHT by incompetent but unquestionable teachers, of impersonal living conditions completely incompatible with social living, of noninteractive, nonproductive, nonapplicable and noncreative consumption of my capabilities and energies. I struggled to arrive at workable solutions within the system - through what I thought were dialogues with faculty, department heads, deans, but what proved to be only fruitless monologues. I was afraid to leave at first, until one day, after long deliberation and many frustrated attempts at resolutions, I realized that there was no other alternative - I managed to muster the necessary COURAGE with which to make the simple assertion that my life w.s MINE and the University was wasting it.

I entered UMass this fall. Despite my experiences of the preceding year, working, studying, dealing directly with people, despite the personal growth which is directly attributable to those experiences, I entered as a freshman. By some absurd criteria, I was not as "educated" as my peers who had undergone the freshman year within the University. But I returned with an awareness of foremost importance, one which I had lacked the year before - an awareness that, although the academic environment (the people and resources which are kept cloistered on university campuses) was the type of environment which I desired and in which I belonged, the traditional structure of the University institution (the required regurgitative courses, the rhetoric) would afford me with little meaningful and useable experience. And indeed, my stay here thus far has left me with the following feelings: that within this University I may derive many of the most valuable living and learning experiences I have yet encountered providing I am LIVING here, being exposed to students, professors, administrators, trustees (as PEOPLE, not titles), devoting my energies to those endeavors which are not deemed as worthy of accreditation but which are going to have more of an effect on our society than many of us are willing or courageous enough to admit, and NOT going to SCHOOL here.

I wonder how much longer the vast majority of our society's youth will continue to be conditioned and manipulated under the guise of freedom of choice rhetoric. I wonder how many more Balbonis there will be before our "proprietors" will ACTIVELY realize that the token pat on the head and "understanding" rhetoric is not what we are after. I wonder how long it will take before the growing demand for self-direction and determinism forces their active recognition. It is my responsibility, it is everyone's, to make every effort to hasten the process. As R. Buckminster Fuller so aptly says (and we would be wise to listen hard to him): "There is a conventional picture or concept of school that is very powerful in most men's minds, and I think a great surprise is coming. I don't think that what is going to happen in education is apprehended or anticipated at all by the political states. I know that there is awareness of coming change among the forward thinkers of the educational ranks, but, I feel, even they will be astonished at the magnitude of the transformation about to take place in the educational processes."

Curriculum Changes Asked; MHC Seniors Draft Plan

Five Mount Holyoke seniors, Janet Hall, Judy Harris, Jane Hickie, Susan Norton and Merrill Wasserman, have drafted "A Working Paper on Education for Mount Holyoke College" that proposes sweeping changes in the college's curriculum.

The first 24 pages of the 47 examination of current educational philosophies and trends that underlie the proposals. Ira Magiziner's curriculum revision work at Brown University last year is recognized by the group "not only for structures, ideas, and opinion, but above all for the initial inspiration for our work."

Proposed curriculum changes include six course types. These are: (1) concept courses in which the relationship between different fields of inquiry crossing departmental lines in an effort to avoid isolated specialization are emphasized; (2) departmental courses which are similar to most present courses; (3) "Third-tier" courses more advanced inter-departmental courses that draw on the factual base provided by departmental courses; (4) Independent study; (5) Group Independent Study; (6) Whartsie units, which provide academic credit for preplanned and pre-announced educational experiences and attempt to bridge the classroom - non-classroom gap.

Present Grading Rejected

The present grading system is rejected as only a measurement of a person's grade getting ability. The report concludes that "grades provide neither an incentive to nor a measure of the expansion of learning ability."

However, a pass-fail system is also rejected in favor of the "dossier" system in which faculty evaluations of student performance in each course are made in whatever detail the professor wishes. It is hoped that such a system would better measure and encourage a student's true academic interest and ability.

The committee, which was organized by Janet Hall, is currently scheduling discussions of the report in dormitories and at other locations on campus. Reception of the report by students has reportedly been enthusiastic. The next step is to accurately gauge student support for the "Working Paper." According to Miss Hall the faculty will authorize a committee to study the proposal if student interest is great enough.

Faculty Receptive

Most faculty members seem receptive to change though few will pledge support for such radical modifications without some concrete indication of its merits. However, "faculty comments on the 'dossier' system have so far been negative," she reports.

Color Woodcut Prints Now on Union Display

Currently on display in the University of Massachusetts Student Union Reading Room is a group of color woodcut prints by internationally-acclaimed artist Irving Amen.

The exhibit, open to the public through Dec. 20, includes 35 outstanding graphics which may be purchased at prices ranging from $10 to $75. In addition, a selection of cards reproduced from the artist's work are available in packages of ten for $1.00. These are uninscribed cards that cannot be obtained commercially.

Irving Amen, born in New York City in 1918 and educated there and in Florence and Paris, is an outstanding sculptor and painter as well as a print-maker. He has exhibited in all major national and international group exhibitions in the U.S. and in Europe, Asia and Africa, and has been called "the visionary poet who does not forget that he is also a woodcutter and a designer." Amen's works exemplify "the brilliant and vigorous modern revival of the color woodcut," according to one critic.

The exhibit is open daily from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Smith Curriculum Head Quits Over Apathy

Peggy Kamens, Smith '70, resigned as head of the Smith College Curriculum Committee last Wednesday over lagging faculty and student interest in revision of the College's curriculum.

Meetings of all sub-committees of the Curriculum Committee were held Wednesday night to make future plans after Miss Kamens' resignation. Poor attendance at these meetings left the status of the Curriculum Committee undetermined.

Miss Kamens explained her resignation in a letter to the Smith Sophian. "I still believe in intellectual freedom for those with the responsibility to take it."

The letter noted the lack of interest on campus for Curriculum Committee activity.

"Unless the attitude of the students and the faculty changes, even far-reaching structural alterations are meaningless."

"If this college is to survive, and the sleeping beauties here come to life, they must find it for themselves. Life isn't in structure anymore than it's in books, at Dartmouth, or in the class."

The Alwin Nikolais Dance Theater performed in Bowker Auditorium on Wednesday and Thursday evenings at 8:00. Alwin Nikolais has taken a plastic art form and made it come alive. The Company raised the audience out of themselves, out of inadequate Bowker, and into an illusory dream-world of stylized movement, intense color, and esoteric form.

The surrealistic, other-worldly quality projected by the Dance Theater Company was at once primitive and sophisticated. This was primitive in the sense of fundamental, and was projected by means of highly stylized and stark movements, of stereo electronic music intermingled with human speech, of shifting colored lights and intricate slides, of props which extended and amplified the human form. This was sophisticated in the sense of complexity, or interelation of parts, and of sheer creative genius.

The program was composed of works written between 1953 and 1968; perhaps the best-known, or at least best-publicized of which was TENT, first performed in June 1968. The choreography, sound score, costumes, lighting, and stage designs were all by Nikolais himself. Somehow Mr. Nikolais manages to involve his audience in a sort of kinesthetic empathy; one felt physically drained by the end of the program.

The style of Mr. Nikolais is characterized by the playing off of opposing elements. Slow movement was interspersed by bursts of frenzied activity. Structure opposed lack of structure; order opposed anomie; rhythm, arhythm. The sound system was continually shifting from cacophony to a most structured, concordant music. The human form was played off against geometric figures and distorted human shapes.

The experience was one of expansion: emotional, sensory, and cognitive. The audience responded to the performance with a standing ovation, calling the Company back for five curtain calls.

UMass Italian Summer Program is Offered

Applications for the University of Massachusetts summer program at the University of Bologna in Italy will close March 1, 1970.

The program, from June 18 to August 27, will take advantage of Bologna's location in the heart of Renaissance Italy to offer college credit courses which relate to the art, history and culture of Renaissance and Modern Italy. All courses are taught in English.

The cost of $725 per student includes round-trip air transportation to Italy, tuition, health and library fees, lodging and field trips to major Italian cities and centers of culture.

Students will be free to travel or study from Aug. 9 to Aug. 27.

Since enrollment in the program is limited, students are urged to apply before the March 1, 1970 deadline.

Further information may be obtained from Professor Howard H. Quint, Department of History, 638 Herter Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst 01002.

Pass-Fail Option In Language

The Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate reported that: "Within the context of the new College of Arts and Sciences language qualification, all foreign language courses numbered lower than 140 are not considered as core requirements, and hence may be taken on a pass-fail basis (at the student's option)."

Accordingly, any student who does not have another pass-fail course (other than in Education) should come to CASIAC (153 South College) on or before Wednesday, Nov. 26, if he wishes to change his registration to pass-fail in a foreign language course at the 110, 120 or 130 level. This option applies specifically to students whose major is in the College of Arts and Sciences.

WOMEN

Personal Perspective:

A Woman on War

She is a junior English major and a member, at least in thought, of the peace movement. Her desire to remain unnamed stems from her feeling of being only a small part of the movement; her thoughts, she wants it known, reflect only her feelings and not those of all its members.

After the October moratorium, there had been a "dying down of spirit" within herself. But as the November activities approached she began again to "analyse my own feelings toward the peace movement." "I realize from these activities there won't be an immediate withdrawal of troops," she said. Yet there remained her belief that the march on Washington would be a start to make his registration to pass-fail in "peace a way of life." "The whole tempo is peace. This never happened before. People who got together for a revolutionary movement did so with violence as a means."

"People say there has to be war," she said. But she does not chose to believe in the reasons given. To her this war is only to support economic interests, and she values human life, especially young human life, more.

To this young student Vietnam is hopeless, and the movement is not just peace for now. The peace movement, she feels, "is against the whole American way of life - political and social." There has to be, according to her, more emphasis on the "humane and soulful".

"If any other country cared about or believed in the Vietnam War," she declared, "they would be there." The responsibility of the whole world, she feels, should not be entirely in the hands of the United States.

A tall brunette, she is not anti-killing, and believes most of the protesters are not either. What she claims to be is anti-"worthless killing." "Give the protesters World War II," she said, "and they'll fight. Give them a Hitler and they'll fight."

To her, anything political destroys people and makes them insignificant. Therefore, she is neither left nor right, but apolitical. On any other level, she said, people become irrational and are unable to handle things.

All she wanted from the moratorium was a beginning that would eventually lead to the end of the war. "All it says is, get out and come back and start a new world order called Peace."

Second Time?

New York - Although oral contraceptives have been in general circulation only since 1961, that's long enough for what one doctor calls the "second time arounders."

Dr. Bernard Nathanson, assistant clinical professor of obstetrics at Cornell Medical College, says "second time arounders" are "girls frighten ed off the pill by scare articles who come in for a diaphragm, get pregnant, end up in the hands of an abortionlest and come back chagrined and chastened, and decide that the pill is less risky than ending up on some kitchen table."

"It's not my job to scold them, and I don't," Dr. Nathanson says. "I'm here to help them so I represcribe the pill without a word."

Other methods of contraception are markedly fallible, the gynecologist points out. "The diaphragm has an inbuilt failure rate of perhaps 10 per cent combined with an esthetic objection that makes women dislike using it," he says. "If they get pregnant, they invariably blame the diaphragm."

Getting Together over Kids

NEW YORK - One of every five babies born to married couples was unwanted by at least one parent, according to a population expert.

"And that's doubtless an underestimation," added Dr. Charles F. Westoff of Princeton University's Office of Population Research, since many parents "forget" their original feelings and find it too painful to characterize as unwanted a child already born.

Dr. Westoff and his colleague, Dr. Larry Bumpass, based their estimate on a 1965 survey of nearly 5,000 representative women of child-bearing age. Recently, the professors resifted the raw material for information on unwanted births.

In a report to the annual meeting of the Planned Parenthood - World Population organization, Dr. Westoff summarized their findings:

The larger the family, the greater the number of unwanted children. Only five percent of first children are unwanted but more than 50 percent of sixth children fall into that category.

Unwanted births account for from 35 to 45 percent of the nation's recent population growth, indicating that reducing unwanted births by "major social measures" could make a "substantial" contribution to defusing the population explosion.

The menace of the world population explosion, said another speaker, Dr. Malcolm Potts, is so enormous that the alternative to a concerted, rational program now might well be "the government putting hormones in the water supply in 1984 or carrying me off for a forcible vasectomy (sterilization operation) because I had two children."

Redmen Go Eagle Hunting

UMass, third ranked in New England, breaking scoring records at will, destroying its conference opponents, and on the heels of a five game winning streak, has its annual joust with Big Time tomorrow at 1:30 when the Redmen take on fifth ranked Boston College, at muddy, Alumni Stadium, in beautiful downtown Chestnut Hill.

The Boston newspaper seers, local grid experts, coaches, fans, and non-fans, are making the Redmen the underdog. They base their assumptions on personnel, and scheduling, which are fairly good things to base assumptions on.

Bigtime this year, as usual, was set for a run at the national title in pre-season dreams, and as usual, their fabulous personnel, coaching and student body, have all failed to bring the Eagles back to the national picture, a place everyone knows they belong.

It will be the final Redman game of a season that is memorable if for nothing else, a complete reversal of form from the failure of 1968. And it has been a satisfying comeback for Coach Vic Fusia.

"I could not be more happy then in seeing the development and progress of this team. The seniors supplied great leadership, the small junior group all did their jobs well, while our sophomores all played a big part."

"This team has had great attitude and sense of humor," Fusia went on, "and the success we have had could make this the most satisfying season I have had at UMass."

The coach has not forgotten the date with Bigtime this week. It's one he and his squad look forward to all season. "They are always strong," said Fusia, "mainly because they bring more people in. Realistically, we have to be the underdog. They have a losing record, but have been playing the likes of Army and Penn. State."

Bigtime's three wins have been against teams that have had horendous seasons, Navy, Tulane and VMI. Bigtime has been plagued by injuries, and inconsistency. And they were overrated.

UMass will rely again on their offensive depth, with Ken Hughes and Tim Adams alternating at quarterback. The Redmen, in shattering numerous Yankee Conference offensive marks, have relied on a crunching ground attack, that will face a big test in the big Eagle.

Defensively, the Redmen will have their hands full containing the likes of Frank Harris whom Fusia terms, "one of the best passers in the east," fullback Joe McDonald, a power runner, the outside jaunts of Fred Willis, who rushed for 203 yards last week, and the pass catching of John Bonistalli who has caught seven touchdown tosses.

UMass has never defeated Boston College in the modern era. The last Redman victory was in 1912. Only 57 years since the last Redman win have elapsed.

You can recall three years ago when the Redmen, in midst of a fine season, B.C. in the midst of firing another coach, UMass with the figure of Greg Landry, got buried on the Alumni Stadium mud. Last year in Amherst, in a game that has gone a lone way to setting the Redman attitude of this year, the injury-racked Redmen, finishing out a desustory season, came close to an upset win over the highly-favored Bigtime.

This year, Bigtime is down, UMass is up. And after 57 years, a win would be a helluva way to close out a great season.

DEFENSIVE MIGHT - Paul Toner(86) clobbers a New Hampshire back, John Farelly(54) does likewise. The UMass defenders have not given up more than one score in the last five games. (MDC photos by Ken Stevens)

The Eagle Will Prove To Be a Turkey

There are still plenty, we repeat, still plenty of good seats available for the big, big UMass-B.C. game in Boston on Saturday. Tickets will be sold until 4:30 today in the Boyden ticket office. This will be the last chance to see your Redman grid favorites for many moons, so be forewarned.

Tickets and Skates

The UMass hockey team will have two open scrimmages over the weekend. Friday night, at 5:30 in the luxurious surroundings of McKugh forum on the campus of Boston College the Redmen meet 7:30 in Orr Rink, UMass scrimmages the Carling Club, a club team that includes many former greater Boston college stars.

Hoop Ducats on Sale

Applications for season tickets to UMass home basketball games for non-students can be picked up at any time in Boyden 255. A special season ticket rate of $15 is available to faculty, staff, professor emeriti and their immediate families.

Ticket applications, when filled out, should be forwarded to Walter R. Novak, Ticket Manager, Boyden Building, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts.

If these persons should desire individual game tickets instead of season tickets, the y should pick up individual game applications in Boyden 255. These applications, when made out, should be forwarded as the others. Prices are $2 for all home games except those in which the Redmen host Providence, URI, UConn and Holy Cross.

Improvements on the Cage have been administered over the last six months with promises of a better lighted, better heated and more water resistant Cage than in times past.

A new roof will eliminate further puddles of water on the basketball floor during showers and will make the Cage a warmer place to watch games. The gross netting has been removed, while improved lighting and the painting of reserved seats is expected in the near future.

The new lighting, to be installed in early January, will allow for black-and-white TV cameras to focus in on Cage events. Convenient parking is another Cage asset as lot #1 west of Whitmore and the lots south of Whitmore are in easy walking distance of the Cage.

For those who purchase reserve tickets, 1,000 seats have been set aside in the Cage balcony. The seats will be numbered and ticket applicants should indicate their preference of North, South, East or West side of the Cage seats.

Metawampe's Grid Picks or; Disaster '69

And the rumors keep detracting from the genius. What difference does it make if he is dead or not? Did the people question whether Shakespeare was alive or not? Do people doubt the existence of artists like Regis Philbin, Soupy Sales, Pinky Lee or Patti Page? There should be an outcry of joy because there is such a great source genius right in their midst.

He was not in the best of moods as dropped off this piece of valuable garbage. Tear gas was still gagging him following the Washington venture, even though people reminded him that he was 500 miles away from the gas. The trying weekend march for peace was still affecting him. The Great One thought the march was in Ware but when he got there, the Fascists were there and he was caught with his arrows down.

It certainly was a nice march.
And of course there is sadness. This is the last edition of 1969, the year of the Turkey. 1968 was also the year of the Turkey. He thinks the way things look, 1970 will be the year of the Turkey. He thinks back to the light-hearted days of September when he would trot gleefully into the offices of New England's largest, college daily with another collection of whitty crap. But now as winter sings the blues, he is forced to send the copy by Telex instead of showing his face.

He wanted to thank all responsible for what has been a rotten year. His bosses at the top of the board, the Pelham Chamber of Commerce, Herman Hruska, Mike the Polka Man, the news bureau, and of course the Field funny farm.
Yes this could be the end. Who gives a royal crap?

Two hours after, these poems were written, the Great One was stricken with a case of nausea. He was delirious for days, and could see nothing but editors and turkeys. His recovery is questionable. He was placed on the danger list at the Village Inn clinic for sleazes.

CAS Faculty OK's June Plan

By MARK SILVERMAN
Asst. Managing Editor

The June Proposal for Curriculum Reform was approved by the Arts and Sciences Faculty this weekend, the Daily Collegian learned late last night. Complete details of the new requirements will be explained in tomorrow's MDC.

With 62% of the Arts and Sciences Faculty voting, the June Proposal received 307 votes (67%), while the Curriculum Reform Proposal received 149 (33%) in the run-off election.

The results mean that, according the College Dean Seymour Shapiro, students planning to graduate this year will have to still follow the Curriculum Committee proposal, because approval of a part of the June Proposal must go through the Faculty Senate, because it is "more liberal" than University core requirements.

Dean Shapiro "hopes that approval by the Faculty Senate comes before the end of the year."

Dean Shapiro also said that a students and faculty committee will have to develop specifics for the new division and program major plans, which were included in the June Proposal.

Also, the Rhetoric Committee from the English and Speech Departments must finalize plans for the new rhetoric courses. And, Shapiro explained, departments will have to review their major programs to make them fit into the proposal's guidelines.

Dean Edward Moore Named Chancellor of Higher Ed.

Former UMass Graduate School Dean Edward C. Moore has been appointed State Chancellor of Higher Education, effective February 1st., by the State Board of Higher Education.

He becomes the State's second Chancellor, succeeding, Dr. Richard M. Millard, who served for two years since the job's creation in 1967.

Moore said this weekend that he is taking the job because the Chancellorship is an "excellent opportunity." He continued, "Massachusetts has a great deal going for it in Higher Education, and I'd like to be a part of it."

Moore said that one of his first projects as Chancellor will be to develop "a long-range master plan for all of higher education in the State."

He added, "The decade of the '70's will be pretty critical for all of us in higher education, and it is very important that we agree now on what we want to accomplish, and on where we are going."

As Chancellor, Moore, 52, will have the responsibility of coordinating all administrative activities of the State's 28 institutions of public higher education. The State System, Moore, admitted, "Has been plagued recently by limited financial support, and this (getting funds) will be a primary concern for me."

Moore left UMass last year, after being Dean of the Graduate School since 1962, and served as vice president for graduate studies and research at the State University of New York for the past year.

At UMass, he lead the growth of the graduate school, which increased by more than a third in size since 1962.

The new Chancellor was born in Mt. Clemens, Mich., and has a B.A.degree from Western Michigan University, two M.A. degrees, and a Ph. D. from the University of Michigan.

Moore taught high school English for three years before moving to the University of Iowa to teach Philosophy.

He has also taught philosophy at the University of Idaho and at UMass.

He was selected for the Chancellorship from among 100 applicants, by a selection committee headed by Daniel C. Rich of Worcester.

Students Vote Strike Against SMU President

DARTMOUTH - The student senate at Southeastern Massachusetts University, supported by 71 facuty members, voted 17-6 Friday to go on strike Monday to protest alleged harassment of three faculty members by the school president.

Byron Ford, senate president, read a strike resolution to some 1200 students amid cries of "Joe must go" - a reference to President Joseph Driscoll.

Driscoll has been accused of firing one faculty member, reappointing another with a one-year, non-renewable contract and telling a third he is under formal investigation by the school.

At the meeting, 71 faculty members presented a petition, supporting the student strike, There are 264 faculty members, and 3300 students.

The senate also expressed plans to sponsor "free university classes" and various teach-ins.

Later in the day, Celestino Macedo, dean of students, said at a press conference.

" The university will remain open Monday - classes will go on as usual. We are confident that the faculty will carry out their responsibility not only to be at class, but provide appropriate instruction for those students wishing to be in attendance and do all possible to see to it that students who wish to attend are not obstructed in any way."

UMass Schedules 240 Units Of Low-Cost Student Housing

The UMass Building Authority will provide 240 high-quality, low-cost prefabricated housing units for married students on a 30-acre tract of land on North Pleasant Street, it was announced Friday.

Studies are being made to see if the units can be ready for accupancy by Sept. 1 the university said.

Trustees voted in October to provide married student housing, built either by the university or a private developer.

H.J. Kittlefield, university planning officer, said several private firms made inquiries, but legislation would have been required for the university to lease the apartments from the developers.

To meet the Sept. 1 deadline, the only choice left was to develop the housing units on university land, he said.

The authority realized that long-term financing was needed to bring this type of housing within the low-rental range. At this point the authority began looking for the type of units that would be more permenent and that had esthetic quality. Such units are available at a cost married students can afford," he said.

Town officials and private firms that had expressed an interest in the project have been informed by letter of the building authority's vote.

Salem State Paper Issue Deadlocked

SALEM, Mass. (AP) - Both sides -students and administration- remained deadlocked Friday in a dispute over publication of Salem State College' students newspaper, "The Log."

For their part, the students - about 60 of them - were continuing a sit-in at the Arts and Sciences Building, demanding that the administration restore operating funds for the paper. The students began the sit-in Wednesday, and said they would remain until the funds were restored or they were ejected.

The funds were cut by Salem State President Frederick A. Meier, who reportedly objected to an article by Black Panther Eldridge Cleaver that appeared in the paper and contained four-letter words.

Meier said Friday morning that he would not change his mind on the fund cut, but added that the students could protest as long as they wished so long as they did not disrupt the college community.

Red China Slams USSR Over Border Talk Issue

TOKYO (AP) - Communist China denounced the Soviet Union by name Sunday and a Japanese news dispatch from Peking said this indicated China's displeasure with the Soviet attitude in border talks under way in the Chinese capital.

Communist China has refrained from sounding off against the Soviet Union by name since the two nations opened the talks Oct. 20 aimed at solving their critical border dispute.

People's Daily, official organ of the Chinese Communist party, made the direct accusation in an editorial marking the 20th anniversary of diplomatic relations with Albania, China's only ally in Eastern Europe.

The editorial, distributed by Peking's official Hsinhua, news agency monitored here, charged that: "U.S. imperialism and Soviet revisionist social-imperialism . . . are stepping up their arms expansion and war preparations in an attempt to realize their own ambitions.

"They are cunningly playing the counter-revolutionary dual tactics: While loudly chanting the peace hymn to deceive others in a big way on the one hand, they frantically intensify their plunder and aggression on the other."

The people of the world "must be highly vigilant against this counter-revolutionary dual tactic of theirs," it added.

The dispatch said Soviet and East European diplomats walked out when a Chinese official criticized the Warsaw Pact during a performance of an Albanian song and dance troupe in Peking Friday.

News reports from Hong Kong have also said recently the Soviet-Chinese border talks are not going smoothly. Chinese officials and news media have been silent on the progress of the talks since the conference began.

The two sides are seeking some kind of agreement on provisional measures to maintain the status quo along the tense 4,500-mile border, withdraw troops from disputed areas and avoid new frontier clashes such as those which touched off bloody fighting this year.

Klein Predicts Agnew Will Shut Up Soon

NEW YORK (AP) - President Nixon's communications director said Sunday he does not expect Vice President Spiro T. Agnew to wage a continual campaign of criticism against the press.

Herbert G. Klein, in New York for a Zionist Organization of American dinner, said Agnew hoped reaction to his allegations of press unfairness is "out of the passion stage to calm discussion within the industry itself."

Klein discounted speculation that the Nixon administration might try to influence the licensing of television stations. He said he though the American press had reacted to Agnew's criticism "in a very healthy way."

Mid-East Continues Boiling

Israeli warplanes raided Egyptian targets for four hours Sunday along the entire length of the 103-mile Suez Canal after the Arabs claimed an Egyptian commando unit crossed the waterway and demolished a Jewish tank.

In northern Israel, riot police beat back hundreds of stone-throwing Jewish youths who tried to storm the Arab quarter of a town near Haifa Sunday night in reprisal for terrorist bombings.

Spokesmen in Tel Aviv did not acknowledge Cairo's report of the commando attack. They said planes repeatedly roared across the canal to pummel Egyptian gun emplacements and "military installations" at several points between El Qantara and Suez, the two towns at either end of the waterway.

It was one of Israel's heaviest air strikes in several weeks and all planes returned safely, the spokesmen said.

The official Middle East News Agency reported from Cairo that an Egyptian commando unit crossed the Suez Canal in the northern sector of Deversoir. It said the commandos destroyed an Israeli tank, killed its occupants, and "all our men returned safely to base."

"A number of Israeli planes attempted to retaliate by bombing our positions in the Deversoir and Ballah areas but were intercepted and driven off by antiaircraft guns," an Egyptian spokesman said.

Rioting near Haifa was the third in 24 hours by what police called Jewish "hotheads" in the ancient town of Acre.

Behind the Union A Trapezoid Lurks

By RICHARD C. HANSON
STAFF REPORTER

Near the old Student Union rises the new Campus Center in all its splendor and mystery. Marcell Brauer, one of the major exponents of the Gropus school of architectural thought, has given UMass a new dimension of design, of creation in a spatial plane, of existential poetry in form. This modern Ictinus-cum-Callicrates has given this weary world a new shape, the powerful Inverted Trapezoid of grey cement, which honors the otherwise stale space between the Student Union and the Campus Center.

Many have passed by, looking askance at this epitome of good taste and elegance, vividly experiencing the meaning it gives to what might be a flat and unprofitable expanse of concrete jungle. Many have asked the major questions of life as they looked askance: Who am I? Where am I going? What the hell is that crummy inverted trapezoid of grey cement that I am looking askance at?

This Courageous Reporter braved the dire warnings posted about the work site to ask just those questions. Treading thoughtfully through the ankle-deep mud, he came upon two of the noble proletariat. Broodingly, half to himself, he asked the third Question; and lo, the Answer! Through his many years of unrewarding and irrelevant University courses he had not learned the Answer -- but these members of the holy working class had. The Inverted Trapezoid, they said simply, represented a vent for the Underground Truck Receiving Section of the Campus Center Complex.

The moral became clear. Not every inverted trapezoid is a mountain in the lives of men . . .

Food for thought.

Moonmen Stage Press Conference

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Nearing home, the Apollo 12 moon explorers held a news conference from space Sunday, saying they would do it all again - despite the launch day lightning and a space suit that was too small.

Moonwalkers Charles "Pete" Conrad Jr. and Alan L. Bean said they spent a miserable, nearly sleepless night on the moon, trying to sleep in hammocks strung up in the small lunar lander. They wore white flight suits and baseball-style caps while color television focused on them inside the spacecraft they call Yankee Clipper. Capsule Communicator Gerald Carr read questions submitted earlier by newsmen.

"All three of us were a lot calmer . . . than I though we'd be" said Conrad. "I think Al and I were a bit nervous during that ascent from the moon. After all we had only one engine."

Bean said he had a moment of anxiety when he felt a sudden pressure change in his space suit while he was walking the moon's surface.

"It gave me quite a pulse there for a minute," he said.

Command module pilot, Richard F. Gordon Jr., who spent almost 40 hours alone orbiting the moon, said he was too busy to get lonely. He said he was able twice to sight the lunar module and an unmanned spacecraft on the surface of the moon.

Conrad said he was particularly uncomfortable on the moon because the space suit he was wearing was about half an inch too short.

"So I bore with it and only slept about four hours," he said.

Bean said he "woke up and went back to sleep several times."

Gordon said the Ocean of Storms where the lunar lander touched down, was unlike anything on earth they had seen.

Conrad, asked about his reported fall on the moon's surface, said he didn't fall on purpose. "I was trying to pick up something," he said. "I just rolled over on my side down on the ground. As soon as I got all the way down, Al gave me a lift back up and I don't think it's a problem."

"You fall so slowly," said the Apollo 12 commander. "It gives you time to turn around or get your footing before its too late. You fall so slowly you just keep moving out until your feet come back under you again."

"We weren't tired or anything," he added. "We wanted to keep going."

Conrad said the big problem was suiting up inside the cramped lunar module cabin.

Landing on the moon, said Conrad, "was no piece of cake. It took everything I had to get that LM lunar module down in one piece."

Apollo 12 sped past the half-way mark at 3:10 p.m. EST. It was to make the final half of its voyage from the earth in only 24 hours, gaining speed second-by-second as earth's gravity pulls it forward.

NEWS ANALYSIS

The SUG Board Caper

Thursday night, the SUG Board meeting developed into a political struggle led by Larry Wood who is also a member of the Student Senate.

The fight evolved over the question concerning whether the Student Senate should be allowed a vote on the SUG Board. The obvious sentiment to bar a Student Senate vote hit Senate Larry Wood right in his "royal" constituency.

Most of the Board felt that allowing a Student Senate vote would be double representation of their constituency since both organizations are elected by the UMass population.

In a last minute try, Senator Wood tried some "arm twisting". He brought to the attention of the Board a somewhat obscure proposal of the Student Senate which would require the Student Senate to appoint SUG Board members rather than elect them on a campus wide vote. Certainly, Mr. Wood's fellow senators will be proud of him His loyalty is without question, but his political adeptness is in question.

Environment Teach-In Planned For Across Nation, April 1970

The date for next Spring's National Teach-In on the Crisis of the Environment being planned for college campuses across the country will be Wednesday, April 22, 1970, it was announced recently.

The Teach-In objective is to mobilize the constructive energies of American youth in a massive effort to halt the accelerating pollution and destruction of the environment, according to Senator Gaylord Nelson, Wisconsin Democrat, and Congressman Paul McCloskey, California Republican.

Nelson and McCloskey, who will serve as co-chairmen of the nonpartisan Teach-In effort, said that on the Teach-In day students, scientists, community and other leaders, faculty , and environmentalists will meet to discuss the environmental threat to America and to the nation's quality of life in a local and national educative effort.

The Teach-Ins will be shaped campus by campus by student initiative, and may take the form of symposiums, convocations, panel discussions or a combination of these.

Nelson and McCloskey reported that formation of a student-directed National Teach-In staff, committee and office in Washington will be completed within a week.

The national office will serve as a communications and service center and as an organizational stimulus for individual campus Teach-Ins.

The co-chairmen pointed out that the success of the National Teach-In will depend on grass roots activities initiated by students campus by campus.

The goal by January, according to the co-chairmen, is to active planning efforts for the April 22nd Teach-In underway on all of the nation's campuses.

The co-chairmen said that preparatory to the Teach-In, they are asking students to undertake a comprehensive inventory of environmental problems on their campus, in their community, and in their region.

The co-chairmen stressed the importance of student initiative and leadership to the success of the Teach-In. "It is the present student generation that inherits our rapidly deteriorating environment, and this generation whose commitment will determine whether we reverse the present trends toward dirty water, air, and a fouled landscape.

"Hopefully, our young people, in a day of nationwide environmental review, will set specific goals for the 70's. Goals for a decade of national effort which will recognize that environmental quality deserves the same priorities of expenditure as did the moon-shot effort of the 60's," the co-chairmen continued.

"It is appropriate, by the 200th anniversary of the founding of this nation in 1776, that we be well on our way to solving the problems of population growth and the preservation of clean air, water, and open space. The key to achievement of this result lies in mobilizing the idealism, the motivation, and the energies of this student generation. We are confident that they are ready, able and willing to do the job."

Nelson and McCloskey noted their conviction that environmental problems now rank with Vietnam and racism as the major issues on campus.

"The enthusiastic student support around the country for conservation is a dramatic indication of this," they said.

FROM OUR SIDE

Take a Hint

Thursday afternoon I sat through the most frustrating meeting I ever attended in my entire life. The School of Home Economics called a general meeting of students and faculty to discuss, I thought, how to improve the school and to discuss study that will be done by a committee of faculty and four students to implement changes that the school needs.

I thought we would discuss the future. I thought the Dean and the faculty wanted to hear what we thought needed to be looked into. Questions and comments were made mainly by seniors, for we had been through most of the courses and know where the problems are. And we CARED. But more important we were the only ones who could say what had to be said since our grades could no longer be hurt by speaking out.

One faculty member afterward asked me, (for there are some who are on our side), "Weren't there more questions you girls wanted to ask?'' Yes, I told her, but we also wanted answers to the questions we did ask. We were not given good answers. We were given reasons WHY things were the way they were and should remain so. Our suggestions were given no weight. We were told that our ideas had not worked in the past and therefore were not good. Couldn't they at least think about what we said? They condemned before looking at all the facts. We did not desire a "yes" answer to all our suggestions. All we wanted to hear was a sincere, "We'll consider it." Our Dean comes from Cornell, and that great, but this is UMass and I wish she'd recall that when listening to UMass students' suggestions.

Granted the school is small, but its getting smaller. Why? Because the school is not forward looking. Because of an unspoken, but definitely existant dress code. Because there is no flexibility, no change. Because some teachers are there, not on merit, but on tenure. The school needs some new blood, young blood. The school needs money. But until more students are enticed into the school, there will be no more money granted. And the rigidness now keeps students from entering or staying there.

All we ask is that the school is looked at objectively, looked at with we, the students, in mind; looked at with the future, not the past as most important; and that they take a hint from the School of Education.

Agnew: Laughing

Spiro Agnew has been in the news more than any other Vice-President in my lifetime. His speeches get press coverage, something Humphrey rarely got until he was a candidate. Now Agnew has managed the cover of Time and Newsweek in the same week. This is enlightening, because usually this only happens with astronauts. Now, however, the Vice-President, as a more skillful politician than Neil Armstrong, has replaced the space program at America's number one diversionary tactic.

I'm a tiny bit disturbed at all the people who make fun of Agnew. Stupid he is not. If he meant what he said in his two recent attacks on the media, then he has voiced complaints that are legitimate. However, whether or not he meant them, his political maneuvering has won much respite for the President. This is crucial for the Nixon Administration, which is dedicated to doing nothing new, and undoing as much that's old as possible. (Read the Southern Strategy by Phillips and you'll want to weep for the notion of democracy). If Agnew is a fool, gentlemen, may I quote John Lennon, who is even trickier than either the President or Spiro. "Don't you think the joker laughs at you?"

While Spiro is on the cover, there no way one can see Vietnam or Chicago or Biafra or Washington on the same cover. The Nixon Administration is accusing the press of being unfair, and meanwhile controlling the news to the point where the big story is Spiro criticizing the media. Is the cat chasing his tail. There's a war going on next door.

Speaking as one, I'll consider news manipulation, the Vice-President's mental abilities, the morality of capitalism, and whether or not "Fascist" is a valid description some other time. At the moment there is a disgusting war going on, Bobby Seale is in jail for four years for nothing; the people of Biafra (anyone remember Biafra?) You know, we should get out of Vietnam because it's a civil war, but we should go to Biafra because it's a war for independence. Meanwhile we let one starve to death and we napalm the other. Politics, that's really cool. Where does human life come in on this scale? are starving, repeat starving, the people of the United States don't have things too good either, the air you are currently breathing is poisonous, repeat poisonous. With such things around to consider, I really can see swallowing Nixon's tricks, and I can't see caring what Spiro says. One needn't be a Republican. But one needn't be the Weatherman either to tell the difference between a tornado and a breeze from the stockyard.

ART BUCHWALD

More on TV Coverage

WASHINGTON - Today I would like to discuss with you the dangers of television sports casting and how a small group of men decide what 20 million people will see during a football game.

Last Saturday, Ohio State played Purdue in one of the most important football games of the year. While viewers had tuned in to see this great contest pitting two of the finest teams in the country, two or three commentators who had made up their minds in advance on the outcome had subjected the game to instant analysis and querulous criticism.

It was obvious to those of us watching that these self-appointed analysts expressed their hostility toward one team or the other before the television audience had a chance to digest what had happened.

Two of the commentators, Chris Schenkel and Bud Wilkinson, by the tone of their voices and the expressions on their faces, indicated sharp disapproval of Purdue's defense and couldn't hide their admiration for the way Ohio State had managed to score at will.

They offered gratuitous advice, challenging the policies of the Purdue quarterback and coach, and the networks seemed happy to offer the commentators all the time they wanted.

Now everyone has a right to say what he wants about the Ohio State-Purdue football game, but the American people also have a right to make up their own minds as to what they have seen.

How was this football game telecast? A small elite group of men, no more than a dozen, decided what you would or would not see Saturday. They chose the plays and the players that you would follow. You had no choice in this matter.

They also, at their own discretion, decided what instant replay would be shown and when. This great power in the hands of a few men is too frightening to imagine. Who is to say how much Chris Schenkel's inflections or Bud Wilkinson's raised eyebrows contributed to Purdue's defeat?

We know that Schenkel lives in New York and Wilkinson lives in Washington, the most unrepresentative communities in the United States.

Both men read the same newspapers and draw their views from the same sources. Worse, they talk constantly to one another, thereby providing artificial reinforcements of their shared viewpoints.

Is it not fair and relevant to question the concentration of power when it comes to college football games in the hands of a tiny enclosed fraternity of privileged men, elected by no one and enjoying a monopoly sanctioned and licensed by the government?

We should ask ourselves: What is the end profit of watching such a game? Why, for example, did the network in question choose to show the violence of the Purdue-Ohio State football game, rather than the peaceful scenes on the sidelines? Why were their cameras constantly aimed at confrontation between the two teams instead of showing us what was going on outside the stadium in the parking lot, where all was calm and serene?

At the halftime we saw demonstrations on the field, cheerleaders screaming and urging their respective teams to violence. In the search for excitement and controversy we were treated to a small minority of people, numbering no more than 85,000 shouting and yelling their heads off. Was this representative of all the people in the United States?

I do not have the solutions to the questions I have raised today. I believe it is up to the sports-casting media to reexamine and improve the objectivity of their football reporting. I don't say that government should get into it at this time, but if we can't have a football game without violence on the field and prejudice on the part of the commentators, then I can't see any other alternative than for the FCC to step in.

Themis Researcher: Self-Justifying

To The Editor:

I would like to offer several corrections to the Guest Editorial that appeared in Thursday's Collegian. First of all, I wrote the article, not Bart Kaplan. The statement "One project for Themis was specifically designed for this placing of weapons on the ocean floor) application" is completely incorrect. The mistake resulted from a mix-up in communications between myself and the COALITION researcher who did the research on Themis. This mix-up occured when the article was written nearly two weeks ago. The statement should have said that one project done under the UMass Themis grant was specifically related to the military benefits of noise reduction in submarines. The coalition has amply documented this fact which does prove that consciously directed war research has taken place under the guise of UMass Themis.

The statement about pigeons being trained to blow up jet planes on the runway was topographically confused in yesterday's editorial. The statement was about what was being research on other campuses under Project Themis. Besides pigeon warfare, Themis includes gas and germ warfare. The statement was an attempt to give an overall characterization to Themis nationally. I do believe the national character of Themis is relevant to the discussion of whether it belongs here.

The charge that the Pentagon is interested in deep sea submersible so that it can place weapons on the ocean floor I believe most people will agree is correct. However the motives of the Pentagon are not to be confused with the motives of individual researchers. The statement was not meant to cast any aspersion on any of the researchers involved in UMass Project Themis. Most of them are doing research not directly war related but still recognized the moral ambiguity of accepting Pentagon funding. I have little respect for research which portrays a self-justifying naivite as to the interest of the military in pure research, but I have found that the Themis researcher with whom I have talked does recognize the moral ambiguity of his situation. I then simply ask him to end this cloud of ambiguous morality by not accepting Pentagon funding. The COALITION asks the University to guarantee refunding of all projects, now under military funding, which are peaceful in intent.

A Just Plea

Billy can't read. Too bad, you say. That's not the halt of it. Billy doesn't CARE if he can read or not because he knows, "You can't get no place in this world." Billy is in the third grade.

Does anybody care about Billy? U Mass does This semester over six hundred students volunteered to tutor in the N.E.S. program in Springfield. As of this writing, approximately 170 students have been assigned specific teaching duties. These students are a lifeline of hope to the culturally deprived children in the Springfield area. Or, rather, they were. It seems that UMass doesn't care quite enough. Even though there have been countless appeals for either the use of a bus, the repair of the existing bus, or the donation of other means of transportation, no one has responded. Some of the tutors have managed to form car pools, but even this is not enough. There are just not enough cars.

The N.E.S. program needs help to stay alive and it needs it quickly. It would be nice if a fairy godfather would swoop down and fix the bus (or provide a new one.) But around here the next best thing to a fairy godmother is the Student Senate. Well?

Concerned?

To the Editor:

I would like to express my gratitude to the "Themis" researchers who are working so desperately to explore the natural resources of the ocean for the purposes of contributing to the survival of mankind. Our depleted atmosphere needs such research. Especially after the very same "Themis" researchers caused such depletion and contamination through their propulsion systems, viral breedings, napalm, and various other experimental programs of the Chemical-Biological Warfare System.

All I can say to you people is that I sincerely hope the government gives you more money for conservational research rather than for warfare research, because we both know that it is THEY and their money who dictate the nature of your work.

Please excuse any apparent "emotion", but I find it very difficult to remain cold and factual when thousands of innocent people are choking, burning, and suffering.

Lottery Draft Details Explained

WASHINGTON - When the Selective Service System begins using a new draft lottery, probably early next year, draft-eligible Americans will not have precise information about their chances of being inducted.

But the new system will shorten their period of "prime vulnerability" to the draft from six years to one, and it will give them some solid clues to the likelihood that they will or will not be wearing mufti.

As explained by Selective Service officials, the new lotery will be based on two "scramblings" - of birth dates and the alphabet - carried out toward the end of each year. Here is how it would work.:

The 366 dates of the year, including Feb. 29 of Leap Years, would be placed in a "hat, bag or bowl," as Roger T. Kelley, Assistant Secretary of Defense, put it. Then they would be drawn one at a time to develop a sequence of priority.

For example, if Aug 13 were the first date drawn, then all draft-eligible males born on that date would be in the highest level of induction priority and almost certain to be drafted. If Jan. 26 were drawn last, the chances that individuals born on that date would be drafted would be slim.

Next, the 26 letters of the alphabet would go through the same scrambling process. If for instance, the first five letters to be drawn were N-R-C-O-J, draft eligible men whose last names began with those letters would be increasingly subject to induction if their birthdates had high priorities.

The listing of each date and the order of priority of the letters would be made public by the Selective Service System and would be posted at each of the 4,098 local draft boards across the country.

The lottery system is intended to reduce the number of years during which an individual would have a high draft priority. During 1970, however, all males born between Jan 1, 1944 and Dec. 31, 1950, would be included in the lottery so that none would get a free ride.

After 1970, the lottery would apply first to 19-year-olds. Males between 20 and 26 would still be eligible for the draft but unlikely to be inducted unless voluntary enlistments fell drastically or a national emergency required a major increase in draft calls.

Even among 19-year olds, the system would be such that draft boards in different parts of the United States would reach a level on the order of priority at different times. This would be caused by differing draft quotas for the various local boards.

To take an example, if the draft board in Newark had a quota of four inductees for a given month, it would first select all eligible males whose birthdates had the highest priority, say Aug 13.

Suppose there were seven persons with that birthdate in the Newark draft pool. The Newark board would then select them in order of the alphabetical sequence which would be the same for each date. If the top letter was N, then an individual named Northrup, for instance, and who was born on Aug. 13 would be drafted.

As a further example, if the Newark board had to draft three men, and it had six born on Aug 13 and they all had last names beginning with the letter N, the board would examine the first letter of their given names, using the same alphabetical sequence.

Accordingly a man named Norman Northrup would be chosen in advance of, say, another named Fred Nightingale.

The lottery system would not affect the present arrangement of granting deferments. Men with deferments would become eligible for the draft pool when their deferments expired and remain eligible for a year.

There would be no direct impact on the size of draft quotas as a result of the change. According to Pentagon estimates, 800,000 men will be in the draft pool next year and as many as 250,000 will be inducted.

Mr. Kelley said that the January draft call was expected to be "very much lower" than the projected quota of 35,000.

The decrease is possible because the over-all size of the armed forces is being reduced and the rate of voluntary enlistments has been up to the services' quotas in nearly all cases.

Juillard Quartet

Juillard String Quartet Set to Play December 4

The famed Juilliard String Quartet will appear in concert in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts on Thursday evening, December 4th at 8:00 p.m. This event marks the third event in the Fine Arts Council's Concert Association Chamber Music Series.

In the past, the Juilliard Quarter has appeared at the University several times each season, however, their visit on December 4 will be the Quartet's only appearance thi s season. For this occasion, a program including works by Beethoven, Bartok and Mendelssohn have been selected.

The Juilliard String Quarter occupies a singular position among today's leading quartets. Formed in 1946, the Juilliard, as it is informally known, has built an impressive repertoire of some 135 works encompassing all of the standard works as well as many leading contemporary works. It was the Julliard Quartet that presented the world premieres of Elliot Carter's Quartet No. 2, the Humphrey Searle Quartet and Leon Kirchner's Quartet No. 1. The Quartet performs throughout the world, is quartet-in-residence of the Juilliard School of Music and has been quartet-in-residence at the Library of Congress since 1962.

Reserved tickets to the Juilliard Quartet's concert at the University of Massachusetts are priced at $1.00 for UMass undergraduates; $2.00 for UMass graduate students, faculty, staff and other students and $3.00 for the general public and may be obtained from the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Stevie Smith "Unique"

England's unparalled Stevie (Florence) Smith ventures beyond many poets of our dull epoch. She illuminates the night of modern poetry like a phosphorescent orb suspended and swinging over a labyrinth of emotion. Whoever falls under the chimerical rays emerging from her lucid poetry is blinded with sadness or laughter. She skillfully illumines for us images of macabre tragedy and irresistable humor with a flash of eerie radiance.

Stevie Smith's unique and captivating voice will strike you deeply. You may even find yourself muttering this Ogden Nash verse:

"Who or what is Stevie Smith?
Is She woman, is she myth?"

Report Shows Problem of Urban Violence

WASHINGTON (AP) - Fear of violence "is gnawing at the vitals of urban America," the national violence commission declared Sunday. It called on the government to spend massive sums of money over several years to root out the cases.

"An improved criminal justice system is required to contain the growth of violent crime," the commission said. And it made several recommendations, including in - creased foot patrols by interracial police team in the ghettos, better street lighting and "increased police-community relations activity in the slum ghettos."

It recommended providing free drugs such as methadone to addicts so they would not have to rob to support their habits.

But the commission declared "only progress toward urban reconstruction can reduce the strenght of crime-causing forces in the inner city."

Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower, chairman of the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence created in 1968 by President Lyndon B. Johnson stressed the need for urgency.

In a news conference, he echoed the report's recommendation that if the nation's Vietnam commitment prevents a full-scale war on U. S. urban ills at present "we should now legally make the essential commitments and then carry them out as quickly as funds can be obtained."

Eisenhower said the cost would amount to "billions. . .massive sums of money" over several years.

The commission said that in reaction to violent crimes "we are closing ourselves into fortresses when collectively we should be building the great open-city societies of which we are capable."

In summing up the problem the commission found:

"Violent crimes are chiefly a problem of the cities of the nation, and there violent crimes are committed mainly by the young, poor, male inhabitants of the ghetto slum.

"In the slums increasingly powerful social forces are generating rising levels of violent crimes which, unless checked, threaten to turn our cities into defensive, fearful societies."

Unless effective action is taken, the commission said, streets and residential neighborhoods in the central city will be unsafe in differing degrees with business districts deserted at night except for police patrols. It said "ghetto slum neighborhoods will be places of terror with widespread crime perhaps entirely out of police control during night time hours."

It pictured upper-middle and high - income families living in "fortified cells" in prime locations; ownership of guns almost universal in the suburbs; homes fortified by an array of protective devices; armed volunteers supplementing inadequate suburban police forces; armed guards "riding shotgun" on public transportation and guarding schools and playgrounds.

The picture also included high-speed patrolled expressways serving as "sanitized corridors connecting safe areas."

Agnew Discloses Reasons He Has

NEW YORK (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew says he spoke out against protest movements because "like the great silent majority, I had had enough," and not because President Nixon told him to.

In a guest editorial titled "I did it on my own," written for the current issue of Life magazine, Agnew asserted:

"Protest is generally negative in content. It is against some persons or thing. It does not offer constructive alternatives and is not conducive to creating the thoughtful atmosphere where positive answers may be formulated."

Agnew, in his editorial, did not refer to his Des Moines, Iowa, speech criticizing the television networks nor to his Montgomery, Ala., speech criticizing the press.

Limiting himself to the speech in which he attacked protest movements in general and the Vietnam Moratorium in particular, the vice president said, "I did not make my speech at New Orleans to accommodate the President or even the American people. I made it to fulfill my own conviction that a political leader should lead, should point out problems where problems exist and dangers where dangers exist."

Amherst College Play Presentation Slated

In its first production of the 1969-70 academic year Amherst College's Kirby Theater opened November 21 with the Masquers presentation of THREE SISTERS by Anton Chekhov. Six evening performances of the play directed by Professor Walter Boughton are scheduled for December 5, 6, and 7 at 8:30 p.m.

The cast includes Amherst College's Jon Alper as Andrey Prozorov, Ken Hoxie as Baron Toozenbach, John Reinus who plays Lt. Col. Vershinin and Brock Putnam as the army doctor Chebutykin.

The three Prozorov sisters are all played by Smith and Mount Holyoke College students. Christa Macbeth plays Olga, the eldest of the sisters and an unmarried headmistress of a girls' school. Masha, the second oldest, is unhappily married to a school master and therefore disillusioned about marriage in general. She is played by Deborah Kelley from Mount Holyoke College. Marie Melaugh of Smith plays Irena, the youngest and most idealistic of the three sisters.

THREE SISTERS, first produced in 1902 by the Moscow Art Theater, centers around three women (and a man) whose parents have died and who are living in a provincial town outside of Moscow. All four members of the family want to go to Moscow where they feel that they could live a more artistically satisfying life.

The play is built around the conflict of the Prozorovs' ambitions with the bourgeois institutions of the small town in which they are currently stranded.

The fate of the three girls depends, in large measure, on whether their brother, Andrey, is able to secure the position he desires as a professor at the University of Moscow. While they are waiting for their brother to achieve this goal, the only interesting thing in the town for the young women is the fact that there is an army detachment stationed there.

Hency, Baron Toozenbach, who resigns from his army post because he feels that he has been leading a useless life as a soldier, falls in love with Irena. Toozenbach, realizing the fruitlessness of the upper classes, intends to get a job as a laborer.

Lt. Col. Vershinin, the battery commander, is also unhappily married and he is attracted to Masha who is in a similar dilemma.

In sum, the irony of structure, of characterization, of language, plus the depth of psychological probing, the combination of the most inane foolishness with the grimmest despair, and the simultaneous victory and defeat of life - all of these qualities make THREE SISTERS one of Chekhov's greatest triumphs.

Tickets for all performances of THREE SISTERS are available at the Kirby Theater Box Office weekdays from 10:00 a.m. until noon and from 2:00 - 5:00 p.m. or by telephone 542-2278. All seats will be reserved. They are $2.00 for Saturdays and $1.50 for other evenings.

New Members Sought For Student Panel

Last year under the sponsorship of the Student Health & Welfare Council, a student panel was formed to interview candidates for positions on the professional staff of the University Health Services.

Students particpate in informal discussions with the applicants in order to estimate non-professional qualifications, such as ability to communicate with students and understanding of problems pertinent to college students. This is an opportunity for students to have a direct voice in the selection of the professionals appointed to serve their health needs. This panel has continued to function, but additional members are needed.

Any student who wishes to be included on this Interview Panel should send his or her name, address, phone number and class schedule to Jane Zapka at the Health Services.

Smith College to Perform Plays By Area Students in Workshop

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. - Rehearsals and discussions open to the public of plays by area students and residents have begun as part of a three-week Smith College Playwright Workshop Series.

Six of 55 scripts submitted were chosen for the workshop. The local playwrights are having their plays produced in workshop form, with New York Theatre professionals directing and acting in them. A group of 16 Smith student actors are also working in the productions.

All of the workshop events are open, with no charge for attendance. The worksho p is being held in the Center for the Performing Arts television studio.

William Gibson, author of the stage and film versions of "The Miracle Worker," and Frank Gilroy, author of "The Subject was Roses," will participate in discussion sessions on the plays at the college. The discussions will focus on choices available to the director, actors and the playwrights in further work on the scripts.

The rehearsals are being held from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. weekdays in the television studio of the Center. Among original scripts written by area residents chosen for the workshop is the first act of a play by Frank Sousa of Granby, Mass., "Anubis is Willing." An Amherst resident, Frank Smith, will have the second act of his "Song to the Sun" presented.

"After the Applebox," by Pat Schneider, University of Massachusetts graduate student in theatre, and "2A," an exercise by Marilyn Lewis, a Smith graduate student in theatre, will also be presented. Two Smith undergraduates will also have their scripts produced in the workshop. Smith senior Karen Cooper wrote "Dementia Praecox," and Marjorie Gove, a freshman, wrote "Ladders."

Edward Setrakian, best known for his work with New York's La Mama Troupe, will direct the workshop productions. New York Theatre professionals Jack Hollander and Rochelle Oliver will join the student actors.

The cast of student and professional actors will present "2A" and a reading of "After the Applebox" from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the television studio of the Center. A discussion, including visiting playwright Gibson, will follow in the Monday (Nov. 24) session.

On December 1, a reading of act two of Smith's three-act play, "Song to the Sun" will be given from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the studio. On the final day of the workshop, from 3 to 6 p.m. Dec. 5, "Dementia Praecox," "Ladders," and "Anubis is Willing" will be presented. Visiting playwrights Gibson, Gilroy, John Guare - author of the off-Broadway success "Muzeeka" - and Don Petersen - author of "Does the Tiger Wear a Necktie?" - will attend and discuss the presentations.

Leonard Berkman, lecturer in playwrighting at Smith, organized the workshop and selected the six plays being produced. Stressing the "workshop nature of the productions," Berkman said his choices were based on "possibilities of flexible staging involved with the relationships among the characters." He also looked for "experimentation by the playwrights in their works with unusual psychological states of mind."

There will be a coffee hour for undergraduate philosophy majors on Monday, December 1 from 3:15 - 4:30 in the Faculty Lounge, 6th floor Thompson Tower. This will be an opportunity to learn about the nature of the courses to be offered in the spring semester.

All interested undergraduate philosophy majors are cordially invited to attend.

Humanist Party Begins In Western Mass. Area

Plans are now being formulated for the creation of a new political party which will operate initially in the Western Massachusetts area. Called the Humanist Party, it hopes to enter candidates in the 1970 Congressional elections, and to examine the possibility of entering students in elections for Amherst offices.

The Humanist Party intends to be very different from the major political parties which presently exist. Its platform, outlined below, is not designed for immediate acceptance by the vast majority of voters. It does attempt to propose new solutions to major problems facing the nation, with the hope of bringing alternative methods of solving these problems into the public forum.

The Platform calls for completely socialized medicine, a guaranteed minimum income for ALL Americans (the income rate to be discussed is $5,000 for all single adults, $3000 for each married adult, and $2,000 for each child, with a maximum of $10,000 for each family), the cost of the guaranteed income to be funded by a new tax to be placed solely on corporate profits, freezing all prices and wages, abolition of all laws obstructing free sexual expression between consenting adults, abolition of all anti-drug laws and establishing clinics making drugs available at cost to addicts and drug-dependents - and medical advice and assistance to those trying to "kick" the habit, unilateral disarmament, humane birth control and abortion laws, and an uncompromising stand on these and other issues dealing with the basic human-ness of mankind.

Started by Gil Salk and Eugene Petit, the idea for the Humanist Party has already received support on this campus and in the Springfield area.

There will be a meeting of all people interested in working on refining the platform, party organizing, fund-raising, and analyzing the local situation to see whether there is an opportunity for effectively involving students in town politics.

The meeting will be held in the Nantucket Room of the Student Union on Tuesday, November 25, at 3:00 p.m.

Any groups desiring a representative of the Humanist Party to speak to them may contact Gil Salk at 545-0648.

Asso. English Prof. To Teach in England

An associate professor of English at UMass has been appointed visiting professor in the department of American Studies at the University of Keele, Staffordshire, England.

Dr. David T. Porter will conduct graduate seminars in American literature at Keele during the coming spring semester.

A past director of graduate English studies at U-Mass, Dr. Porter is the author of a book on the poet Emily Dickinson and studies in American poetry.

Dr. Porter will be accompanied to England by his wife, three sons and his niece, Patricia Porter.

1980 Forecast See Shortage In Educational Facilities

Current projections show at least 115,000 qualified students in this state will be unable to go to college by 1980 because of a shortage of space in public and private institutions.

The Board of Higher Education heard the warning from acting chancellor Patrick McCarthy Friday after voting unanimously to request $100 million for the construction of the first five buildings of a new UMass at Boston on a Columbia Point site.

With completion of the first phase, targeted for 1972, there will be room for 5,000 students. By 1980 the Boston campus should be able to accommodate 15,000, according to present plans.

Nominations for a new chancellor to replace John Lederle at U-Mass at Amherst must be made by subcommittees composed of students, faculty and administrators and other selection groups before Dec. 1 so that the appointment can be made by March 1, the Board learned.

The Board delegated a subcommittee to meet yesterday afternoon with officials on the governor's staff to inform the executive branch of the need for the $100 million. The legislature has already appropriated $50 million for plans and site development of the new campus.

The Board also confirmed appointment of Dr. Edward C. Moore as chancellor of higher education at a salary of $30,000 and approved legislation calling for an "unspecified" pay increase for the new appointee. Moore's salary will begin on Jan. 1 though the Board has released him from "committee duties" for the six months subsequent while he completes his commitment as vice president of the State University of New York at Binghamton.

Mrs. Hyman Ullian, a member of the Board estimated it would cost the state $2 billion to provide the physical facilities to enable every qualified student in the state to attend a college or university in the state by 1980.

The Board authorized $15,000 for continuation of a study that analyzed the demand for college seats and the numbers available.

The report showed that 70 per cent of Greater Boston high school students aspire to college and of that group 60 per cent are able to qualify on the basis of academic and financial ability.

Funded through the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the study indicates that students from low income families consistently scored lower than their higher income counterparts in college entrance examinations.

The report recommends providing better teachers and schools for this segment of high school students to enable them to compete for seats in the state's institutions of higher education.

U.S. Launches Air Defense

SAIGON (AP) - Anticipating an enemy buildup, the U.S. Command has launched a new air campaign against North Vietnamese road networks in neighboring Laos, official sources reported yesterday.

They said U.S. Navy planes flying from two carriers in the Gulf of Tonkin have been diverted from targets in South Vietnam to join the Air Force in strikes in eastern Laos.

The U.S. Command declined to comment on the reports but 7th Fleet communiques showed that Navy planes had flown no missions in South Vietnam for the past five days.

The informants said the entire Navy effort was being concentrated on Laos, a nation which is itself at war against the combined forces of the Pathet Lao and the North Vietnamese.

Two 7th Fleet attack carriers now are stationed in the Gulf of Tonkin off Vietnam, the Ranger and the Hancock. Each carries about 150 planes.

Pats Win, Get More Ink in Collegian

BOSTON (AP) - Mike Taliaferro tossed three touchdown bombs in the first half, then engineered a 71-yard tie-breaking drive late in the third period Sunday as the Boston Patriots battled to a 35-21 American Football League victory over the Buffalo Bills.

Charlie Frazier caught two of the scoring passes and Ron Sellers the other while two big interceptions by line backer Ed Philpott and some dazzling running by rookie Carl Garrett also featured the triumph.

Garrett, who easily won his head-to-head duel with Buffalo rookie O.J. Simpson, helped set up one Boston touchdown with a 40-yard punt return, had a 62-yard kickoff return, and scored the final Patriots' touchdown with a 44-yard run in the final minute of the game.

Buffalo's passing combination of Jack Kemp and Haven Moses, which produced two touchdowns and set up another to keep the Bills in the game, had deadlocked the count at 21 all with 2-1/2 minutes left in the third period just before the patriots went on their winning march.

An 18-yard pass from Taliaferro to Sellers and a 27-yarder to Jim Nance got the ball to the two yard line as the third quarter ended, and Nance bulled over on the first play of the fourth period for the decisive score.

The game started explosively as Philpott picked off a Kemp pass at the Buffalo 47 and returned it to the 34 on the first play from scrimmage and Taliaferro immediately threw a scoring strike at Frazier.

Eagle Victory Ends UMass Streak
Redmen Close Season with 6-3 Mark

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Assistant Sports Editor

CHESTNUT HILL - Offense predominated Saturday afternoon as the UMass football team was edged, 35-30, by Boston College here at BC's Alumni Stadium, thus ending its five-game winning streak and closing out its season with a proud record of six victories and three defeats.

The Redmen, Yankee Conference title holders, entered the fray with a potent offense that had broken two Conference scoring marks. The Eagles also fielded a powerful attack, one that, when fit, could score on anybody.

Defense played a secondary role, and the statistics prove it. BC rolled up 394 yards total offense; UMass rang up 320 yards. While BC topped UMass in passing yardage, 201-122, the Redmen outran the Eagles, 242-207. In first downs BC earned 22; the visitors countered with 18.

As a consequence UMass' five-game string of victories was broken, a string which had started six weeks ago at Boston University only a few miles down the road from Chestnut Hill. The setting for this one was sunny and cold with about 18,000 colorful (in all aspects of the word) fans on hand, a large number of which were Redman supporters.

Boston College scored once in the first quarter and three times in the second to lead at halftime, 28-14, as UMass tallied twice in the second period. Both teams added a touchdown in the third quarter, and the Redmen entered the last period trailing 35-21.

On the fourth play of that quarter, the visitors punted with BC returning it to its own 37. The Eagles went into a ball-control offense to eat up the clock. Six running and one passing play brought them down to the UMass 16 but, on the next play, halfback Fred Willis fumbled with Redman tackle Bill DeFlavio covering the loose football on the 15.

UMass came fighting back. Ten plays later found it faced with a crucial fourth-and-eight situation on the home 23 yard stripe. Quarterback Tim Adams set up to pass and threw an arching toss to end Nick McGarry in the left corner of the end zone which was batted away. Pass interference, however, was called on the play and the pigskin was placed on the one.

Craig Lovell fired off tackle two plays later for the TD and the 27th Redman point. Dennis Gagnon kicked for the 28th and, with 6:02 left in the game, UMass was down by only seven.

For the ensuing kickoff, Gagnon placed the ball on the turf for a squib kick, which he had done all afternoon, wary of Ed Rideout's kick-return talents. The kick left his foot like a rocket, traveling through the air only an inch above ground. The ball deflected off the shins of a surprised Jim O'Shea and into the welcome arms of DeFlavio on the BC 47.

The Redmen had the ball back sooner than they thought and, after seven plays, had a second-and-eight on the Eagle 4. But on the next down, an Adams' toss intended for end John Hulecki bounced off his hands and into the grasp of BC's Kevin Clemente on the four yard line.

With under three minutes left in the game, UMass still persisted and forced the Eagles into a fourth down from the same four, John O'Hagen got set to punt but, rather than risk a long return, chose to down it in the end zone for a safety.

UMass earned two points via this Boston College strategy and got ready to receive O'Hagen's kickoff, from the 20. The punt carried to the BC 46, with 50 seconds to go, the Redman offense made its last appearance of '69. A sideline pass from Adams to Mcgarry slipped off the big receiver's fingertips into the alert hands of BC's Skip Coppola.

Eagle quarterback Red Harris ran out the remainder of the clock by falling with the ball on three straight downs.

The game maintained a fast pace throughout. Boston College received the opening kickoff and marched to paydirt in two and half minutes, a drive that covered 53 yards in seven plays with Willis scoring from one yard out.

Late in the first quarter, UMass' Steve Rogers robbed an enemy aerial on his own 36, and the Redmen embarked on its first scoring drive. Fullback Ed Sarno got the TD by busting up the middle from five yards away, fighting and scrapping every inch of the way. The Eagles came right back with an 11-play, 88-yard march, culminated when Harris kept the ball himself on a sweep of two yards.

After a couple of punts UMass got the ball and went 52 yards in seven downs to tie up the game at 14-14. Adams scored the touchdown when he looped through a big opening off right guard. Gagnon, who hit all of his conversions, made this one with 3:20 remaining in the half.

In that time Boston College scored twice. The first came on the heels of Dennis Keating's fumble of a BC punt on his own 29. It came on the following play with Harris hitting halfback Joe Catone for the TD. The last tally of the half was a floater of 28 yards from Harris to Willis followed by a two-point conversion.

UMass placed seven more points on the scoreboard only 25 seconds into the third period when halfback Jerry Grasso broke open on the first play from scrimmage and rambled 82 yards to the BC one, where Lovell took it over on the next down.

The Eagles scored their last points of the game on a 13-play drive of 67 yards which was capped off by Harris' third touchdown pass, a nine-yarder to Catone, who ran with it the remaining ten yards for paydirt.

The Redmen put everything they had into this game. All the cliches about team spirit, determination and a never-give-up attitude are applicable in their case. Beating the Eagles would have been their biggest accomplishment of the fall, but losing to BC on the last game takes just a little of the shine off of their other achievements: the Yankee Conference Beanpot and the records that go with it, the only blemish on BU's fine 9-1 season and, most importantly, a 6-3 mark in '69 after the dismal 2-8 record of last year.

Aggies-vs.-Invincible-BC Label Causes Redmen to be Tense

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

When UMass trotted out on the sloppy Alumni Stadium turf at Boston College for pre-game warmups, the tenseness was just that much more than usual. For as much as everyone denies it, as much as the coaching staff stresses that the main objective of the season is the Yankee Conference, the game that is pointed for is the Boston College game.

Maybe it is the fact that so many Redmen come from the Boston area and therefore hear constantly of the invincible Eagles. Maybe it is the superior attitude of Boston College that shows through from the players right down to fans that pelt sidelines with whiskey bottles and beer cans. Or maybe it is the fact that Boston College is the genuine big time opponent and gives out those countless football scholarships. Or still, maybe it is the fact that some B.C. intelligents still refer to U-Mass as "those Aggies."

The aggies played the jerks (as B.C. was termed many times on the sideline) to a standstill, UMass came back from the dead countless times. They had plenty of chances to die. They never did.

The visible tenseness of the Redmen became even worse when B.C. rumbled easily in for a score within the first three minutes of the game. And the spirit of UMass, such an important factor for U-Mass all season, was shot. For the first time in weeks, the sideline was quiet.

It was an aggressive Redman defense that recovered a fumble (by Dennis Collins) and then intercepted a pass (by Steve Rogers) that brought them back. And, after a Ed Sarno score, things were back even.

It went that way all day. B.C. would seemingly gain all momentum until the amazingly resilient Redman spirit would bounce back time and time and time again.

It wasn't the best UMass has played this year. But they kept making up for mistakes, by just not dying. They had some tough things to come back from. Like two passes intercepted at the goal-line, a fumble that came when the team had its probable third breath. And all this in the face of a B.C. team that has the best personnel UMass faces all year.

Of course everything went down the drain for the Redmen when they lost the ball finally for the last time on a last minute interception. This came after the tenth comeback, following a late drive with a recovered onside kick. And that spirit that had shone through the mud and slime of the B.C. field, and had come back so many times, was snuffed out.

The tears that were on the sideline were even more in evidence in the morgue that served as dressing room. An almost inaudible Vic Fusia tried to reason things out about another loss to Boston College, tried to reason out probably one of his greatest coaching disappointments.

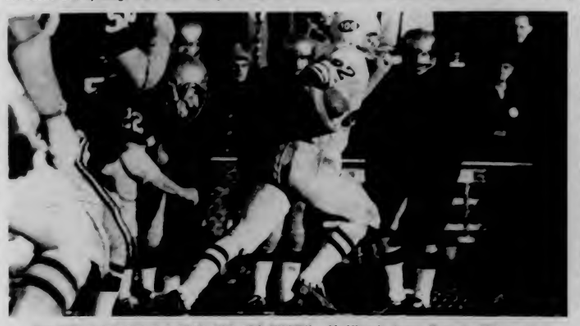
What happened? "We were too charitable. It wasn't our best game." Did they do anything you didn't expect? "They scored more points than we did. I didn't think they would do that." Did you ever think the team was out of it? "I never thought we were out of it. We kept coming back. I never lost confidence in this bunch of men."

And it was then time for Fusia to be alone with his team. The morgue cleared of the living.

The walk out from B.C. was a strange one. Bottles were strewn all over the place. A well meaning class B.C. fan had regurgitated on the windshield of a parked car. And the cold, which wasn't felt during the comebacks, was biting.

The end of the season could be forgotten. But one comment kept coming back. It was from a couple of players standing in disbelief as they saw the sad end. One turned and said, "Well, dammit, we'll be damn good next year. We'll get these jerks."

It was a lousy way to finish off a season.



GIVING THE EAGLE A RUN FOR ITS MONEY - Halfback Jerry Grasso (22) exemplifies the spirit of UMass against BC by opening up the second half with this 82-yard run to set up a Redman score when they were down 28-15. (MDC photo by Ken Stevens)

Astronauts Splashdown Flawless

ABOARD USS HORNET (AP) - Apollo 12's moon voyagers came home safely Monday, making a bull's eye splashdown in tropic waters. It ended their million-mile trip, man's second lunar landing mission and first detailed scientific exploration of the moon.

Apollo 12's return to earth went flawlessly from the moment it started its final plunge downward.

The crew jettisoned the cylindrical service module just before the spacecraft collided with the earth's upper atmosphere. Gordon then turned the spacecraft's blunt end forward, and the metal cone of the command ship smashed into the steadily thickening atmosphere.

Friction from the air caused the blunt end to glow cherry red as it plummeted earthward. The three astronauts, protected by a heat shield, remained safe inside the cabin that carried them to the moon and back.

At 23,000 feet, small parachutes popped out of the pointed end of the spacecraft, slowing the craft to 125 miles an hour.

Moments later, the three larger orange and white parachutes blossomed above the craft, slowing it to 22 miles an hour for the final five minutes of descent.

The splashdown was only 3.1 miles from the recovery ship, stationed some 400 miles southeast of Samoa.

The spacemen were lifted from a raft attached to their floating spacecraft and flown by helicopter to the HORNET flight deck. Then, while a band played "Anchors Aweigh," the all-Navy space crew went directly into a silver van on the hangar deck of the carrier, starting an isolation that will end Dec. 10 at the Lunar Receiving Laboratory in Houston.

Conrad, Gordon and Bean saluted smartly as they stepped out of the helicopters. Wearing blue flight overalls, Navy blue baseball caps and black face masks, part of the quarantine, they walked without a word into the trailer-like quarters called the Mobile Quarantine Facility.

Curtains on windows in the van were drawn and the spacemen could not be seen.

Behind them, a technician sprayed a disinfectant on the deck where they walked.

The quarantine is designed to prevent spread of any possible germ or disease the astronauts bring back with them from the lonely surface of the moon. No such germs were found after the first moon-landing voyage and officials say the chance is remote this time.

Inside the silver van, a doctor and a technician start an exhaustive physical examination, the first of many planned during the long quarantine period. The physician, Dr. Clarence Jernigan, will perform extensive blood tests, searching for any possible alien organism.

Army Orders Court-martial In Vietnam Mass Killings

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Army yesterday ordered a young lieutenant court-martialed on charges of premeditated murder of 109 South Vietnamese, including a two-year old child, in the alleged U.S. massacre at My Lai village.

The case of 1st Lt. William L. Calley Jr., will be tried as a capital offense, meaning that if convicted the 26-year-old Waynesville, N.C., man faces a penalty of death or life imprisonment.

Calley is the first American soldier formally accused in the alleged mass killings, which have stirred up an international furor.

One other Army man - S. Sgt. David Mitchell - has been charged with assault with intent to murder My Lai villagers, and the Army is investigating 24 other soldiers and ex-soldiers in connection with the case.

The Calley case may be unprecedented so far as the magnitude of the alleged crimes is concerned. Army officers said they could not recall another case in previous wars where an Army man was accused of killing so many civilians.

The announcement brought the first official release of six charges and specifications setting forth the alleged atrocities. Until Monday the Army had maintained virtual silence on the details.

In one major accusation, Calley is accused of killing "an unknown number of Oriental human beings, not less than 70, males and females of various ages . . . by means of shooting them with a rifle."

Army legal experts have said that Calley could be charged with premeditated murder if he issued an order leading to the killing and did not do the actual firing himself.

However, Defense Department spokesman Richard Capen said the specifications mean "that he did these things," that is, that Calley allegedly pulled the trigger in all 109 instances.

1000 Boycott Classes In SMU Student Protest

NORTH DARTHMOUTH, Mass. (AP) - About 1,000 students at Southeastern Massachusetts University boycotted classes Monday in protest of actions taken by Dr. Joseph L. Driscoll, university president.

The boycott, called Friday by the student senate, is the second at the school in three weeks demanding the immediate firing of Driscoll. The school enrollment is about 3,000.

The demonstration involves Driscoll's actions concerning three professors who participated in student war protests during the last year.

He refused to recommend one of the professors for tenure, offered another a one-year nonrenewable contract and publically censured a third.

There was no picketing or disorder, but eight students paraded as a "guerilla" unit in front of main entrance to the university.

The Daily Collegian will not publish tomorrow. Regular publishing will resume Monday, December 1.

UMass Planning. How Policy Is Determined

By CHESTER ADAMCZYK
Staff Reporter

Increasing by 1,500 students a year, the University of Massachusetts in Amherst will enroll 30,000 students in 1980.

That requires new dormitories, more buildings and a lot more money.

And, it takes planning. In the case of UMass, it's planning by many people.

H. Littlefield, director of planning, deals with the major problems of capital construction and the little items which grow into big needs. Little items like which are the most traveled footpaths. And how many lecture halls the English Department will need when UMass is admitting 7,000 freshmen.

To expand for 12,000 added students demands money. According to Littlefield, $200-million will be needed in the next 11 years in capital appropriations from the legislature. Students will help pay for new dormitories, whose design students will help select.

This is all part of a process called policy determination and, as one can imagine, planning for an additional 12,000 students and using figures like $200-million requires much policy making.

POLICY

Theoretically, the trustees determine policy, which in turn is implemented by the administration. Actually, students, faculty, administration, the Massachusetts legislature and even the public contribute to campus policy.

The student body has a major effect on University norms and policy. Evidence can be seen in the recent passing of dorm autonomy and the present ROTC and Project Themis discussions which were initiated by students. In addition, the student body as represented by the Student Senate recommends changes. Last April, the Senate's Academic Affairs Committee made several significant proposals for course improvements.

The faculty, acting through its own Senate, makes changes and improvements. The Faculty Senate, also, has a major effect on the character of the teaching body. Students and Faculty then become prime contributors to policy formulation. This is apparent in the fact that issues such as dorm autonomy and a "wet campus" have originated not from the trustees but from the University community.

Furthermore, both the trustees and the University community come under the scrutiny of the Massachusetts legislature. This is where political consideration comes in. It is worth noting that the power of the legislature lies in the budget. Thus, policy determination is not simply a function of the trustees but rather a result of an aggregate of groups, each group having a different perspective....

A question facing students is the purpose of University policy. UMass has been called everything from a "sterile, unrewarding place" to a "center of activity and learning."

Jack Littlefield, representing the trustees and administration, said UMass is "to expand, to meet the growing demand of public students." Seymour Shapiro, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, echoed this statement this month when he said the University provides courses if there is a demand for these courses.

Similarly, in a report presented to the Faculty Senate (Daily Collegian 4-1-69), the Student Senate's Academic Affairs Committee asked for a "client centered"

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

NEW YORK (AP) - The stock market, with investors' anxiety over tight money and the Vietnam war increasing, sagged yesterday to its steepest loss in 2-1/2 months.

The action was an expanded extension of last week's severe slump.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - The Providence Teachers' Union struck yesterday in a contract dispute, shutting down the city's 26,000 pupil public school system.

WELLESLEY, Mass. (AP) - The Wellesley College Government Association has voted to give students at the all-girl school an option to live under freer social restrictions, the school announced yesterday.

Students may now live in dormitories where there are no restrictions on hours when male guests may be entertained.

Under the proposal, students also have the option to live in dorms where current regulations regarding male guests would remain in effect.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court dismissed Monday a challenge to state residence laws that prevent millions of Americans from voting for president. But it did so on technical grounds without ruling directly on the legality of such statutes.

SAIGON (AP) - U.S. forces operating from the Saigon area to the Cambodian border have ground down the enemy to a point where six million people in 12,500 square miles are generally able to grow their crops and carry on daily business without fear of being terrorized, a U.S. general said yesterday.

Lt. Gen. Julian J. Ewell, commander of the 2nd Field Force, told a news conference in nearby Long Binh that his command has begun what he called a controlled de-escalation of the war by sheer force and that South Vietnamese troops eventually should be able to fight what has become a semiguerrilla war.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Tires certified by four major American manufacturers as meeting government safety standards failed 25 per cent of tests conducted by independent laboratories, the Department of Transportation said Monday.

The 120 tests sponsored by the government as a check on company-certified safety compliance showed 30 failures involving endurance, high speed performance and strength.

BOSTON (AP) - The Teamsters Union Joint Council No. 10 disclosed yesterday delegates to a council meeting recently adopted a resolution "in support of the American Vietnam policy" and against what it termed "the Communist-engineered moratorium mobilizations and marches."

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate defeated an amendment to double the personal income tax exemption as it opened debate Monday on the tax reform bill. The Senate voted 46 to 13 against an amendment that would have increased to 1,200 the current $600-a-person exemption.

US-Soviet Nuclear Ban Ratification in Process

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States and the Soviet Union yesterday virtually completed their ratification of the treaty to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons.

The document was be formally deposited in Washington, London or Moscow, or in all three capitals. This will happen in the next 10 to 14 days.

President Nixon signed the pact in Washington and Nikolai V. Podgorny, chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, signed in Moscow. The U.S. Senate ratified the treaty of March 13 but Nixon withheld his signature so the two major nuclear powers could sign it simultaneously.

In Moscow the Presidium, or Soviet Parliament, ratified the pact and Podgorny signed it on the same day.

The treaty commits the United States, Britain and the Soviet Union to refrain from giving other countries nuclear weapons, control over such weapons, or assistance in their development.

The non-nuclear nations acceding to the pact commit themselves not to acquire or develop a nuclear arsenal. The nuclear prohibition treaty NPT, President Nixon said in signing it, is designed "to make our world a safer home for all mankind." He expressed the hope ratification of the treaty by the necessary number of states "will soon occur so that it may enter into force at an early time."

Thus far 91 nations have signed the pact but only 22, including Britain, have deposited what the diplomatic language calls the "instrument of ratification." The treaty will come into force when 40 non-nuclear nations and the three nuclear powers complete the process.

The step taken in Washington and in Moscow yesterday might encourage other nations to follow suit, U.S. officials believe, bringing the number to the required 43 soon.

There is, on the other hand, no expectation that France and Red China, the two other countries that possess nuclear weapons, will sign the agreement.

Boston "8" Urge Citizens To Oppose Draft System

BOSTON (AP) - An Anti-war group calling itself the "Boston Eight," and claiming responsibility of the destruction of Selective Service files at six Boston draft offices two weeks ago, urged yesterday that the people of Boston now accept the responsibility of stopping the Selective Service system in the state.

In a statement read at a press conference, the group said the Boston community "must now resist the attempts of those boards where the files were destroyed to re-establish themselves, and also take responsibility for closing the other Selective Service centers in the city."

Darcell DeWease, 22, of Philadelphia, said that specifically there is a "need to educate people in the neighborhoods in which we acted, primarily lower class, and to educate people to proper response to our actions."

The group, which includes two Catholic priests, a nun and a seminarian, says it destroyed draft files of six Boston area offices at four locals Nov. 7.

Col. Paul Feeney, state Selective Service director, said that draft call-ups would not be affected by the action.

The group tried to surrender to federal agents during the moratorium march in Washington, but were told by the FBI that more information was needed before they could be arrested.

The U.S. Attorney's office in Boston said Monday that the incident is under investigation and that the office is "waiting for corroboration of everything these people have said. When further evidence is forthcoming, we will take such action as we deem proper."

Disputing a change by a U.S. Attorney in the eight are "exhibitionists," Sister Mary Cain, 30, of Baltimore said: "We have placed a period of our lives in jeopardy. We have claimed a responsible action. It seems to me that exhibitionism is the opposite of responsibility."

The destruction of the files was compared to the Boston Tea Party in Boston Harbor by William Au, 20, of Phillipsburg, N.J. "What we did was in the honored tradition in which our country was founded," he said.

Liberal Pot Laws Wanted

NEW YORK (AP) - A California narcotics official said yesterday that society appears to have lost its fight against the spread of marijuana use and that the drug should now be placed under the type of controls that exist for alcohol.

Weldon H. Smith, coordinator of narcotics programs for the California Department of Correction, said there is growing evidence that for persons from 14 to 30, marijuana use "pervades almost ever sector of our society."

"The evidence," he said, "also indicates that most of these individuals are functioning persons in high schools where they are often school leaders, on the football team and academic achievers."

Smith spoke at a statewide conference on prevention of narcotics addiction. The session was sponsored by the New York State Narcotic Addiction Control Commission. More than 2,000 persons attended, about 1,000 more than expected.

"In summary," Smith said, "we appear to have lost the battle in preventing the spread of marijuana use. The more rational approach now would be to establish the controlling and regulatory procedures, similar to the laws related to alcohol.

Smith said he was not urging complete legalization of marijuana "as this is construed as open license for use by anyone in any situation with no restrictions or penalties."

UMass Planning

General Guidelines: Adaptability, Flexibility

university. That is, a university that is responsive to the needs of its students.

At this point, a brief profile of the UMass student would be helpful. In statistics compiled by the Office of Research, American Council of Education, the UMass student body, in comparison to national norms, was found to be: over-represented in B students, under-represented in intellectual oriented students but over-represented in writers and athletes. In planned careers, the UMass student body is over-represented in agriculture, English, humanities, social sciences and math but under-represented in business, engineering and fine arts.

"In general," the Academic Affairs Committee concluded, "we are a strongly pre-professional and vocational campus...we are not never have been, and never can be, a small private liberal arts college."

FUTURE PLANS

With these considerations in mind, it becomes easier to understand University policy. By 1980, UMass will need an additional $200-million in capital appropriation from the legislature. Littlefield explained that to meet the 30,000-student goal "the taxpayer must recognize the need."

littlefield illustrated it this way: UMass enrolls one third of the state's college students and by 1980, with population increases and an additional 12,000 students, UMass will still enroll one third of the state's college students.

David Bartley, speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, believes that the University's demands can be met. Speaking in Kennedy Dorm on Nov. 11, Bartley added, "the average Massachusetts taxpayer has trouble seeing the students' point of view and probably never will."

Commenting on dorm autonomy and student freedom, Representative Bartley said the legislature will probably agree that students should "control their destinies." However, he again cautioned the average person has trouble in understanding student views.

HOUSING

With the exception of the Northeast Residence Halls now in construction, the UMass Building Authority has no future dormitories planned.

Littlefield, director of planning, said, "Although the administration has made no construction decisions, cost information is available." He outlined four possible alternatives: (1) Construct dorms in the "image of the 1970's", that is, dorms which consist of 5 to 8 student suites. The new Northeast dorms are of this type, (2) Build low-rise "Project 10" type dorms. (3) Construct conventional dorms, such as those at Archard Hill. Or (4) Build student apartments, each for 4 to 6 students.

Financing of Dormitories is self-liquidating. This means that student rent pays for the cost of the dorm.

BUILDING PROGRAM

The overall campus layout is similar to concentric circles. The center of the circle contains the campus pond surrounded by academic buildings used by most students. On the borders of this core are the Infirmary, the Administration Building, Boyden Gymnasium and the Engineering Center. The next circle contains academic buildings used by fewer students, and the outer circle contains the dormitories.

The Planning Office, said Littlefield, follows six guidelines for construction established by the trustees. They are: (1) Establish long-range capital construction plans. (2) Achieve reasonable use of space consistent with quality. (3) Maintain reasonable building control without impairing quality. (4) Avoid detail and inflexible plans. (5) Effect prudent design or "long range flexibility of buildings" and (6) Make careful use of land.

Briefly, this means concentrating buildings to achieve "open space", constructing buildings easily adaptable for other purposes and maintaining quality standards. Adaptability and flexibility are the general guidelines, Littlefield stressed.

In fact, even though 30,000 students and $200-million are involved, flexibility in policy-making is what will make it all successful in 1980.

And, it's up to students, faculty, administration and all involved to determine the best possible policy for UMass.

Summer Studies Programs Offered

France

The Department of Romance Languages is sponsoring French studies at both undergraduate and graduate levels for six weeks (July 9 - August 20) at Pau, France.

A year of college French or the equivalent is prerequisite. Students will be placed in courses according to their level of ability. The program offers courses in language, stylistics, literature, and civilization. Up to six credits may be earned in the program.

Enrollment in the program costs $700 which includes air fare, tuition and textbooks, room and board at Pau, and the excursions arranged by the Centre Universitaire.

A limited number of scholarships is available. The deadline for application to the French Studies at Pau Program is February 15, 1970. Further particulars and application forms are available from: Department of Romance Languages, 314 Herter.

Argentina

University students interested in Latin America and especially Argentina will have an unusual opportunity to acquaint themselves with this country next summer.

An exchange program is being planned in coordination with the Argentinian Council of Student Exchange (C.A.D.I.E.) under which 10 UMass students can spend about 6 weeks in Buenos Aires during July and August 1970. The participants will stay with Argentinian families.

While in Buenos Aires, students will participate in seminars on Argentinian history, art, political development, and economics. There will be tours and visits to museums, factories, schools and ranches.

A number of social activities will be planned, such as receptions by the Mayor of the city and the American Ambassador, as well as open houses and parties for the American students and their host families.

The cost to students will only be that of round-trip transportation to Buenos Aires (About $411 from Miami), as their host families in Argentina will take care of all their living expenses except for personal items. Knowledge of the Spanish language is not required for this exchange, but it would, of course, be advantageous.

Students interested in this exchange should contact Mrs. Barbara Burn in the Office of International Programs, 235C Whitmore. A personal interview with her is a requirement for acceptance into the program.

Student Payday

Student payday will be on Wednesday, November 26 this week. The Cashier's Office in Whitmore will not be open on Friday, November 28.

CONCERNED ABOUT THE WAR?

- So are the almost 500,000 men who are presently involved in the Vietnam conflict!
- So were the more than 44,000 Americans who have been killed to date in this needless war!

We Americans are deeply concerned, as has been recently demonstrated, about the continuation of this costly and unnecessary war. If you, too, want to end the war in Vietnam, take still another step to tell our government and our friends around the world that our objective is to end the war NOW, and that our efforts must and will continue until our goal of Peace is reached!

Let us make this Christmas a "Christmas For Peace". Manifest your desire for a reassessment of the Administration's Vietnam policy by sending "Peace Cards for Christmas" to your friends, your Congressman, Senator Mayor, to the President of the United States — to everyone. Your participation will help strengthen the cause for an immediate peace settlement in Vietnam. Cast your vote on this most important of referendums, and let the message of peace be spread throughout the world.

ROTC: Minus Credit

Finally UMass has joined other leading institutions of higher education (Yale, Princeton, Dartmouth, Harvard, and Stanford) in taking the beginning steps towards revoking academic credit from the ROTC program.

Last Thursday the faculty senate passed a motion, by a 37-36 vote, recommending that most ROTC courses be stripped of academic credit. The recommendation proposes that the current ROTC program be divided into three areas: 1) courses with substantial 'academic content' would be taught by the regular university faculty and carry academic credit; 2) courses of 'indoctrination and/or drill, and training in military skills' would be taught by military personnel and carry no academic credit; and 3) courses with 'diffuse academic content' spanning several disciplines would be taught by regular university departments.

In addition to the above curriculum changes, the faculty senate also recommended that courses in the indoctrination and drill category be reduced to an "absolute minimum" on the campus.

As we have stated before, ROTC in its current form, is antithetical to the ultimate purposes of higher education. An integral part of a liberal education is the development in the ability of critical thinking. The teaching methods employed in the current ROTC program tend to emphasize rote learning and deference to authority. Critical thinking has never been a highly prized military virtue.

The faculty senate's recommendation has now been passed on to the Administration. We urge President Lederle and Provost Tippo to approve the proposals as soon as possible and to use their influence to insure that the Board of Trustees passes the proposals before the end of the current academic year.

Ware March: A Resident's "View"?

To the editor:

As a resident of the nearby mill town, small and isolated, which was rudely awakened last week to social and political currents which have been passing us by for quote some time may I offer my humble and uneducated viewpoint.

Yes, I stand guilty of serving my country, did not know a college education, but worked in local factories to make a living. Stop me right here if I do not live up to your standards or if you people feel that I should not mention my humble education in your presence. Yes, I stand guilty of making mortgage payments and car payments. I also plead guilty in the first degree on the counts of church, flag and loyalty to country. I offer as my defense the plea of ignorance for in all honesty I was not aware that in the eye of the average college student and in the eye of many of their professors I am maladjusted.

Yes, I am a resident of the town that can't be licked and to compare Ware with some fictional town in the movie Easy Rider is not to be taken lightly.

College students love to throw newly learned words around just for effect. An example is the great lengths they will go to in order to prove that the older generation is constantly guilty of stereotyping all college students as "long haired hippies" or "those peaceniks". Let us look at the track records and we will find that stereotype is a word that taken from the average college student would render him speechless. We find that the much maligned student has stereotyped each and every person right down the line.

Life is not all fun and games. Every object is not black or white. War and peace are not started nor ended by good intentions. This country has only one president in office for a period of four years like him or not. Death and taxes are here to stay. Most people will agree that most of the above statements are reasonably hard to disprove. Would you believe that our great thinkers in our universities can by logical deduction prove all of the above to be totally wrong. Those who are enrolled in college for more than one year would even attempt to completely revamp the entire bible over the weekend if at any time they decided it was outdated.

If college students and college students alone are the only chosen people why don't they go to Vietnam and charm the North Vietnamese another maligned group of do gooders. Or better still, why not close down our colleges completely for the short period of time, say a week or two, that students would require to set the world in order. Why not devote the Easter weekend to not squandering your parents money and instead all flocking to the poverty areas of our commonwealth to lend assistance to our less fortunate. Namely the TAXPAYERS.

Environment: And One Weeps. .

To the editor:

In response to Professor Levinger's letter of 19 November:

Dr. Geil-Mann is quoted as saying that environmental destruction is the result of three factors: (1) population, (2) the propensity of each individual to destroy the environment, and his capacity to do destruction by means of technology. Inherent is: (1) the idea that an individual NATURALLY inclines to destruction and (2) that technology is his means, ERGO TECHNOLOGY IS BAD, overlooking entirely the benefits of technology. This may seem a moot point, but it is the heart of the Geil-Mann quote. Geil-Mann goes on to suggest that in the future we are to do less than we are technologically capable; to quote:

"It used to be true that most things that were technologically possible were done . . . Certainly in the future, THIS CANNOT AND MUST NOT BE SO. As our ability to do all kinds of things, and the scale of them increase - for the scale is planetary for so many things today - we must try to realize a smaller and smaller fraction of all the things we can do . . ."

I must confess that I do not understand why one should do or want to do less than he is capable. Geil-Mass goes on to suggest certain technological advances be renunciated, ex. SST. Absent from Levinger's letter was: (1) a principal or rule by which technological advances are to be judged good or bad, (2) who is to do the judging, and (3) who is to enforce the judgments. There is only one entity large and powerful enough to do this: the Government. Thus, one must assume that the government should instruct private companies (the main producers of technological innovations) as to what they consider good or bad by way of operation and products, and to enforce their decisions with law. Further, since technology is only applications of knowledge, certain knowledge is good or bad, and the search for certain types of knowledge is, thus, good or bad.

One then concludes, by following the simple lines of extrapolation set above, that the United States Government is to turn statist, i.e., a situation in which the concentration of economic controls and planning is in the hands of a highly centralized government. The three forms of statism are: fascism, socialism, and communism.

To paraphrase W.F. Buckley, Jr.: One weeps for the end of reason, the end of knowledge, the end of capitalism, . . ., the end of mankind.

Dissent: A Dog and Master

To the editor:

I am a 21 year old Air Force enlistee (volunteer). I formerly attended college in Massachusetts, and call it my home. My fiance attends your University, and I have visited your campus often.

I am in the service for one reason . . . volunteer, or get drafted, I volunteered. Now I am sitting on top of a mountain in Germany, one of OUR NATO Allies for the remaining three years of my tour.

Last weekend while visiting the home of a German Nationale, I found myself in a most embarrasing situation . . . the evening news was being broadcast on television. It wasn't bad either until . . . suddenly the screen was filled with young people carrying placards, protesting the war, asking OUR vice president to return to his homeland, telling OUR president to "give in", "pull the troops out or get out".

You, perhaps enjoyed the Moratorium, I'll concede, it did have its good points . . . but; how does an American explain to someone of another nation that what he sees is not a civil war brewing (or is it?), but a display of the rights and privileges of Democracy?

If you think other countries don't watch US very closely, think again buddy before you go out and protest, the least you can do is KNOW what you're protesting and why. Don't just go out and protest because the "guys" are, or because its the "in" thing to do, any dog will follow his master. Be your own man.

Think about the other 1,500,000 G.I.'s spread throughout the world, how will they be able to explain to their host countries how wonderful it is to live in the United States (you won't appreciate it until you've been deprived of it) when they see YOU, tearing up signs, taking over colleges, lying in public places, charging Selective Service offices, burning draft cards, mocking of national leaders, belittling your own country . . .

DOROTHY ORNEST

Symphony Band Performance To Feature Soprano Soloist

Dorothy Ornest will be soprano soloist in a performance of Bernard Rogers' THREE JAPANESE DANCES by the University Symphony Band at 3:00 P.M. Sunday, December 7, in Bowker Auditorium. Miss Ornest is a member of the music faculty at the University, and is well known for her numerous appearances in recitals and as guest soloist. She is a graduate of the Eastman School of Music and the University of Michigan.

THREE JAPANESE DANCES were set by Bernard Rogers for orchestra in 1933, and later recast for the Eastman Wind Ensemble. The three movements are titled "Dance with Pennons," "Mourning Dance," and "Dance with Sword." They are not based upon specific pictorial models, but instead represent the composer's strong affinity for the oriental expression of the arts of China and Japan. The work will be conducted by John Jenkins, Director of Bands at the University.

The University Wind Ensemble will perform the Symphony No. 4 by Alan Hovhaness, commissioned by the American Wind Symphony in 1958. Other works included on the program will be Vittorio Giannini's PRAELUDIUM AND ALLEGRO, conducted by Larry Weed, Assistant Conductor; the Finale from Symphony No. 1 in G Minor by Kalinnikov, and the FRENCH NATIONAL DEFILE MARCH.

Renaissance Scholar To Speak on Montaigne

Dr. Abraham C. Keller of the University of Washington (Seattle) will speak on "The Good and the Beautiful in Montaigne's Essays" Monday, Dec. 1 at 8 p.m. in 231 Herter Hall.

Professor Keller graduated summa cum laude, Phi Beta Kappa, with a double major in French and German, from the Ohio State University. His doctorate is from the University of California at Berkeley. He has taught at Stockton Junior College, Harvard, the University of California at Berkeley, and Wayne State. He is the editor for Romance literatures of Modern Language Quarterly. He has been director of International Student Seminars in Arizona and in France for the American Friends Service Committee, and in charge of its West Africa Seminar Program in Togo.

His scholarly writings include "The Telling of Tales in Rabelais: Aspects of his Narrative Art" and numerous articles on Rabelais.

A story teller himself, Dr. Keller had a television program for some years, called "Keller the Teller". While in Mexico he collected children's folk-songs. An amateur guitarist, he entertains friends with musical accompaniments to these traditional songs.

Professor Keller's research on Montaigne relates to his interest in the idea of progress and the problems of peace. He has published an Anti-War Writing in France and has conducted lecture-discussion series on Problems of Peace and the Uses of Unorthodoxy. He has also been active in the peace movement in the U.S.

"The Rhythm of Life"

Indian Dancer To Perform at Smith

NORTHAMPTON - A well-known Indian dancer whose interpretive works focus on "man's struggle for beauty, peace, and a better world" will perform December 4 at Smith College.

Manjusri Chaki-Sircar will present "The Rhythm of Life" at 8:30 p.m. in Theatre 14 of the Center for the Performing Arts (C.P.A.). Special lighting effects and slide projections will be part of the concert, as well as music by Rabindranath Tagore, the great Indian poet, and Ravi Shankar, popular Indian musician and composer who appeared at Smith last year.

A traditional Indian dance will open the program. The history and significance of the hand movements will be explained by narrator Nicholas Carpiuk as Mrs. Chaki-Sircar and two of her students perform.

After the traditional selections, contemporary forms of interpretive dancing will be explored, with Tagore's music providing the substance. Most of the music was recorded in Calcutta specifically for Mrs. Chaki-Sircar.

The program will close with a devotional dance accompanied by music by Shankar and Tagore. Shankar gave special permission for his music to be used in this dance.

Considered India's best-known performer of Tagore's dance drama, ting the Tagore Centenary. She has performed in Europe, West Africa, and Canada.

In 1968 Manjusri was a visiting scholar at Pratt Institute, New York City. She is currently visiting lecturer of Indian dance at the State University of New York at New Paltz.

WOMEN

Profile of Unwed Mothers-Preconceptions Attacked

New York - The unwed mother is what?

Emotionally disturbed, say most experts. Self - indulgent and shameless, insist many ordinary men and women.

A recent study suggests that both may be wrong and that most unwed mothers are just like married mothers except for that missing ring. And this probably holds true for the unwed father as well.

When Canadian researchers in London, Ontario compared 149 single white mothers with 99 married white mothers in the same community, they found striking similarities in viewpoint and upbringing. When the Family Service Association of America, a counseling agency, investigated unwed fathers, what emerged was a preconception-shattering profile.

Many of the men were weekly churchgoers, most helped pay for their girl's maternity expenses and most visited their babies in the hospital. Well over half proposed marriage.

In fact, Dr. James F. Masterson, director of the Adolescent Program of the famed Payne - Whitney Psychiatric Clinic here, drew the following conclusion from the survey:

"What happened to (these men) was the result not of a wild, promiscuous fling but rather the product of a close emotional relationship. Their standards are much higher than those of their fathers 20 years ago, who subscribed to double standards, insisted that the girls were at fault, and walked out on them."

To compare the young mothers, the Canadian physicians checked into parents' educations, the father's occupation, home ownership and whether the mother worked. Result: the spectrum was almost identical for the married and single girls. For example, about 10 per cent of the fathers in both groups had college educations and 20 per cent were unskilled or unemployed.

Both groups started dating at about the same age, with comparable parental supervision.

Sometimes, unexpectedly, the single women were more ascetic than their married peers. Fewer unmarried mothers over 21 came from broken homes and fewer smoked and drank. More of the unmarried girls attended church regularly. However, the married group assigned a greater importance in their lives to religion.

Precisely why did these 149 ordinary middle-class girls get pregnant out of wedlock? Firstly, because very few of them ever used contraception. Then, in the opinion of the researchers, because "they became caught up in an emotional upheaval and made the mistake of 'not applying the brakes.' " Fully 90 per cent said their pregnancies were accidental.

Referring to a well-known 1967 survey of American gynecologists, the researchers point ou t that while 87 per cent of the doctors said they most frequently pre - scribed birth control pills for contraception, only 17 per cent prescribed them frequently for single women. "It must be concluded," say the Canadian physicians, "that there is still anxiety about prescribing oral contraception for the unmarried woman, and this is probably compounded for the adolescent."

XEROX IS COMING TO CAMPUS

THURS. & FRI. DEC. 11 & 12

See your Placement Director today to arrange an appointment with the Xerox representative.

Discover what Xerox is doing in color xerography, 3-D imaging, laser applications, and systems that mate xerography and computers. Learn, too, of the continuous refinements being developed for and incorporated in our line of office copiers and duplicators.

During the question and answer session, you'll also get a better idea for some of the reasons behind our growth. From approximately 3,000 people in 1960 to over 30,000 currently.

Ask him, too, about the Xerox philosophy. How we've always operated on the premise that you can make meaningful contributions to society that contribute quite gainfully to yourself. And us.

This investment of your time could be the start of a rewarding future at our suburban Rochester, New York facilities in fundamental and applied research, developmental and manufacturing engineering, or programming.

"Super-Housewife" Rebuked

Boston - Superhousewifery may not be advisable but it is not a clear and present danger compared to other careless customs, in the opinion of the New England Journal of Medicine, a studious publicaton that seldom strays from examining and operating rooms.

The Journal rebukes overtidy housewives who insist on polishing dishes fresh from the dishwasher - a practice that spreads bacteria - and advises non-owners of dishwashers to allow their dishes to dry in the rack.

But, asks the Journal, what about these customs "that disregard the simplest elements of sanitation?"

The family use of a single tube of toothpaste;

Hanging toothbrushes on a common rack and sharing a common bathroom glass;

Exchanging lipsticks and combs;

Tasting food on the stove with a stirring spoon that goes back into the pot;

Feeding the baby from the parental plate with the parental fork;

Failing to wash your hands after using the toilet.

Although all these are less innocuous than germy dish towels, the Journal nevertheless remains cheerful: "Mankind still has a chance of survival by the development of natural immunities."

Shall it be cheese fondue for dinner, with everyone dipping repeatedly into a common pot?

Equestrian Drill Team At UMass...

The performance takes ten minutes but the preparation is a matter of many hours over many days.

This is the story of the University of Massachusetts Equestrian Drill Team, ten University coeds mounted on ten of the University's prize Morgan horses.

They ride in pairs, do circles, figure eights, intermeshing, "threading the needle," criss-crossing, and pairing off like the aleman figure in a square dance.

"The main problem is the timing and the spacing between each horse," said Linda Jaskiel, drill team coach. "The horses are used to handling so it's mainly a matter of teaching the students to control them," she explained.

This means much practice -- twice a week at first and then daily sessions as the season advances. Since drill team is an extra-curricular activity, practice must be done outside of the class day, which means some sessions at 6:30 a.m. and others after 5 p.m.

The drill team is an outgrowth of the riding classes taught by Miss Jaskiel. They are given by the department of veterinary and animal sciences for UMass undergraduates, who get physical education credit for them. Members of these classes compete with others in the University for places on the team in trials given by the coach.

This year's drill team performed at the Eastern States Exposition, Hinsdale Raceway in New Hampshire, the Conway, Mass., Festival of the Hills, the Morgan Versatility Show in Leverett and for the Homecoming Weekend tailgate picnic at the University.

Team members are Margie Sterni of North Adams, Lisa Anderson of West Bridgewater, Pam Roecher of Lexington, Mary Beck of Topsfield, Mary Ellen Gould of Belmont, Mary Ethel Carroll of Arlington, Phyllis Coyne of Watertown, Karen Flaherty of Lexington, Betsy Oliver of Needham and Luanne Burnside of Walpole.

UMass Dominates YC All-Stars

Redmen Place Thirteen, On First Team, Five on Second

UMass, which won the Yankee Conference Football Title for the fifth time in the past seven years this fall, dominated the conference all-team selections, it was announced today after a vote of the coaches of the six New England state universities.

Coach Vic Fusia's squad, which set new standards for league games in points scored for season (194) and total offense per game (440 yards), took five positions on the offensive unit and eight on the defensive platoon.

Connecticut's junior halfack Vin Clements and junior guard Bill Spencer were the only repeats from the 1968 team with the latter being the coaches only unanimous choice for 1st team all league laurels.

Penn State Wins Lambert Trophy

NEW YORK (AP) - Unbeaten Penn State, ranked third nationally with a 9-0 record, was a unanimous winner Monday of the Lambert Trophy, awarded for outstanding performance among major Eastern college football teams.

The Nittany Lions thus became the only team other than Army's 1944-45-46 powerhouse to capture the trophy three consecutive years. It also marks Penn State's sixth Lambert Trophy in nine years.

Penn State owns the longest winning and non-losing streaks in the country at 20 and 28 games, respectively.

The Lions received the maximum 80 points from the eight-man selection committee. Boston University, 9-1, and Dartmouth, 8-1, tied for second with 60 points followed by Princeton, 6-3, 55 points, Yale, 7-2, 52; Syracuse, 5-4, 30 points; Rutgers, 6-3, and Pitt, 4-6,both 28 points; Buffalo, 6-3, 23, and Villanova, 6-3, 12.

Gymnasts Begin Quest for EIGL Title

By JOE PARNAR
Staff Reporter

The University of Massachusetts varsity gymnastics team will open its 1969-70 season with a dual meet against Syracuse University on Dec. 5th at Syracuse. According to Coach Erik Kjeldsen, this years squad has "the best ability and depth ever." Led by Co-Captains Mike Kasavana and Steve Cary, the team is made up of four seniors, eleven juniors, and six sophomores from last years freshman team.

Last season the Redmen compiled a 4-5 record and finished third in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League behind strong Penn State and Temple University. Once again, Penn State and Temple appear to be the League powers. Penn State, in addition to winning the Eastern League Championships, also placed second in the Nationals last year. The UMass squad, with a nucleus of experienced gymnasts, has the potential to be in contention with both of these teams for the League title.

Returning from last years squad, UMass has two competitors who distinguished themselves with fine performances at the Eastern Championships last year. Senior Joe Reed placed 6th in the all-around event and was a finalist on still rings and horizontal bar. Through his outstanding performance, he became the second UMass gymnast ever to place in the all-around event. The other noteworthy performance was by junior Scott Stover. Scott was a finalist in the long horse vault and placed 10th on horizontal bar.

Only the still rings event was considerably weakened by graduation for the Redmen. This years squad will be without the services of Dick Delgallo and George Seibert, who finished first and ninth, respectively, in the Eastern Championships. Candidates to fill the vacancy left by Delgallo and Seibert are senior Reed, juniors Ed Jones, Tom Mysliicki, Mike Peloquin, and sophomores Len Aubrey and Dick Searle.

In the side horse event, U-Mass should be particularly strong with senior Frank Dean and juniors Rick Riley and Norm Vexler forming a nucleus. Depth in this event will depend on the performances of Aubrey and Jones.

The long horse vault could prove to be one of the strongest events for UMass. Stover and Co-Captain Cary will lead the Redmen vaulters. In this event, four of the UMass gymnasts have the capability of giving a 9.0 performance.

In floor exercise, Co-Captain Kasavana, Joe Godwin, and Bill McCauley will be a constant threat for UMass. Any one of these gymnasts is capable of placing high in the Eastern Championships.

The parallel bars and horizontal bar events display the same depth as floor exercise. On parallel bars, Cary, Reed, and Vexler have the potential to be League finalists, as do Reed, Stover, and Tony Vacca on the horizontal bar.

The all-around event in gymnastics requires two gymnasts from each team to compete in all six of the regular events. The caddidates for the all-around event for the Redmen are ledby Reed, who, as mentioned before, placed 6th in the Eastern Championships. Depth is provided in this grueling event by Vexler and sophomore Tony Vacca.

After Syracuse, the Redmen will host Southern Connecticut State College in their first home meet on Dec. 13th, at 8:00 p.m. in the Boyden Auciliary Gym.

Photos of Slaughtered Civilians Suggest Murder

NEW YORK (AP) - Life Magazine printed yesterday eight color photographs of death in the Vietnamese hamlet of My Lai and quoted Sgt. Michael A. Bernhardt, who was there, as saying "it was point-blank murder."

Bernhardt, 23, LIFE wrote, said that "only a few of us" refused to take part. "I just told them the hell with this, I'm not doing it. I didn't think this was a lawful order."

Bernhardt, from Hempstead, N.Y., is now stationed at Ft. Dix, N.J. On Nov. 18 he became one of the first eyewitnesses to My Lai to speak publicly.

He said then he had seen American soldiers slay hundreds of civilians at My Lai. On March 16, 1968 published figures of the dead have ranged upwards to 567. Spec. John Kinch, who still is on active duty in Vietnam, said in the Life article that Capt. Ernest L. Medina reported to his superiors from the scene, "I have a body count of 310."

While no charges have been placed against Medina, attorney F. Lee Bailey said yesterday he has entered the case in the captain's behalf. Bailey declined to call. Medina his client, for technical reasons, but affirmed that he was acting for the captain.

Medina, a native of Springer, N.M., was the commander of Company C, First Battalion, 20th Infantry, 11th Light Infantry Brigade, which raided My Lai. Some of the men in the platoon have said he ordered the sweep.

The leader of his first platoon, Lt. William L. Calley Jr., has been charged by the Army with the premeditated murder of 109 civilians there, and with another count of murder in the death of a civilian more than a month earlier.

Sgt. Charles West, now a mechanic in Chicago, said in Life, "Capt. Medina didn't give an order to go in and kill women or children. Nobody told us about handling civilians because at the time I don't think any of us were aware of the fact that we'd run into civilians."

Bailey told the Associated Press yesterday he was investigating the matter on Medina's behalf especially in the light of statements made by GI's who were at My Lai.

"If Capt. Medina is going to be called a butcher," the attorney said in an interview in Columbus, Ohio, "I want to put him on TV to tell his side of the story," Medina has not spoken so far.

Bailey, who was also a defense counsel in the Green Berets case, said he was asking President Nixon to step in personally and direct the Army to remove its ban on further public statements by persons who might be witnesses at Calley's court-martial.

Bailey also said he was considering filing law suits against some news media who have interviewed some of the soldiers, but he declined to elaborate.

Bailey said Medina was not technically his client "because he has not been charged."

The pictures published by Life were taken by Ronald Haeberle, 28, a Cleveland businessman who was then a combat photographer in Vietnam. The accompanying text was prepared by Joseph Eszterhas, a reporter for the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Similar pictures "shocked and sickened" senators and congressmen last week when Army Secretary Stanley Resor showed them to the Armed Services Committee of both houses.

One, which Life released for general newspaper publication, showed a pile of bodies sprawled on a road. "Most were women and babies," said Haeberle's caption. "It looked as if they tried to get away."

Selective Service System Holds First Lottery Affecting Men 19-26

By STAN BENJAMIN

WASHINGTON (AP) - Tom, Dick and Harry grew up together, graduated in the same year - but they may go very separate ways under President Nixon's new draft lottery system.

Tonight the first draft lottery drawing in 27 years will be held; and a new drawing will take place every year while this system remains in effect.

Each year a new group of Tom-Dick-and-Harrys will await that drawing; and each year, as the capsules are drawn from the jar, they'll wonder: "What does this do to my future?"

ALL MUST REGISTER

Tom, Dick and Harry start out with at least one thing in common: They all must register with their local draft board when they reach the age of 18. What they tell the draft board about themselves will help determine whether they are classified 1-A - "available for military service" - or in one of 16 other classifications of men considered not immediately available.

Let's say Tom and Dick have got jobs, and have nobody to support but themselves. The draft board finds them 1-A.

DEFERMENT REASONS

Harry, however, is deferred. The draft board is convinced there is good reason not to draft him - at least as long as that good reason continues. The reason - perhaps he has enrolled in college; perhaps he has a job essential to national security; perhaps he is the sole support of a parent; perhaps he has a trick knee; the possible reasons for deferment are endless.

The following year, all three youths turn 19. Sometime late in that year the Selective Service System in Washington holds the lottery that will affect them.

Each date of the year, including Leap Year's Feb. 29, is written on a slip of paper and placed in a plastic capsule. These 366 capsules are mixed in a large glass jar and then drawn out, one by one.

DATES NUMBERED

The first date pulled, no matter whether it's Jan. 1 or Dec. 31 or anything in between, is labelled number one. The second date pulled becomes number two, and so on up to number 366.

When the New Year rolls around, the local draft board starts using this numbered list of dates: all 1-A men whose birthday was drawn first will be the first ones called for service. Then the board goes to the men whose birthday was drawn second, and so on.

TOM CAN'T PLAN

Suppose Tom's birthday - a day, for example, in November - is the third or fourth one drawn out of the bowl.

That tells Tom he'd better not make any long-range plans - he's virtually certain to be drafted unless the Army finds something wrong with him when he shows up for his physical.

Dick, on the other hand, has a higher number: let's say, 187 meaning that his birthday was the 187th to come out of the lottery bowl.

Tom is sure to be drafted, and a lot of guys far up the list with numbers in the 250's and 300's probably won't have to go.

But Dick is right in the middle. All he can do is sweat out the whole year and see whether the draft calls in his own local board reach his number.

If necessary, it will use the scrambled alphabet list to decide which man goes first when birthdays coincide, by matching the letters drawn with the initials of the men's last names.

THIS YEAR DIFFERENT

This year, the first lottery year, is a little different because men are eligible for the draft from 19 to 26, and the administration wants today's 20 to 26 group to get its exposure just like the 19 to 20's.

So this first drawing covers every man who reaches age 19, but not age 26, by or on Dec. 31, 1969.

Is The Lottery Enough

By Senator EDWARD M. KENNEDY

WASHINGTON - On Tuesday the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence urged the adoption of broad draft reforms to help "reduce the tensions and frustrations that now lead some young men" to violence. The draft, the commission statement said, is "a significant focal point of dissent" and "symbolizes the inflexibility of our institutions."

On Wednesday, President Nixon took two important steps towards draft reform:

(1) He signed into law a one-sentence bill giving him the authority to establish any sequence he desires for inducting young men into the armed forces; and

(2) He issued an executive order establishing a lottery to determine this sequence, and limiting exposure to the draft to one year (instead of seven years as under the present system).

And today, the Selective Service System will actually conduct the lottery. It will be the nation's first lottery since World War I, and will determine the order in which 250,000 young men in 1970 will receive Uncle Sam's "greetings."

The lottery is an important reform. It sets up an objective procedure for choosing some few men to be inducted, from among a large group of men all equally eligible. The Department of Defense estimates that 850,000 men will be eligible in 1970, but that it will need to draft only 250,000, or 29 per cent. Since the lottery is inherently objective, it will choose this 29 per cent without regard to race, income, connections or education.

But nearly two million young men turn 19 each year. Why is it that only 850,000 are eligible? First, only 68 per cent of this nearly two million will be able to pass the medical, mental and moral tests. In other words, 32 per cent of our annual crop of 19-year olds simply do not qualify for military service even if they volunteer. (It is interesting to note that 66 per cent of Negro draftees in Mississippi fail-

Prospects Look Good For UMass Law School

By JOHN STAVROS
Tuesday Issue Editor

Prospects for the creation of a Law School at the Amherst campus of UMass are "as bright as ever" according to Greenfield State Representative, Allen McGuane. So bright, in fact, that 1970 may see initial legislation authorizing such a school.

In a telephone interview with the MDC, McGuane stated that he has been filing legislation requesting creation of a Law School for the last seven years. "However," Mr. McGuane stated, "this year the bill is a top priority item and will receive a hearing at the State House."

According to McGuane, the closest the bill has ever come to being a reality was two years ago, when it passed the House but was then killed in the Senate.

McGuane, himself an attorney, said the bill on file presently calls for authority to be given to the UMass trustees to plan and develop a Graduate School of Law in Amherst.

Regarding financing, McGuane estimated that the initial part of the plan would call for a $300,000 investment. After this, additional funding would run in the area of $500,000-600,000 per year.

McGuane explained that the initial costs would cover the assembly of a law library above that which presently exists in the School of Business Administration, obtaining a librarian and providing for a dean with a small staff to assist in the early stages of the plan. The additional funds, according to McGuane, would be used to continue to pay the basic staff and then the yearly grants would allow the creation of a faculty to run the school when it opened.

What makes McGuane believe his eighth try will succeed? The new Medical School situation has greatly affected consideration of a Law School in the past, he said, "So, I believe this is the year for the plan's inception."

How the Draft will Work

WASHINGTON - Tonight the first draft lottery drawing in 27 years will be held. Here's how it will work:

Between 8 p.m. and 10 p.m. at Selective Service headquarters in Washington, a person or persons yet unidentified will draw slips or tags from a new glass bowl. The slips will be numbered 1 through 366, one for each day of the year, including leap year's Feb. 29.

The order of the drawing will determine the order of induction for young men, found physically and mentally qualified, who were born from Jan. 1, 1944 through Dec. 31, 1950 - ages 19 through 25.

Thus if No. 300 is the first number drawn, then all men whose birthdays fall on the 300th day of the year - Oct 26 - will be first to be called for induction. If No. 5 is the second drawn, all men whose birthday is Jan. 5 would be next to be drafted.

Because of the total number of men in the draft pool, it is likely that men whose birthdays are not drawn in the first half of the listing will escape service.

The order of induction established tonight will be valid for one year. The next drawing will be held around Dec. 1, 1970.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Every draft-aged man in the nation has a ticket in Monday night's new Selective Service lottery, a ticket he received the day he was born.

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) - President Nixon ended an easy-going Florida weekend Sunday by hailing the 100 millionth smallpox vaccination in Africa and flying his family back to the White House.

THE HAGUE, (AP) - Six European leaders meet Monday to consider the expansion and reorganization of the common market. It will be the first such summit without the presence of Charles de Gaulle.

At previous summit conferences the then French president effectively blocked the entry of Britain and other countries into the market. Norway, Denmark, Britain and Ireland now want to join.

ASSOCIATED PRESS - Traffic deaths mounted steadily Sunday as the Thanksgiving Day weekend neared an end and motorists headed homeward by the thousands. The death toll stood at 575.

NEW YORK (AP) - An American prosecutor at the Nuernberg war crimes trials, asked to comment on the alleged massacre at My Lai, South Vietnam, said Sunday the lesson of Nuernberg is "really coming home to roost."

Attorney Telford Taylor said the Nuernberg trials of Nazis after World War II showed that atrocities were not committed by "individual monsters" but by "very, very ordinary people. And the terrible thing about it was that it showed that ordinary people can get into circumstances where they behave in this fashion," he said.

"I'm afraid we're beginning to find the lesson driven home in a very direct way."

The famed Spanish flamenco guitarist, Carlos Montoya will make another visit to UMass when he appears in two concerts in Bowker Auditorium, December 9-10 under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council's Concert Association.

Mr. Montoya last appeared at the Amherst campus of the University during the 1966/67 season and performed to a sold-out, enthusiastic Bowker Auditorium audience. This year's Concert Association Celebrity Series concerts are repeated, therefore nearly 2000 University community devotees of Mr. Montoya will have the opportunity to hear his concert. Reserved tickets for this event are priced at $1.00 for UMass undergraduates; $2.00 for UMass grad students, faculty, staff and other students and $3.00 for the general public. Due to the expected capacity turn-out anticipated for this event, UMass students are urged to purchase their tickets before Thursday, December 4 when sale to the general public will begin.

For two decades, Mr. Montoya has been considered the leading flamenco guitarist concertizing before the public. When he attempted his first full concert recital in this media in 1948 it was unheard of in flamenco guitar circles since such artists always worked with a singer or dancer before.

Loopholes in New "Drafty System"

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's draft lottery system may give many deferment-holders a perfectly legal way to duck the draft entirely a White House aide acknowledged.

Peter Flanigan, Nixon's staff expert on the draft plan, conceded in an interview that a deferred draft registrant could choose the year he wants to be most exposed to the draft by deliberately timing the loss of his deferment - by dropping out of school or quitting a job, for example.

And he could do it, Flanigan said, near the end of a year in which it is already apparent his number is not likely to be called.

The result: A loophole big enough to drive a truckload of college students through. The student could give himself four years to choose from by starting college and his deferment at age 19 - when his draft liability begins. If, during one of those four years, it appears from the lottery his number will be bypassed, he could simply drop out of school or fail his course, join the 1-A pool, and wait out the year for the draft notice he is pretty certain won't come.

When the year runs out, so does his biggest chance of being drafted. For all practical purposes, he's in the clear unless the draft pool is swept by unexpectedly massive draft calls.

An occupational deferment could be managed the same way.

Theoretically, anyone with a deferment has the same opportunity but only to the extent he can control the circumstances.

Just such a possibility was pointed out to Flanigan last May after Nixon first outlined his draft proposal, and Flanigan commented then, "Those are damn good questions. We haven't got all the details worked out yet."

Asked yesterday if this loophole in the lottery might be abused by registrants seeking to escape the draft, Flanigan replied, "I guess it could."

THE PLAN SIGNED into law by President Nixon directs the establishment of an order of draft-call each year by scrambling dates and alphabet letters - the dates signifying birthdays, the alphabet names.

Once a man gets a number that way for any particular year, it determines his place in line for future years as well.

Depending on the size of the draft pool and the size of the draft calls, some portion of those eligible for draft will actually be called each year, while the others will be bypassed and will become progressively less liable in future years as new registrants step forward.

The hitch arises when a man who is deferred loses his deferment and rejoins the 1-A pool. He brings with him the place-in-line number he drew in the year he turned 19 - no matter how many years, or new scrambled lists, have gone by.

No matter how late in the year he loses his deferment, said Flanigan, he rejoins that year's pool- in effect, his draft exposure becomes largely retroactive.

A man with a low number probably could not escape the draft unless calls were cut sharply.

But a deferred man with a number higher than, say, the first one-third, of the list, could simply wait until late in the year and then drop out of school or quit his job in time for his draft board to reclassify him 1-A,since he knows his number won't come up.

Another Life picture showed an incident in which Haeberle and Spec. 5 Jay Roberts, at that time a reporter for the 31st Public Information Detachment in Vietnam, said that a GI, helped by others, started to strip a 13-year old Vietnamese girl.

One called the girl a prostitute for the Viet Cong, according to Life's account.

Haeberle jumped in and got a picture of the girl hiding behind her mother trying to fasten her shirt.

Roberts was quoted as saying that when the soldiers noticed the photographer they stopped and then a soldier asked, "Well, what'll we do with them?"

"Kill 'em," another answered. "I heard an M6 go off, a light machine gun, and we turned back around all of them and the kids with them were dead," Roberts said.

How the Draft Works

Next year, however, after Dec. 1, 1970, only the 19-year-olds or those who become 19 during the year will be placed in the eligible pool, where they will remain for one year only.

College deferments for undergraduate work will still be granted, but when a deferment is ended by dropout or graduation, the deferred student - regardless of age - will enter the 19-year-old eligible group for one year.

When the drawing by calendar days is completed tonight, officials will stage a second drawing from a scrambled list of the 26 letters of the alphabet.

The alphabet sequence thus established will be used by local boards to determine the order of induction within the list of those men having the same birthday. If the first calendar day drawn is 366, and the first letter drawn is B, then the first men to be drafted will be those whose names begin with B who were born in December 31.

Draft boards will then use the first letter of the last name of the inductee at first. But where there is duplication, the boards will then go to the first letter of the first name.

Local boards will continue to register, classify, and defer men at the age of 18. Each month, the boards will notify the state board of the number of men examined and qualified as 1-A, and this total will then be submitted to the national headquarters.

When the Defense Department submits a monthly call to Selective Service headquarters, this request is pro-rated to the states, which in turn prorate the quotas to local boards. The national headquarters allows credit to the states for men in service in assigning quotas and, similarly, state boards make such an allowance in fixing quotas for local boards.

"The Winner Is..."

The numbers racket gets legalized when the draft lottery kicks off its first fabulous drawing tonight. This is the big night. The night when all good American youths vie for the honor of being drafted into the greatest fighting force on earth. They will be hoping against hope that they will be the lucky ones to be inducted into the U.S. Army and fight.

And now the moment is near. All await tensely. Then with the roll of drums, with the nation hushed, with the sweating, tense youths, unable to sit still in their quivering seats, the numbers are chosen. And thus it will go on until another fighting force of eager people is created.

Sounds perverted? Well remember, that this is the long-awaited reform of the draft we were all looking forward to.

Win or lose, everyone, it's a hell of a way to form an Army.

MY OWN TRIP

History's Forces

"We stand where the fires are hottest. We're at the focus of forces," Eliav told Cullinane in describing why he felt Israel stood at the center of world history in James Michener's masterpiece, THE SOURCE. His argument is quite convincing. "You think the focus-of-forces concept more meaningful than the old fertile-crescent idea?" Cullinane asked. "Yes, because it reminds us of the conflict and the intellectual confrontation we've witnessed," Eliav defended his thesis.

First the Egyptians met the marching Mesopotamians. After this struggle of powers from the north and south came the Phoenicians and Philistines from the west to challenge the Syrians sweeping in from the east. Next came the Greeks who locked the Persians in mortal combat. Then the Romans came to fight the Parthians. The Byzantines battled the Arabs. The Christian crusaders descended upon the Muslims of Asia. Modern history has witnessed Napoleon fighting the Turks in Acre and the Germans of Rommel seeking to capture Jerusalem and Damascus. Presently Jew and Arab are locked in combat.

This vision of fertile fields lying at the intersection of three continents is misleading, indeed. This area is a "meeting place of dynamisms." It is the cauldron in which the great physical and intellectual forces of history met their destiny.

The study of this most important area of western world history has long been tragically neglected at our University. Amherst, Smith, and Mount Holyoke Colleges embarrass us in the breath and depth to which their courses cover this region. A first step toward ameliorating this lacuna began a week ago when a group of about thirty-five interested people including faculty members and rabbis, along with graduate and undergraduate students met in a meeting coordinated by Glen Gordon, a freshman who will not accept the non-pace of academic reform at UMass.

Dr. Piccus of the Spanish Department made the encouraging announcement that Arabic and Hebrew would probably be offered, possibly through the Compl Lit. department, next year. He suggested that with this foothold, literature courses could follow and eventually courses in Jewish and Arabic studies would be necessary to meet the needs of students coming through the initial courses.

It was suggested that students could get specialized courses in this area of study by going to the various relevant departments with a list of students willing to take the course desired. Martin Buber could be studied in a philosophy course, as could Biblical and post-Biblical writings. Chunks of the four-thousand years of Jewish history could be digested in the history department. American Jewish literature might be a course in the English department. The list is endless but the point is clear. Eventually all these courses could be pulled together into a separate department.

A third approach was to raise enough money (about $150,000 to $200,000 is needed) to endow a chair. The interest from this investment would guarantee a salary for a professor so the Commonwealth would not have to sacrifice any of its graft to give us a teacher. Once a leading scholar was found for this position, he'd probably bring with him a circle of people engaged in tangential studies and there you'd have a department.

It was estimated that continuous work in this direction might produce such a department by the time Glen's first child enters the University. It seems sad that such an ambitious improvement in the academic area takes so long. One semester, or at the most one year, should be long enough to bring about innovation where people are willing to do the necessary work.

But the response has been encouraging. Deal Shapiro has expressed an interest and is willing to offer his valuable insights when solicited. Money is the only hang-up. How much money is it worth to learn about this hot-house of history? Can we afford to neglect it? Maybe in ten or fifteen years, Glen, your vision will be realized.

Kennedy Raises Questions On Value of Volunteer Army

ed these tests, and 65 per cent in New Jersey and 69 per cent in Oregon; the comparable figures for whites are 40 per cent; 44 per cent; and 44 per cent.)

Thus some 1.4 million men will theoretically be eligible in 1970, from which to choose the necessary 250,000. But for those affluent or clever enough, or well enough advised, to win them, there are deferments - for college, for occupation, for fatherhood, for agriculture, for hardship and so on. Deferments are good insulation against the draft, and one deferment can often be parlayed into another to become a virtual exemption. If only 850,000 are eligible for the draft next year, instead of 1.4 million, it is principally because of the various deferments.

Yet there are no uniform guidelines for most deferments. Instead, each of the nearly 4,100 local boards uses its own interpretation of "community needs" to decide which boys are deferred and which are drafted. Furthermore, if a boy is not rich and clever, there is no due process protection of his interests in the decision-making of the Selective Service System.

Consequently, those who favor a reformed draft urge that these further steps be taken:

Eliminate occupational deferments. The National Security Council and the previous Secretary of Labor have both said there was no national interest requirement in continuing them.

Establish uniform guidelines. Since local boards have virtually no substantive guidelines for their decisions, it is not surprising that variability between the boards is the rule rather than the exception.

Provide due process. The protections so much a part of a democratic society - personal appearance, written opinion, right to counsel, right to call witnesses - are simply unavailable in an appeal of a local board decision. This is shocking and must be reversed.

There are other important reforms many feel are badly needed - streamlining the structure of the draft system, naming members of local boards under 30 years of age, and bringing an end to college deferments in times of war.

There is also the problem of closing the loophole opened by the President's executive order. Under its provisions, a young man with a deferment can choose which year to terminate the deferment and enter the draft pool. He will, in all likelihood, choose a year in which the lottery has made the odds strongly against his being called. Because he can choose which year to terminate his deferment, he can beat the draft, but not everyone can win a deferment.

It would be comfortable if there were no draft, and the manpower needs of the armed forces were met through voluntary enlistments. It is entirely possible, furthermore, to construct a system after Vietnam in which draftees are not necessary, and manpower needs are filled by volunteers.

But there are a number of grave questions about an all-volunteer army.

Would it be an army of professional mercenaries, as such armies are called in other countries?

Would it be all-black and all-poor, as the army induced volunteers through higher pay, and as reenlistment statistics suggest?

Would it cost from $4 to $17 billion additional each year, as Defense Department studies indicate, and is it worth that allocation of our scarce resources?

Would it act as a stimulus to undertake foreign military adventures, as its leadership cadre sought to give effect to its military training and experience?

Would we lose an important constraint on foreign policy decisions because civilians would not then have to run the risk of involvement in limited military efforts?

Would it widen the gulf between the civilian and the military, as it lost the leaven of being a citizen/s army?

And ultimately, how would such an army react in Songmy? How would it react after Songmy?

The draft is important not only because it collides with the life of every young man in this country. It is important not only because one out of every three army deaths in Vietnam is a draftee. Its ultimate importance lies in its compulsory nature, which is an abridgement of the traditional democratic freedoms.

If a democracy's citizens are convinced such an abridgement is necessary, then they will tolerate it if it is equitable. But when its necessity rests on an unpopular war, and when it is unfair and discriminatory in application, then it is almost surprising the nation had not seen a repetition of the draft riots which paralyzed New York City for three days just over 100 years ago.

Or have we?

Pre-Registration. What Really Happens?

By Susan Snyder Staff Reporter

The University is already geared up for second semester academic schedules - trying to develop orderly five course programs for 14,000 students in January.

One of the aims of the Scheduling Office, despite the system's shortcomings, is to enable students to indicate section preference when they pre-register. This would involve much more detailed computer programming than is presently done.

All scheduling is done at the Whitmore Building, with the exception of finals, according to Hills Skillings, scheduling officer at UMass. Final exam programming is done at a commercial computer center in Rochester, N.Y. This is done because of the programming involved in scheduling 700 exams into groupings for the 8-1/2 days of finals. The Rochester operation attempts to have a minimum of 14,000 students taking more than one exam on the same day. Personnel trained to do this type of programming are scarce, Skillings said.

Course schedule programming begins on Counseling Day, which is Dec. 9 this semester, when the pre-registration cards start coming into the Registrar's Office. Pre-registration cards are matched with a magnetic tape to determine if the person is a UMass student. Through elimination, this also tells which students have not pre-registered.

The cards then go to Whitmore's data center, where they are keypunched on a tape. This process is done continually as cards are received until approximately 2-1/2 to 3 weeks before the semester begins. All students' course requests are put on tape as soon as possible after pre-registration day. At this time there is a trial run of the computer to determine the special scheduling problems. If there are too many students registered for a course, the department is notified and it either makes additional provisions or tells the scheduling office which students to cut from the course. There also is the problem of allocating classrooms and auditoriums and the popular class times of 9:05, 11:15 and 1:25 to departments.

After the problems are smoothed out, the final schedules are run through. Students with special scheduling, for example, due to job conflicts, have their's processed first. Then come special requests and then the schedules for the bulk of the students. After the final scheduling is done, 2-1/2 to 3 weeks before registration, no student can pre-register or change his pre-registration.

Skillings admitted that there are inefficiencies in the system. Pre-registration cards are sometimes lost and sometimes never received because student's advisors have forgotten to turn them in. Students have been known to submit two completely different cards for the same semester.

He cites registration at a school in Iowa where, 3 days before classes start, all students go to a place called the arena, and pick up admission cards on a first come-first served basis as an example of another system. However, Skillings said he thinks the UMass system is much better. He hopes that the present system will be developed one day so that students can indicate section preferences on pre-registration day.

UMass Trustees Grant Emeritus Rank To Three Retiring Faculty Members

The UMass Board of Trustees has granted emeritus rank to three faculty members completing long careers at the University.

They are Mary E. Lojkin, associate professor of food and nutrition in the School of Home Economics, who will retire Dec. 1; Stowell C. Goding, professor of Romance languages who will retire in September of 1970; and H. Sidney Vaughn, career guidance agricultural program coordinator who will retire Nov. 28.

A UMass faculty member since 1948, Dr. Lojkin was born in Russia and received her Ph. D. from Columbia University. She has done a number of studies on nutrition in pregnancy and has published 23 articles on this and other nutritional areas. Her research has been supported since 1963 by a total of $34,200 in grants from the National Institutes of Health.

Before coming to UMass, Dr. Lojkin served as an associate biochemist at Boyce Thompson Institutes for Plant Research and a research assistant chemist at Columbia University. For two years she was an assistant chemist with the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Prof. Goding, former chairman of the Romance language department, joined the faculty in 1927. Dr. Goding has for several years been director of the Summer Institute for Advanced Study for Secondary School French Teachers in Arcachon, France, sponsored by the University and supported by the U. S. Office of Education. He is a former president of the New England Modern Language Association.

Dr. Goding has twice been decorated by the French government an honor awarded for "eminent merit as Professor of French languages and Literature in American colleges and universities."

He received his B.A. from Dartmouth University, his M.A. from Harvard University and his Ph. D. from Wisconsin University.

He is the author of numerous articles in The French Review, The Modern Language Journal, and The Massachusetts Teacher.

Mr. Vaughn completed his U-Mass service as career guidance agricultural program coordinator in the College of Agriculture. While in this post he also supervised the college's relations with State and federal agencies.

A 1930 graduate of UMass with a Master of Public Administration degree from Harvard University, Mr. Vaughn joined the U-Mass staff in 1951 as state county agent leader.

A special meeting of all Recreation students will be held Monday, December 1, 1969, at 7:30 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge at the Student Union. The meeting will focus on Rec. Majors in their department, and curriculum change.

Amherst College Prof Calls Ban On Marxist Scholar "Repressive"

Prof. Norman Birnbaum of Amherst College has called a recent Justice Department decision to bar Marxist scholar Ernest Mandel of Brussels, Belgium, from a U.S. speaking tour "part of a pattern of repressive behavior on the part of the administration."

The decision to deny the visa was made Wednesday under the 1952 McCarran-Walter Act, which gives the Justice Department authority to prohibit entrance of any person deemed subversive.

Birnbaum had invited Mandel to a seminar on Marxist political thought at the college and to address an assembly of students Tuesday.

Mandel is editor of the Belgium weekly, Le Gauche, and the newspaper, International News, and is author of a book on economics, "Marxist Economic Theory."

Mandel lectured extensively in this country in 1962 and 1968 in visits allowed under the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. The Justice Department decision reportedly was made over the opposition of the State Department.

In a letter to Atty. Gen. John Mitchell, Birnbaum called the denial of the visa "absurd."

Birnbaum wrote, "May I inform you that a considerable body of opinion within and without the educational institutions is not prepared to have an attorney general narrow the limits of freedom in our country.

"I think that you will find the means of resistance on our part are not small."

Birnbaum said that in denying a visa to a scholar invited by an institution of higher learning the attorney general has "interfered directly with the educational process."

Birnbaum charged in the letter that statements by Mitchell and some of his "immediate colleagues" lend support to the view that "our present administration operates with a mentality more appropriate to a police state than to American democracy as most of us have learned to appreciate it."

At Last! At Last!

The Department of Physics and Astronomy has announced the creation of another course, Physics 117 to be offered Spring term, 1970, in its series of non-technical courses for students with a background in the Humanities or Social Sciences. The course, entitled Nuclear Energy, will be taught by Professor David R. Inglis, and will include extensive consideration of the social and political aspects of nuclear energy as well as a simple presentation of the relevant physics. The presentation will include such topics as the functioning of nuclear reactors and of nuclear weapons, the political aspects of nuclear arms control and disarmament, and the social aspects of radioactive environmental pollution. This course satisfies distribution requirements in the sciences.

There is no safety in numbers.

Numbers of tampons never kept safe.

But absorbency does. MEDS tampons. They're more absorbent. So you probably need fewer of them.

Fewer to have to change.

Fewer chances of forgetting. Fewer trips to the Powder Room. The fewer the better.

MEDS are made differently. That's why. They're made with soft, absorbent rayon.

First, there's a gentle rayon cover. Then a layer of rayon fibers that absorb quickly. Then another layer of fine rayon storage fibers that absorb steadily. And, in the center, a cushioned layer that holds, and holds some more.

Can you imagine? Some tampons are just chunks of cotton. (No wonder you probably need more of them than you do of MEDS.)

This month, quit the numbers game. Try MEDS. They come in regular or super, with a soft polyethylene applicator.

There's more safety in fewer MEDS.

Co-Author of Black Rage to Speak On Blacks Living in a White World

The co-author of the current collegiate best-seller, "Black Rage," a noted black psychiatrist, will speak at area colleges next week.

Dr. William H. Grier will visit Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges and UMass as part of the Five College Student Lecture Series. He will deliver two major addresses on the black experience in a white world, the first at 8 p.m. Tuesday (December 2) in John M. Greene Hall at Smith and the second at 8 p.m. Wednesday (December 3) in the Student Union Ballroom at the University.

Both lectures are open to the public without charge.

Committed to helping the black man understand his situation, Grier wrote "Black Rage" with fellow psychiatrist Price Cobbs. The book deals with the sociological problems of being black in a white world. Examples from case studies are used to illustrate the characteristics of racism.

Sponsored by the Five College Student Coordinating Board, Grier's stay will also include visits to classes and informal meetings with students. On Monday and Friday (December 1 and 5) he will be at Mount Holyoke, on Tuesday (December 2) at Smith, on Wednesday (December 3) at the University, and on Thursday (December 4) at Amherst.

Grier received his M.D. degree from the University of Michigan College of Medicine in 1948. He is currently director of the Child Psychiatric Clinic of San Francisco's Community Mental Health Services and a faculty member of the University of Cakifornia's Medical Center and School of Social Welfare.

UMass Prof TV Panalist

Gerald J. Gruman, M.D., Ph. D. an associate professor of history at UMass, will appear on Aline Saarinen's WNBC-TV show "For Women Only," as a panelist in a series on "Facing Death" Dec. 1 through 5.

The half-hour discussion show will be aired on Ch. 4, New York, on each of the days at 9 a.m. Appearing with the UMass faculty member will be a psychologist, a psychiatrist, a physician, a child educator and a clergyman. They will examine all aspects of death and its place in modern society.

Dr. Gruman is a former practicing physician who has written a number of works relating to longevity and death. His book "A History of Ideas About the Prolongation of Life" was published in 1966 by the American Philosophical Society. He is a member of the National Advisory Council for the Center for Studies of Death and Dying at Wayne State University.

Dr. Gruman recently (11/22) spoke on "The Quest for Natural Salvation from Death" at the national conference on Religion and the Future sponsored by the United Church of Christ and the American Baptist Convention.

Venture: Purify water with the fiber that made men whistle.

Nylon. Reverse osmosis.

A fiber that started making girls' legs more beautiful some 30 years ago.

And a process that's been around a lot longer.

But when Du Pont scientists and engineers look at them in a new way, they combine into an idea that can change the world.

Reverse osmosis is a purification process that requires no phase change. It's potentially the cheapest way to desalinate water.

Du Pont's innovation? Hollow, semipermeable nylon fibers much finer than human hair. Symmetrical, with an outer diameter of .002 inch and a wall thickness of .0005 inch, with an accuracy of manufacture maintained at close to 100%. Twenty-five to 30 million of them encased in a precisely engineered unit 14 inches in diameter by 7 feet long.

The result: a semipermeable surface area of about 85,000 square feet—the size of a 2-acre lot—and up to 10,000 gallons of desalted water per day.

So far "Permasep"® permeators have been used experimentally to purify brackish and polluted water, and in various industrial separations. But the potential to desalt seawater, too, is there.

So Du Pont scientists and engineers are even now working toward improved fibers, units and plant designs that should make it possible to get fresh water from salt at a price that any town or nation can afford.

Innovation—applying the known to discover the unknown, inventing new materials and putting them to work, using research and engineering to create the ideas and products of the future—this is the venture Du Pont people are now engaged in.

UMass Symphony Band to Perform Rogers' Three Japanese Dances

Dorothy Ornest will be soprano soloist in a performance of Bernard Rogers' THREE JAPANESE DANCES by the UMass Symphony Band at 3 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 7, in Bowker Auditorium.

Miss Ornest is a member of the music faculty at the University, and is well known for her numerous appearances in recitals and as guest soloist. She is a graduate of the Eastman School of Music and the University of Michigan.

Bernard Rogers set the THREE JAPANESE DANCES for orchestra in 1933 and later recast them for the Eastman Wind Ensemble. The three movements are titled "Dance with Pennons", "Mourning Dance", and "Dance with Swords." They are not based upon specific pictorial models, but instead represent the composer's strong affinity for the oriental expression of the arts of China and Japan. The work will be conducted by John Jenkins, director of bands at the University.

The University Wind Ensemble will perform the Symphony No. 4 by Alan Hovhaness, commissioned by the American Wind Symphony in 1958. Other works included on the program will be Vittorio Giannini's Praeludium and Allegro, conducted by Larry Weed, assistant conductor; the Finale from Symphony No. 1 in G Minor by Kalinnikov, and the French National Defile March.

John d'Armand, member of the UMass music department faculty, will present a recital Wednesday, Dec. 3, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Estela Kersenbaum Olevsky, pianist, will accompany Mr. d'Armand in a program for bass voice, including two selections from Symphonie Sacrae of Heinrich Schutz, four songs by Purcell, "Chansons De Don Quichotte" by Jacques Ibert, and the aria, "Devant la maison," from Berlioz's "La Damnation De Faust," and four selections from "Romanzen Aus Tiecks Magelone" by Johannes Brahms.

The recital is open to the public without charge.

WMUA's Focus to Examine New Draft Lottery

Tonight, beginning at 9 p.m., WMUA's "Focus" will examine "The New Draft Lottery: Reform or Reaction?". Ken Mosakowski's special guest will be Mr. Richard Prunty, formerly a member of the American Friends Service Committee, who is now a guidance counselor in the Enfield, Mass., school system and a draft counselor in the greater Springfield area. Mr. Prunty will comment on the mechanics of the President's new lottery system; how the new system will effect students, both in college and high school; and some of the possible reasons for institution of this particular lottery system. Since the lottery drawing will take place tonight in Selective Service headquarters sometime between 8 and 10 o' clock, it is likely that the WMUA news staff will be able to present news bulletins on the lottery during the "Focus" program.

Tonight's program will also feature the kickoff of a massive commodity drive for Dorchester County, South Carolina, which will be conducted on the University campus and in the town of Amherst between December 1st and 18th. The drive is being conducted by members of the Martin Luther King Council's Committee on Poverty, the Freedom Committee, the UMass Afro - American Society, and the UMass chapter of the Young People's Socialist league.

Interested persons are invited to tune in on "Focus" tonight at 91.1 FM.

Professor Inglis is eminently qualified to lecture on such topics. A former student at Amherst College (A.B., 1928; Hon. D. Sc., 1963), he earned his doctorate at the University of Michigan in 1931 and has held academic positions at Ohio State, Pittsburgh, Princeton and Johns Hopkins as well as visiting appointments at Berkeley and Grenoble. A member of the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory during the "War Years", 1943-46, he spent the last twenty years at Argonne National Laboratory before joining the University this year. Professor Inglis has had a continuing concern for arms control and disarmament for many years and is the author of over 50 articles in this field in publications such as the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists, Saturday Review and Nation. These have included the first suggestion for establishing an "Arms Control and Disarmament Agency" and the first published discussion of the need for a nuclear test ban to limit arms development. His most recent political article, "H-bombs in the Backyard", appeared in the New Republican last January and dealt with the ABM controversy. In 1959, his testimony before the Senate Committee on Commerce was crucial in drawing Senator Clinton Anderson into the fray against Senator Hugh Scott and others This led to the denial of confirmation of Adm. Lewis Strauss as Secretary of Commerce after he had conducted himself as chairman of the AEC in ways that most scientists considered reprehensible, e.g., the Oppenheimer hearings. This occurred when Professor Inglish began his year term as chairman of the Federation of American Scientists.

Redman Fall Sports Season in Review

UMass Autumn Teams Give Last Flicks

UMass'NCAA Rule Break Isn't a Story Yet

by PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

I suppose that you are all wondering about the now public violation of NCAA regulation by UMass, reported so scrupliously by the BOSTON GLOBE. The reason you heard it just from the Globe and no where else is because there really isn't any story, pending appeals, hearings, etc.

What was reported is true. And a review of the facts, the lack of seriousness of the violation point toward the antiquity, narrow-mindedness, and uselessness of the Yankee Conference, a resting place, that UMass must leave quickly.

During the years 1966 and 1967, the UMass Athletic Department was in a bit of confusion resulting from the tragic illness of then Assistant Athletic Director Chet Gladchuck, and the retiring Assistant AD Earl Lorden. It was from this office that entrance eligibility of freshman athletes is checked.

The NCAA rules that athletes must have a predicted 1.6 grade point to be able to compete eligibly in their freshman year.

Recently, it ha s come to the attention of the athletic department that there were UMass violations in the years mentioned above. The violations resulted from erroneous calculating of predicted averages, and dealt with a number of frosh football players. All the athletes have proven themselves capable of academic work, have always competed eligibly in varsity athletics, and the violations deal with a small number of freshman contests.

They were violations, though, and UMass, realizing this, turned themselves into the Yankee Conference.

Now was the time for the incident to descend into the small time gutters of the Yankee Conference leadership. The Conference Athletic Directors, jealous of UMass' athletic successes, licking their wounds, incurred by a rampaging Redman football team, seeing themselves continually outclassed in all sports by UMass, despite restrictive scholarship regulations aimed directly at UMass, levied a one year suspension on UMass. It meant that the school could not compete in any post season action in which they represent the Conference.

The penalty is (1) illegal because it is not in the jurisdiction of the Athletic Directors to levy punishment but up to the Conference presidents, and (2) the penalty is too severe for a minor violation that was turned in by UMass.

Whatever happens with the Presidents meeting to which the penalty has been referred, the Yankee Conference has revealed itself, to be the Mickey-Mouse, 19th Century, small-time organization it is. It has shown itself to be more than ready to penalize the only school to give it favorable publicity; excessively and illegally.

How much longer will UMass sit self-contented and be slapped in the face. They must get out of the Yankee Conference. Not look toward the future to do it, hem and haw about it, but get the hell out now, before their proud athletic program is eroded some more.

* * * * *

Bill DeFlavio and Jerry Grasso won Varsity 'M' awards for the B.C. game. The weekly luncheons at the Newman Center will continue through the winter months and spring for the first time. Noontime Wednesday for all interested in UMass sports.

* * * * *

SPORTS ILLUSTRATED, annually the worst college basketball publication this side of the SPRINGFIELD UNION, has done it again. It fails to mention UMass at all, who missed the NIT a year ago by one game and should be better this season. Instead they give two pages to the fabulous AIC Yellow Jackets, who open their always rugged schedule with North Adams State.

C'mon SI, wake up and stop giving your valuable print to small timers like AIC who should be major college classified but aren't too courageous about the whole thing, only lost to UMass by eigh' last year. How many this year?

HARRIER TRAFFIC - Redmen cross-country runners had another fine autumn with a second place finish in the Yankee Conference Meet which was held at UMass, as this picture testifies.

Patriots Spear Dolphins, 38-23

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) - Fullback Jim Nance scampered to two touchdowns as the Boston Patriots defeated the Miami Dolphins 38-23 in an American Football League game Sunday.

Nance and defensive tackle Houston Antwine starred for the Patriots in the American Football League contest that saw Boston score 16 points in the final quarter to put the game out of reach of a shattered Miami team.

Miami held a 9-6 lead entering the second quarter, but Boston scored 16 points in that period to seven for Miami and ended the half at Boston 22, Miami 16.

Miami grabbed the lead 23-22 when wide receiver Eugene Milton snatched a fumble by teammate Jim Kiick at the goal line and stumbled across for the score.

In the final period Patriots' cornerback Larry Carwell intercepted a pass from the Dolphins' backup quarterback, Rick Norton, on the Miami 20 and returned it to the two-yard line. Norton was filling in for injured starter Bob Griese.

An offside penalty against Miami moved the ball to the one. Then Nance slipped over for his first TD. The Patriots failed on a two-point conversion attempt, but went ahead 28-23.

Minutes later Boston blocked a punt by Miami's Larry Seiple and took over on the Miami two. Carl Garrett smashed to the one.

Nance picked up six inches on the next play then slanted in for his second touchdown. The score was 35-23.

With less than two minutes left, Carwell grabbed another Norton pass on the Miami 30 and raced back to the 15.

A field goal by Gino Cappelletti for 13 yards brought the final score of the game.

Antwine was all over the field in spectacular defensive plays, smashing through the Miami line to force Norton into quick passes and hauling down Dolphin runners before they crossed the line of scrimmage.

Draft Birth Date List

The following is the list of birth dates, in order highest draft priority to lowest draft priority. The Associated Press has estimated that men whose birthdays fall in the top 100 or so slots stand an almost certain chance of being drafted. Middle number birth dates, ranging from 100-250, stand a 50-50 chance of being drafted, depending on local boards. The men with lower priority numbers, from 250-366, the Associated Press predicts, will probably not be drafted.

Sen. Mansfield Urges Europe Troop Lowering

WASHINGTON (AP) - On the even of a major NATO meeting, majority leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., urged the Senate Monday to declare for "a substantial reduction of U.S. forces permanently stationed in Europe."

Pentagon officials said that, whether or not Mansfield so intended, the resolution would have the effect of strengthening U.S. efforts to persuade NATO allies to maintain their force levels committed to the alliance.

These sources said Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird is expected to emphasize, as have other defense chiefs before him, the importance of keeping up the alliance's conventional military power.

Laird, Secretary of State William P. Rogers and other senior diplomatic and military officials will attend meetings of the North Atlantic council and other NATO bodies in Brussels Dec. 3 - 5.

Sept. 14 First In Lottery Draft

WASHINGTON (AP) - The first draft lottery in 27 years was held Monday night, sending men born on Sept. 14 to the head of the line for 1970 draft calls.

The first birth date number was drawn by Rep. Alexander Pirnie, R-N.Y., ranking Republican on a special House subcommittee on the draft.

Men second in line for the draft next year will be those born April 24.

The third birthday drawn was Dec. 30.

It was followed by Feb. 14, then by Oct. 18.

Others will be called in the order in which their birthdays were drawn Monday night, until the local boards throughout the nation fulfill their 1970 draft quotas.

The list drawn Monday night applied to all men between 19 and 26 years of age as of the end of this year.

Only those classified 1-A or 1-A-O will actually be called. But men now deferred or exempt would retain their place in this order of call should they later become 1-A or 1-A-O, that is, available for the draft.

The lottery began at 8 p.m. when, after a brief invocation, draft director Lewis B. Hershey ordered the unlocking of a black box containing 366 blue plastic capsules and ordered them poured into a large glass jar.

By the time most draft boards have worked their way half way through the list - into the middle or upper 100'd - they will probably have all the men they need for their 1970 quotas.

Men with birth dates drawn early in the list can be almost sure of receiving a draft notice next year; men with middle-range numbers may have to wait all year to see if they are drafted; men whose birthdays are drawn late in the list, next to numbers in the 200's or 300's, probably will not be drafted.

Every man in the country who reaches the age of 19 but not 26 by Dec. 31, 1969, will have a place-in-line number determined by Monday night's drawing.

Loopholes Uncovered in Fish-Bowl Lottery Draft

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's draft lottery system may give many deferment-holders a perfectly legal way to dock the draft entirely a White House aide acknowledged.

Peter Flanigan, Nixon's staff expert on the draft plan, conceded in an interview that a deferred draft registrant could choose the year he wants to be most exposed to the draft by deliberately timing the loss of his deferment - by dropping out of school or quitting a job, for example.

And he could do it, Flanigan said, near the end of a year in which it is already apparent his number is not likely to be called.

The result: A loophole big enough to drive a truckload of college students through. The student could give himself four years to choose from by starting college and his deferment at age 19 - when his draft liability begins. If, during one of those four years, it appears from the lottery his number will be bypassed, he could simply drop out of school or fail his course, join the 1-A pool, and wait out the year for the draft notice he is pretty certain won't come.

When the year runs out, so does his biggest chance of being drafted. For all practical purposes, he's in the clear unless the draft pool is swept by unexpectedly massive draft calls.

An occupational deferment could be managed the same way.

Theoretically, anyone with a deferment has the same opportunity but only to the extent he can control the circumstances.

Just such a possibility was pointed out to Flanigan last May after Nixon first outlined his draft proposal, and Flanigan commented then, "Those are damn good questions. We haven't got all the details worked out yet."

Asked yesterday if this loophole in the lottery might be abused by registrants seeking to escape the draft, Flanigan replied, "I guess it could."

THE PLAN SIGNED into law by President Nixon directs the establishment of an order of draft-call each year by scrambling dates and alphabet letters - the dates signifying birthdays, the alphabet names.

Once a man gets a number that way for any particular year, it determines his place in line for future years as well.

Depending on the size of the draft pool and the size of the draft calls, some portion of those eligible for draft will actually be called each year, while the others will be bypassed and will become progressively less liable in future years as new registrants step forward.

The hitch arises when a man who is deferred loses his deferment and rejoins the 1-A pool. He brings with him the place-in-line number he drew in the year he turned 19 - no matter how many years, or new scrambled lists, have gone by.

No matter how late in the year he loses his deferment, said Flanigan, he rejoins that year's pool- in effect, his draft exposure becomes largely retroactive.

A man with a low number probably could not escape the draft unless calls were cut sharply.

But a deferred man with a number higher than, say, the first one-third, of the list, could simply wait until late in the year and then drop out of school or quit his job in time for his draft board to reclassify him 1-A, since he knows his number won't come up.

Approximately 1200 people were treated to poetry and Hindu chants recited by Allen Ginsberg in the Cage last night.

The large crowd can be attributed to both Ginsberg's ability as a writer and his efforts for civil rights, legalizing marijuana, and against the war in Vietnam.

The identification that young people have with Ginsberg was apparent last night. He received a wealth of applause as his recitings represented the feelings of the audience.

Leaman Worries About Rebounds and Defense

Jack Leaman, in three years, has taken UMass basketball from dormancy to its greatest heights, and has brought the Redmen to the brink of New England supremacy.

Now on the eve of his fourth season, the personable Leaman had comments on what could be a most interesting season.

MDC - Injuries have been a problem during practice. How is the physical shape right now as the season begins?

LEAMAN - We've had a tough time getting everyone together healthy and it has had an effect. Right now, the only one sub-par is Mike Pagliara. His shoulder is still injured and he'll be a doubtful participant against Providence.

MDC - After seeing the team practice for over a month, what do you consider your main strengths?

LEAMAN - I'd say that we have good shooting ability and will be a fine shooting team. I also think that our overall team speed will be an asset.

MDC - Any obvious weaknesses?

LEAMAN - We lack real size and strength. Also, we are not as good a defensive team as I would like us to be.

MDC - Is the fact that you will have to depend a great deal on sophomores, going to be a hinderance early in the season?

LEAMAN - If they play like sophomores than it will hurt us. It could be a source of trouble. But it is not a big worry for me, because I think they will perform with poise. They came through last year to be 15-0. I think they will be ready.

MDC - How will this team compare to last year's. You have those two big holes left by Gayeska and DiSarcina.

LEAMAN - We will be much different from last year. We have no dependable rebounder like Peter (Gayeska) and don't have a leader and ball handler like Joe (DiSarcina). We won't be as steady or dependable as we were a year ago. However, we will be trying to make up for it in other areas such as improved shooting and speed. We hope we can offset those two big losses and be a quality basketball team.

MDC - Who will start against Providence?

LEAMAN - Well, for Providence, and this is only for Providence, we'll probably go with John Bettancourt and Ray Ellerbrook at guards, Ken Mathias at center, with Julius Erving and Dennis Chapman at the forwards.

MDC - Have you set any objectives for the coming season, any goals you hope to attain?

LEAMAN - Always our main goal, every year, is to improve our record from the year before. It will be tough to improve over last year because we got the maximum out of that team. Our second goal will be to win the Conference title again. And our third goal is to become the best in New England. We have the potential to do that but we aren't yet there. The first six games will have a lot to say about realizing that dream.

MDC - Who'll be the big trouble in the Conference?

LEAMAN - Unquestionably Rhode Island. They have brought in three junior college transfers and are spending the most money in the Conference on basketball. They are professing to become a national power, so we have to be wary of them.

MDC - Is this now or can it be the best UMass team ever?

LEAMAN - It defeinitely is not now. We have to fill two big holes, and improve our rebounding and defense. These are two things that have always been our strong points. But this is potentially an outstanding team and if we improve in those areas we can realize our goals.

Hoop Ducats on Sale

Applications for season tickets to UMass home basketball games for non-students can be picked up at any time in Boyden 255. A special season ticket rate of $15 is available to faculty, staff, professor emeritus and their immediate families.

Ticket applications, when filled out, should be forwarded to Walter R. Novak, Ticket Manager, Boyden Building, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts.

If these persons should desire individual game tickets instead of season tickets, they should pick up individual game applications in Boyden 255. These applications, when made out, should be forwarded as the others. Prices are $2 for all home games except those in which the Redmen host Providence, URI, UConn and Holy Cross.

Improvements on the Cage have been administered over the last six months with promises of a better lighted, better heated and more water resistant Cage than in times past.

A new roof will eliminate further puddles of water on the basketball floor during showers and will make the Cage a warmer place to watch games. The gross netting has been removed, while improved lighting and the painting of reserved seats is expected in the near future.

The new lighting, to be installed in early January, will allow for black-and-white TV cameras to focus in on Cage events. Convenient parking is another Cage asset as lot #1 west of Whitmore and the lots south of Whitmore are in easy walking distance of the Cage.

Canniff Knows Hockey Success

The UMass hockey program has shown steady progress under the diligent leadership of Coach Jack Canniff. The 38-year-old Boston College graduate has known hockey success since his days as a member of the 1949 Arlington High School New England Champions. Canniff is out to make UMass a respected and successful New England hockey aggregation. The results of last winter's well-recruited frosh team bring his aims into focus. The UMass frosh compiled a 10-2 record, outscoring the opposition 74-26. Included were decisions over the Harvard and Yale JV's and the Boston College frosh - feats never before accomplished at UMass. There are 14 members of that squad fighting for berths on the varsity and they will provide the nucleus of the team. Canniff enjoyed recruiting success again last year and has some highly-skilled frosh on campus.

The UMass mentor was a standout at B.C. from 1952-1954. He spent two years in the Army before becoming hockey coach at Gloucester High School. While at the North Shore school Canniff's teams won 104, lost 30 and tied 22 and qualified for the state tournament nine times. After 11 years at Gloucester Canniff moved to Massachusetts and officially took over Redmen hockey fortunes in April of 1967. His first team had just three seniors and ended 5-15. Last winter, despite a lack of depth the record improved to 9-12 which tied the UMass record for wins in a season. Canniff believes the Redmen can have a winning record despite inexperience. UMass is better fundamentally and has its best team speed and skating ability. These factors, plus the enthusiastic sophomores, could bring the first winning campaign since 1960-61.

Canniff: 'We Have Good Potential'

The coach is a rare breed. Ohio State clobbers TCU, 62-0 and Woody Hayes complains that his Buckeyes made too many mistakes on OFFENSE. UCLA, with you-know-who playing center wins two consecutive NCAA championships and on the eve of the third, John Wooden worries about beating Purdue when he has one of the best teams in the history of college basketball.

It's not hard to see that the coach looks at his work of art with an attitude of realism that often borders on pessimism.

UMass hockey coach John Canniff is no exception. Now in his third year at the helm, he has steadily upgraded the Redmen to the point where they can look forward to a New Era: a winning era.

UMass hockey has a new look this year. Up from last year's 10-2 frosh squad are 14 very promising sophomores who can skate, shoot and play defense. It is not unrealistic to say that the first winning season in UMass history is in the offing.

But the ethics of coaching do not allow him to make any predictions and with good reason. "We're making a varsity out of 14 sophomores," says Canniff, "and that is not an easy thing to do." Realism pervades.

"Sure, they've got potential," he continues, "but they lack experience and you must remember that potential is only something that could be achieved, not something that has been proven."

This is a point that must be well taken. There is only a relatively small number of juniors and seniors who must disseminate their savvy to the rest of the squad. Inexperience could be the bane of the Redmen in '69-'70.

"We'll be playing teams that do have experience, teams largely made up of juniors and seniors that could hurt our younger squad," says Canniff. "We've got to mold together in order to be on an equal footing with our more experienced opponents."

"In other words, our sophs are going to have play like juniors and seniors." Only time will tell if this materializes but in all probability the Redmen should reach this point in the latter half of their schedule, if not sooner.

In much the same vein, he quashes any discussion about UMass hockey going big-time. Realist Canniff concedes the possibility but notes that it will take several years. One promising team does not transform UMass into a national power.

What is needed is a rink, a Division I schedule which will take several years to compile, and several years of solid hockey players. "Not until then," says Canniff, "can we even think about using the term big-time. We have to build a winning tradition too."

How about this team - how does it shape up? "Right now, we have four lines of which we can skate three, two sets of defensemen and three goalies." Positions to date, are still up for grabs and there may be some changes, especially in view of injuries to two players.

At the moment, Dan Reidy is centering on a line with Jack Edwards and Charlie Donovan. Things could change quickly however as center John Hartnett and wing Bob Whelden should soon be recovered from injuries which have impaired their progress.

Canniff is particularly preturbed at the fact that Whelden was slow to round into form before incurring a knee injury during a scrimmage at Boston College which has impeded him even more.

Eric Scrafield, alias 'the Red Baron', centers the checking line with Bryan 'Mad Dog' Sullivan and Ed Reilly skating the wings. This line has been impressive to date, lending its due share to the point totals.

Dennis Grabowski centers the other key line with Mike Waldron and Bill McMann who played defense last year but has been shifted to forward because of his skating ability and hard shot. Canniff expects this trio to do a lot of scoring.

Bob Madore centers the fourth line with John Morganto and Paul Riley. Madore and Riley skated on the first line a year ago while Morganto is a handy player who can play anywhere.

Bob Bartholomew and Doug Powling, and Ken Steeves and Al Nickerson will man the blue line spots. Bartholomew and Powling are steady players who are always in the right spot and are tough to score on. Steeves is a big, strong skater while Nickerson is an aggressive hard hitter with a good shot.

Mike Murray is the spare defenseman with McMann and Sullivan also available for duty if Canniff so chooses.

There are three competent goal tenders vying for the lone spot. Larry Walsh brings his blood and guts style back from last year's squad. He's been known to stop flying pucks with the bridge of his nose. Bruce Crawford does not have as much hockey experience as some of the other Redmen but he has a good attitude and sharp reflexes.

P.J. Flaherty is the biggest mystery. He has tremendous hockey sense and ability but has been painfully slow to round into form. Canniff frankly admits that this has greatly annoyed him.

Canniff feels that if the Redmen don't fall completely apart they should be able to hold their own in face of a pretty competitive schedule. Such foes as Hamilton, Bowdoin, Division II champ AIC, Merrimac, Brown and UNH will certainly be tough.

The psychology of coaching won't allow John Canniff to say such things, but this could be the year that UMass finally gives these teams a tough tussle. Don't bet against it.

All Players Together Spell Success

No one person determines the success of a basketball team, or of any other team for that matter. Strike up the band! Clash the cymbals! And shout it loud and clear! Success is a team effort, folks! Ta da! Hurray!.....Big deal, everybody knows that! Right?

Hopefully right, but most certainly right in the case of Coach Jack Leaman's '69-70 Redman hoop team. Everyone does his part under the Leaman system and, in the past two years, it has spelled success. It should again this year. The following are profiles of the individual players who make up the complete unit, the UMass Redmen.

RAY ELLERBROOK No. 12
6'1-;90 Senior

A unanimous All-Yankee Conference guard as a junior last year, the Redman captain is known for his pretty left-handed pop shots from long ranges which pour through the nets in an abundance of hot streaks.

Ellerbrook has been a star now for two seasons, during which time he has tallied 611 points to rank 11th on the UMass career list. He scored 432 of those last winter for a fine 18 point average, best in both categories for the Redmen.

A likable performer because of his hustle, Ellerbrook took home the Sportsmanship Trophy at the Evansville Christmas tourney last year. In ten games he topped the 20-point barrier with highs of 31 and 27 against Maine and Tennessee Tech.

DENNIS CHAPMAN No. 40
5'3-212 Senior

A transfer of two years ago from Baltimore Junior College, Chapman quickly won recognition last year when he came off the bench to help push the Redmen past early season opponents, Rhode Island and UConn.

He then graduated to a starting berth and put forth good efforts all season long, including his 22-point performance in UMass big win over Fordham. An accurate outside shooter, Chapman hit double figures in 13 contests and finished a fine junior year with 231 points for an 11.3 average and 133 rebounds for a 7.6 average.

KEN MATHIAS No. 42
6'7-200 Junior

As a sophomore Mathias started at forward but will be moved to center to take up where departed Peter Gayeska left off. With that one big season under his belt, he could develop into one of the best and most consistent players in New England.

He canned 251 points in '68-69 for a solid 10.5 average; his rebounding average was 8.9 as he hauled down 214 over the course of the year. Mathias also hit double figures on 12 occasions and had a big 13-point, 16-rebound game in UMass 61-57 overtime conquest of Navy.

JULIUS ERVING No. 32
6'5-185 Sophomore

With tremendous body control and jumping ability, Erving has that special ability to excite crowds. As a frosh, he hit for 273 points for an 18.2 average; his 214 rebounds came at a 14.2 per game clip. Both marks were frosh highs as Erving helped lead the talented freshmen to a 15-0 record.

He had an impressive 51% shooting average from the field and recorded 31, 29 and 26 points in games against Chamberlayne, Rockwood and Amherst. His best effort came in a key away tilt with Dartmouth. He scored 22 points, grabbed 22 rebounds, had eight assists, eight blocked shots and 5 steals.

JACK GALLAGHER No. 24
6'4-190 Senior

Seeing most of his action in reserve roles, Gallagher has started at times but, regardless of the role, has always given his best. Leaman will again count heavily on the veteran senior to come off the bench and do his part. Over two seasons, Gallagher has scored 124 points and has nabbed 98 rebounds.

DICK SAMUELSON No. 44
6'6-196 Senior

Like Gallagher, Samuelson has priceless experience as a reserve after two years of backing up Gayeska. He tends to alternate between adequate and spectacular and, with two full years behind him, should be more consistent. His rebounding and point totals over two seasons stand at 180 and 216 respectively.

JOHN BETANCOURT No. 10
5'11-170 Sophomore

A shining frosh guard last year, Betancourt teamed with Mike Pagliara to form a most potent backcourt tandem. He compiled a fine 13.7 average with 206 points for the season and broke double figures 13 times.

A good outside shooter who can handle the ball well, he shot 45% from the field and 73% from the line and was extremely cool under pressure.

MIKE PAGLIARA No. 14
5'10-Sophomore

In watching Pagliara and Betancourt lead the powerful freshmen last year, one could not be distinguished from the other; both play the same type of game and both play it well. Pagliara handles the ball well and can shoot with accuracy, as his 52% from the field and 70% from the line testify.

He totaled 205 points and had 22 against AIC, and 21 against Rhode Island, Dartmouth and St. Anselm's. Like Betancourt, Pagliara is calm in the clutch.

RICH VOGELEY No. 30
6'5-194 Sophomore

Another talented sophomore, Vogeley will see plenty of action as a vital cog in the UMass basketball machine. Leading his list of credentials is the 36-point performance he turned in against Rockwood to set a new frosh scoring mark. He was in the double figures categories in 11 other games last winter on his way to scoring a total of 231 points.

An excellent shooter, he hit on 52% and 81% of his shots from the field and the line. He is also a solid rebounder, brabbing 119 caroms as a frosh.

BOB DEMPSEY No. 22
6'-175 Junior

Playing in the absence of injured Joe DiSarcina for seven games last year, Demsey gained valuable experience running the ball club as UMass won six of those encounters. A sure-fisted fallhandler, he adds depth to the backcourt.

BILL GREELEY No. 20
5'9-174 Junior

As a sophomore, Greeley played the same reserve role that he will be counted on to fill again this year. Like Dempsey, he adds depth to an already deep backcourt.

CHRIS COFFIN No. 54
6'5-185 Sophomore

As a freshman, Coffin put in a lot of playing time at forward and center and will move up to a reserve role with the varsity.

TOM AUSTIN No. 52
6'8-183 Sophomore

Playing center on the frosh squad, Austin gained valuable experience and will be counted on for reserve strength as a sophomore.

BILL KESGEN No. 50
6'5-210 Sophomore

A foot injury prevented him from playing a great deal for the frosh, but he has the ability to be a key reserve for the varsity.

SAM PROVO No. 34
6'-178 Sophomore

Yet another guard, Provo has yet to be heard from, but that situation shouldn't persist as he is an exceptional shooter with a good basketball head on his shoulders.

JOHN SAGE 6'4-200 Junior

A transfer from the Naval Academy, Sage will provide bench strength at forward, an already strong position.

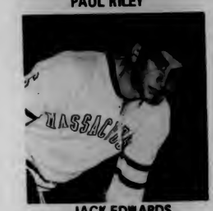
Up and Coming Redmen Show Their Profiles

PAUL RILEY



JACK EDWARDS

DAN REIDY

MIKE WALDRON

JOHN HARTNETT

BRUCE CRAWFORD

Coach Jack Canniff looks to his third hockey season at UMass with some of the best talent that has ever graced the confines of Orr Rink. Who are these daredevils on blades? Who are these icemen who dare to challenge the titans of eastern hockey? For the thrilling answer, read on:

CENTERS

JOHN HARTNETT No. 4

A fine all around player, John is probably best noted for his play making ability. Although he was out part of last year with injuries, Hartnett still managed to score 10 goals and lead the team in assists with 15. This year he is centering for Bob Whelden and Jack Edwards, the leading scorers from last year's frosh team.

ERIC SCRAFIELD No. 15

"The Red Baron", as he is nicknamed, is the first Canadian to play varsity hockey at UMass. Scrafield, a member of Coach Canniff's "Muscle Line", is a good defensive player and hard checker. A student of the game, he is adept at setting up his wings with numerous scoring opportunities.

DENNIS GRABOWSKI No. 21

Rated by his team-mates as the best two-way player on the team, Grabowski has shown every indication of living up to this claim. Centering for wings Mike Waldron and Bill McMann, he has made the "GO-GO" line a potential scoring threat every time it takes to the ice.

DAN REIDY No. 18

"Mr. Hustle" is the first image that pops up in your mind when you see Dan play. Whether setting up his wings or forechecking opposing centers, Reidy puts out 110%. This year he is acting as a swing center, able to fill in on any of the three lines, in case of emergency. His presence gives Canniff a feeling of security with the knowledge that he has a center of Reidy's ability waiting in the wings.

DEFENSEMEN

BOB BARTHOLOMEW No. 11

The thinking man's defenseman, Barts rarely makes a mistake. A natural leader, he takes charge when he is on the ice. This year he is teaming with Doug Powling to give UMass the finest defensive tandem in history and probably one of the finest in New England.

DOUG POWLING No. 16

Powling's value to the team is indicated by the amount of ice time he gets. Not only does he take a regular turn on defense, but he plays on the power play and kills penalties. Last year, he had 10 points on 1 goal and nine assists.

AL NICKERSON No. 12

Al possesses one of the hardest shots in the league, and is developing into a fine rushing defenseman. Beside his offensive capability, Al is one of the best checkers on the team and gives a good account of himself along the boards.

KEN STEEVES No. 3

Ken, like his defensive partner Al Nickerson, is a rushing defenseman. At 6'1 and over 200 lbs., when he comes charging out of his own end opponents scatter. Only a sophomore, Ken has excellent potential and could develop into a great one.

WINGS

JOHN SULLIVAN No. 17

One of the fastest skaters on the team, Sully can play both wing and defense. Nicknamed "Mad Dog", John is the most aggressive player on the team, never passing up an opportunity to check an opposing player.

EDDIE RILEY No. 9

"Fast Eddie" is the third member of the muscle line. This year he has seemingly put it all together. Counting the two pre-season scrimmages and last week's game against Lowell Tech, Eddie scored five goals.

MIKE WALDRON No. 5

"Mr. Johnny on the Spot", whenever there is a loose puck in front of the nets Mike always seems to be there ready to knock in the rebound. A member of the "Go-Go" line, Mike also takes a regular turn on the power play.

WILLIAM McMANN No. 8

Bill is probably the best all-round wing on the team. Converted from defense to forward this year, he should easily improve on his total of eight goals and nine assists last year.

KEN STEVENS

PAT FLAHERTY

JACK EDWARDS No. 19

Jack is a potential scoring threat anytime he handles the puck inside the offensive zone. Last year as a freshman he scored a short-handed goal while two of his teammates were in the penalty box.

BOB WHELDON No. 14

Last year the "Golden Jet" led the freshman in goals scored. Hobbled early this year with a knee injury, he is expected to return soon giving added scoring punch to the Redman offense.

CHARLES DONOVAN No. 22

The fastest skater on the team, "Tough Charlie" has proven to be a valuable swing man for Coach Canniff. Last week he took a regular turn, subbing for the injured Bob Wheldon, and scored a goal and an assist.

PAUL RILEY No. 7

Paul is on the penalty killing unit this year. Last year, as a sophomore, Riley had twelve points on five goals and seven assists.

JOHN MORGANTO No. 2

Another member of the penalty killing unit, Jack has proven to be a valuable asset to the team. He can play both wing and center giving Coach Canniff added depth.

MICHAEL MURRAY No. 10

Mike can play both defense and wing. Last week he proved his value by substituting at both positions against Lowell Tech.

BOB MADORE No. 6

As a junior last year, Bob was the third leading scorer on the team with twenty points. This year he has been relegated to a swing forward, giving Coach Canniff a good back-up scoring threat.

Previewing a Tough Schedule . . . . . Looking at Key Hockey Foes

GAME 1 - PROVIDENCE
(See page 14)
GAME 2, 16 - VERMONT: COACH: ART LOCHE (5th year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 14-11. NICKNAME: CATAMOUNTS. Prospects: With veteran starters and good size, should have .500 season or better. Capsule preview: The Catamounts boast one of the Yankee Conference's best in top scorer senior Frank Martiniuk, a second team Yan-Con choice a year ago. The 6'3 sharpshooter averaged 19 points a year ago and, if he can become accustomed to his new role as playmaker, Vermont will score. He will be aided by 6'6 Ray Bueb, a strong forward, 6'6 sophomore Mark Miller who was the leading New England freshman rebounder a year ago, sophomore guard Ray Ortiz, veterans Ray Greenman and Bob Zeiff, both guards, 6'7 Aldo Salati and 6'2 Tom Clay.

GAME 3, 19 - RHODE ISLAND. COACH: TOM CARMODY (2nd year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 10 - 15. NICKNAME: RAMS. Prospects: A veteran team that that finished strong, will be further bolstered by talented transfers and sophomores, and should be a strong contender for the Conference title. Capsule Preview: The Rams will be led by forward John Fultz, an All-New England forward who averaged 23 points a year ago, and is a deadly shooter. He will have a lot of help up front in the person of transfer Nate Adger, a 6'5 junior All-American who averaged 29 points, returning veterans Al Hazard and Ron Louder, both 6'7, Claude English 6'4, and sophomore Phil Hickson. The backcourt will be led by Ed Molloy, Mike Beals, Bob Garfield and another J.C. transfer, Dwight Tolliver.

GAME 4, 24 - NEW HAMPSHIRE. COACH: GERRY FRIEL (1st year) LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 9-15. NICKNAME: WILDCATS. Prospects: A new coach, large group of veterans and a good crop of sophomores could bring Wildcats to .500 mark. Capsule Preview: Paul Shepard, a 17 point scorer a year ago, leads the returning veterans, that includes center Frank Davis, forwards Jeff Bannister and Phil Blum and guard Brian Horan. Among the highly regarded sophomores are 20 point scorer 6'3 Dave Pemberton, 6'2 Mike McCurry, a 15 point frosh scorer, 6'1 Dwight Peters and 6'4 Tom Weir. UNH, though, lacks height to make a serious run at the Conference leaders.

GAME 5, 18 - CONNECTICUT. COACH: DEE ROWE (1st year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 5-19. NICKNAME: HUSKIES. Prospects: Huskies are still rebuilding under a new coach, and should improve from a year ago. Capsule Preview: Dee Rowe will try to build UConn back to their formerly held position of New England supremacy. He has some returnees back that should help. Included among these are Bob Staak, a 17 point scorer last year, 6'6 Ron Hrubala who averaged 16 points, Bob Boyd, a 12 point scorer, Tony Budzinsky, who averaged 11, and John Crisp, who is returning from a year's ineligibility. Top sophomores include 6'7 Tauras Preikstas, Jim Jachym, Paul Zorsky and Doug Melody. The Huskies rugged schedule that includes the Quaker City Tournament, and major Eastern powers will hamper the rebuilding process.

GAME 6 - AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL. COACH BILL CALLAHAN (16th year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 21-4. NICKNAME: YELLOW JACKETS. Prospects: AIC is entrenched a s a college division power, and last year's 3rd place national finish could conceivably be matched. Capsule Preview: AIC was hurt by the loss of two of last year's starters who were expected to return, forward Curtis Mitchell and center Al Carter. However, they still have a bulk of excellent talent. The veterans include Little All-American Greg Hill, a 6'3 forward, and guards Bob Rutherford and Alan Bush. However the starriest product could be sophomore Mike White, who averaged 33 points as a frosh. Another sophomore to watch will be 6'5 George Kastrinakis.

GAME 7, 8 - GEM CITY BOWL, ERIE, PENN. (UMass, Gannon, Catholic Univ. and Lehigh).
GANNON is a former NAIA small college power and now in the NCAA, coached by Denny Bayer in his eighth season. Last year, the Golden Knights were 24-6. Gannon is big up front, with 6'8 Glenn Summers leading the way, along with 6'7 Ron Johnson and 6'8 Al Cristman joining him. The guards include Bob Baker and Rick Uritus, plus a highly-regarded sophomore Harry McLaughlin.

CATHOLIC U. was 10-15 a year ago and is coached by first year coach Bob Reese. The Cardinals athletic director is former Maine coach Brian McCall.

LEHIGH, 7-17 a year ago, will be improved under fourth-year coach Roy Heckman, with sophomores from the best freshman team in school history. Among them is guard Mike Drew a 15-point scorer, 6'7 Greg Falkenbach. They will join 6'5 veteran forward Bob Fortune, who averaged almost 19 rebounds a game last season and backcourtmen John Waters and Scott Betten.

DENNIS CLARK
Springfield

GAME 9 - PENNSYLVANIA. COACH: DICK HARTER (5th year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 15-10. NICKNAME: QUAKERS. Prospects: Returning veterans and a great crop of sophomores point to an Ivy League title, and ranking among the best in the East. Capsule Preview: The Quakers lost no one from last year's fine squad and the freshmen were 21-0. Leading the returnees are All-Ivy pick Dage Wohl, guard Steve Bilsky, 6'8 Jim Wolf. The crop of sophs that will probably provide the rest of the starters are led by 6'5 Corky Calhoun, one of the most highly rated sophs in the East, 6'8 Bob Morse, and 6'5 Al Cotler. Penn is loaded and are almost a unanimous pick for Ivy and Eastern honors.

GAME 10 - FORDHAM. COACH: ED CONLIN (2nd year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 17-9. NICKNAME: RAMS. Prospects: A tough schedule will make Fordham hard-pressed to match the season it had a year ago. But a deep and experienced squad could accomplish it. Capsule Preview: Conlin will have a starting line of veterans led by 6'2 Charlie Yelverton, 6'5 Bob Kellert, along with 6'2 Bill Malnor, John Burik, and Ken Crusius. Leading the sophs are 6'5 George Zambetti, and 6'4 Tom Sullivan. Fordham is playing, this season, tough new opponents like Detroit, Princeton and Niagra, so another NIT berth could be tough to attain.

GAME 11 - IONA. COACH: JAMES MCDERMOTT (23rd year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 11-11. NICKNAME: GAELS. Prospects: Injuries destroyed the Gaels a year ago, but Iona returns with mostly veterans and could improve themselves. Capsule Preview: The big returnee will be 6'7 Bill Mc Gruggins who missed all of last year, along with Ned O'Connell who will return to the backcourt. Al Kindelman also is back, and he, along with 6'4 Art Wiggins, were the two leading team rebounders. Jim Quinn, Bob O'Connor and John Gorman are all vieing for a backcourt berth.

GAME 12 - BOSTON UNIVERSITY. COACH: CHARLIE LUCE (4th year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 14-10. NICKNAME: TERRIERS. Prospects: A large group of veterans brighten things, but the lack of a big man could hurt. Capsule Preview: B.U. is led by an outstanding star, 6'4 guard Jim Hayes, who is an All-American candidate and one of the finest shooters in the country. Hayes averaged 25 points and was All-East. Veterans in the frontcourt include hatchetman Marty Schoepfer and 6'5 John Hassan. Hassan's brother Rick leads the sophomore group that includes 6'1 Lou Graham.

KEN CRUSIUS
Fordham

GAME 13 - NORTHEASTERN. COACH: DUKE DUKESHIRE (12th year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 16-5. NICKNAME: HUSKIES. (No information).

GAME 14 - BOSTON COLLEGE. COACH: CHUCK DALY (1st year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 24-4. NICKNAME: EAGLES. Prospects: B.C. will have to go some to match last year's banner season and the losses of Terry Driscoll and Bill Evans will be tough ones to fill. However, the Eagles have loads of excellent talent and should be among the best in New England. Capsule Forecast: New coach Daly will build his squad around guard Jim O'Brian, one of the best, forward Tom Veroneau, and sharpshooter Bob Duklet, returning from a year's absence due to injury along with Frank Fitzgerald, Vin Costello, and Greg Sees. Sophomores include Pete Schmid, Joe Phelan, and Dan Metzler.

GAME 15 - RIDER. COACH: JOHN CARPENTER (4th year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 11-14. NICKNAME: BRONCS. Prospects: All starters are returning for Rider and, coupled with fine sophs and transfers, it should be an improved year for the Broncs. Capsule Preview: 6'2 guard Rich Wallace, who led Rider in scoring a year ago, and Ed Wenker, the leading rebounder a year past, will lead the veterans. Among the newcomers are Villanova transfer Gene Kelly, 6'6 Steve Jefferson, 6'3 Barry Spears and 6'4 transfer Bill Katz.

GAME 17 - HOLY CROSS. COACH: JACK DONAHUE (5th year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 16-8. NICKNAME: CRUSADERS. Prospects: A group of excellent returnees and fine sophomores make the talented Crusaders favorites for New England supremacy. Capsule Preview: Holy Cross has a huge gap to fill in the person of Ed Siudet, but otherwise the Crusaders are set. Big Jim Kissane, a 6'8 forward, and 6'8 Don Sasso lead the frontcourt while talented ballhandler Jack Adams will lead the backcourt. Sophomore sharpshooter Buddy Venne will probably start in the backcourt while another fine soph, Stan Grayson will start in the frontcourt.

GAME 20 - SPRINGFIELD. COACH: ED BILIK (4th year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 16-9. NICKNAME: CHIEFS. Prospects: Four returnees and some sophs could help, but Springfield will be hard-put to match last season. Capsule Forecast: George Yelverton will be the big gun in the frontcourt, but the big Chief star is Dennis Clark and sharpshooting guard who will serve this year as playmaker also. Steve Waterman is another fine returnee as is Dana Anderson. Among the outstanding sophs are Brad Macomber and Jud Hunt.

GAME 21, 23 - MAINE. COACH: GIB PHILBRICK (2nd year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 10-13. NICKNAME: BLACK BEARS. Prospects: Losing their leading scorer and rebounder, the Bears may be in for a tough year. Capsule Preview: Three key returnees are Dennis Stanley and Bob Chandler up front, and Marshall Todd, 6'5 Craig Randall, ineligible last year along with sophomore John Sterling will help.

GAME 22 - ST. ANSELM'S: COACH: AL GRENERT (21st year). LAST YEAR'S RECORD: 13-9. NICKNAME: HAWKS. Prospects: The Hawks will have to adjust to the loss of star Jerry McLean to improve, and have the necessary talent to do it. Capsule Preview: St. Anselm's will be more balanced with Dave Sturma, 6'7 pivotman, being the key, along with sophomore Gerry Ryle, Gerry Flynn and forward Mike Mulligan. Jim Dunlay and Kevin Fitzgerald will also help.

UMass hockey faces a demanding 18 game schedule that will certainly provide a strong indication of what the 'New Era' Redmen are capable of doing. For better or for worse, the 1969-1970 season should show just how far the burgeoning UMass hockey program has progressed.

There are many interesting match-ups on tap but five games against Norwich, Hamilton, AIC, Brown and UNH could well be the keys to the verdict.

Yves DeRome(l) and Mike Eboroff (l) are AIC hockey scoring leaders.

On Dec. 13, UMass travels to Northfield, Vt. for a game with Norwich University. Last year the cadets fought all the way to the Division II finals before losing to AIC, 7-6, on a last-minute goal.

15 lettermen are returning from that club so coach Bob Priestley has quite a lot to look forward to. Included in that total are last year's top goal scorer and point producer.

Captain Jon Vlachos will center the first line with Paul Poirier and Dave Hunt at the wings. Last year this line accounted for 32 goals and 76 points and was also the top defensive line.

Jim Grip, the MVP and top scorer with 32 points centers the second line with Dick Malo and Jim Tait who led the squad with 15 goals.

Defensively, Mike Gately, Mark Callahan, Al Doyle, Dick Howard, Bill Reardon and Bill Coffeen are all back for another run at the roses.

Hamilton College arrives at Orr Rink on Jan. 28 with some potent scorers and reliable defensers. The Continentals feel they have a good shot at the Division II title.

Returning from last year is Pete Kennedy who scored 27 goals and 40 assists to rank second in the division. Teaming with him will be the coach's son, Greg Batt Jr. He ranked third in the division with 29 goals.

Defense was a weakness last year but the feeling is that the three key returnees, Bob Peach, Jerome Montieth and Dave McCart will be a year better and a year wiser. Senior Kevin Kennedy will plug the goal.

On Valentine's Day, UMass travels to AIC for what hopefully will not be a massacre. The Yellow Jackets with 11 lettermen appear to be loaded as they are coming off a Division II title and only some problems of readjustment on defense could hinder them.

Captain Yves DeRome and Dave Forbes (the Quebec Kids) provide tremendous offensive power. They combined for 110 points last year and will get help from Mike Egoroff, a 17 goal scorer whose late minute tally beat Norwich for the championship.

Goalie is no problem with four solid prospects to choose from but three sophs must quickly supply some good defense behind the blue line to make AIC into what could be an unbeatable combination.

The Yellow Jackets will get a quick indication of just how good they will be when they play seven of their first eight games on the road. AIC coach Bill Turner is optimistic.

One week later, the Redmen travel to Providence for what figures to be a big game with always tough Brown University. The Bruins have a peculiar mixture of 11 seniors and 11 sophomores.

These seniors, however are well distributed on a position basis and coupled with those sophs, up from a 13-4 frosh squad should produce a pretty strong squad.

Curt Bennett, a defenseman last year, has been shifted to forward where his offensive abilities can best be put to use. He figures to be the key Bruin. The presence of four other senior defensemen facilitated the change.

Don McGinnis, one of the East's top goalies a year ago is back as are nine solid forwards including captain Bob Fleming.

UNH provides the opposition on Feb. 27 at Orr Rink for what should be a grudge match. The Wildcats have lost several key men from last year's 22-7-1 squad but figure to be tough once again.

Top scorer Lou Frigon returns as does four other top forwards and three solid defensemen. The goalie job is still up for grabs, but Larry Smith has the inside track.

Hockey 1968-69

The UMass hockey team concluded its second season under the reins of Jack Caniff with one of its best seasons ever, tying a Redman record for most wins in a season and showing definite improvement over last year's 4-14 team.

In the nine wins that UMass piled up during the year, the biggest surprises were the pair of 4-3 wins over Middlebury and Bowdoin in the early part of the season. Also, UMass played close games with annual Division II powerhouses Norwich and Colby, losing by a narrow one goal margin to each of them.

As usual, the season was split into two parts by the Christmas vacation, finals and intersession. UMass played 11 games in the first part of the season and then had a month layoff before completing its schedule with 10 games. This kind of a schedule makes for some bad playing dates as the Redmen played four games in four days just after Christmas.

The first half of the season was an up and down affair as the Redmen split their first 10 games winning five and losing five. However, a six game losing streak at the start of the second part of the season finished any chances the Redmen had for a 500 season.

UMass got off to a flying start as they pounded new opponent Lowell Tech, 11-2 at Orr rink. Charlie Hanifan with a hat trick and Bob Madore with two goals led the UMass attack.

The Redmen proved that they would be no pushover as they gave Colby a scare before bowing 2-1 at the Mules home rink. Colby later moved into the ECAC Division II post-season tournament but were beaten by eventual champ AIC.

UMass returned to the friendly confines of Orr rink and added to the losing streak of Amherst by a 4-0 score. Larry Walsh had 18 saves in recording his only shutout of the campaign.

Vermont dropped into Orr rink for their first meeting of the year and downed the Redmen 6-3. John Hartnett was the star for UMass with two goals. UMass bounced back on the winning track with a thrilling 4-3 upset of Bowdoin as Jim O'Brien scored the hat trick.

GOAL TIME - Mad Dog Sullivan flips a goal under the elbow of a sprawling goalie during a recent scrimmage.

AIC proved to be too strong for the Redmen as they beat UMass 6-1 at Orr rink. In that game, UMass was down only by 1-0 with five minutes to go in the second period but the Yellow Jackets showed their offensive power that was to make them Division II champions in the final twenty minutes.

UMass continued to play at a .500 clip as they edged Middlebury, 4-3 in a thriller at home. Hartnett with two goals and Tom Babson with the winner were the stars.

UMass moved into the tough part of its schedule with the playing of the Yankee Conference at Vermont just after Christmas. In the first round, the Redmen ran into nemesis Vermont and lost, 4-1. However, UMass took consolation honors the next night by beating UConn 7-3.

UMass had a long road trip to make as they moved into the Boston Arena the night after the UConn game for the Cod Fish Bowl tournament. After the long trip, the Redmen were tired and got bombed by Boston State. In the consolation game the next night, UMass gave a credible performance in a 3-1 loss to Bowdoin despite playing their fourth game in four nights.

After a month long layoff, the Redmen skaters were rusty and dropped their next four games to Penn., Army, Vermont and Williams. UMass broke the six game losing skein in a convincing 12-3 trouncing of hapless Amherst. Tom Babson and Bob Madore paced the attack with hat tricks.

The Redmen continued their high scoring ways as they dumped UConn, 7-1, at Storrs. Hartnett and Babson had two goals apiece. The skaters continued to roll as they battered Holy Cross, 13-2, piling up their highest score of the season. Jeff Sanborn led the onslaught with a hat trick while nine other UMass players turned on the red light.

The three game win streak was broken by Norwich as they nipped the Redmen, 7-6 after UMass led 4-1 after the first period. Norwich used this game as a springboard into the Division II tournament which they lost in the finals to AIC, 7-6.

UMass gained its ninth and final victory of the year with a 9-1 triumph over Holy Cross in Worcester. A seven goal second period clinched this game for UMass as they tied a 38 year record for most wins in a season. The Redmen tried to gain their tenth victory at New Hampshire in the season finale but the tournament bound Wildcats defeated UMass, 7-0, before 3,500 cheering fans.

Several individual records were set during the season. Jeff Sanborn became the top man on the career scoring list with 81 points on 41 goals and 40 assists. The 40 assists is also a record.

Depth, Size Keys for Success As Little Redmen Open Season

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Staff Reporter

With a very tough act to follow, the UMass frosh basketball team opens its season tonight with a game against New Haven College at 6 p.m. in the Cage. The Little Redmen open their tough eighteen schedule with hopes of following in the footsteps of last year's frosh which finished its memorable season undefeated and ranked as the top frosh team in New England.

Dennis Chapman barely gets off a shot over an unidentified defender in action from last season.

Coach Peter Broaca intends to start 6'7 Chuck Peters at center. Peters is a graduate of Masconomet Regional High School and averaged eighteen points a game as a senior. Also starting in the forecourt will be Andre Polly and Mark Starr. Polly averaged fourteen points at Vienna, H.S. in Virginia while Starr got fifteen points a game at Acton-Boxboro. Backing up the starters, Coach Broaca has Chuck Olsen and Tom King. A native of Ramsey, N.J., Olsen had an average of eighteen points. King attended Boston Latin High school and scored nineteen points a game as a senior.

Starting in the backcourt for the Little Redmen will be Mike Polakoff and either Ed Carney or Mike McSharry. Carney is 5'11 and a graduate of Mount St. Michael H.S. in Bronx, N.Y. As a senior at Abington H.S. in Abington, Mass., McSharry averaged nineteen points per game. Also, likely to see a great deal of action at either guard or forward is Bob Kalbfell who scored thirteen points per game also at Mount St. Michael's.

Rounding out the squad are Scott Golden, a forward, from White Plains, N.Y., Paul Kress, Joe Kurpiewski, and Tom White, a graduate of Amherst H.S. who netted nineteen a game as a senior. All are likely to see action, especially early in the season, as Coach Broaca attempts to size up his squad. With the depth and scoring power which this squad seems to have, Coach Broaca appears on his way to another highly successful season.

Once again the Little Redmen face an extremely tough schedule. Among their opponents this season are Boston College and Holy Cross, two teams which are annual basketball powerhouses in New England.

The frosh will also meet Rockwood Academy twice this year. Rockwood proved to be the toughest test for the frosh last year and are likely to be equally strong this season. The season opens with five straight home games against New Haven, Westfield State J.V.'s, Rhode Island, Amherst, and Connecticut.

FAILURE

You'll never get anywhere without it.

Nothing helps a young engineer's career like being given a challenge. Which is another way of saying a chance to fail now and then. To make his own mistakes.

At Western Electric we give our newly recruited engineers responsibility almost immediately. They make their own decisions. Learn from their own errors.

Don't get us wrong. We keep our demands reasonable enough so that our recruits can make their decisions at their own pace. But our thinking is, a man feels awfully good about even a small decision when it's his.

If you're the type who'd like the chance to make your own moves, see our recruiter or write College Relations, 222 Broadway, New York, N. Y. 10038.

A lot of hard work never hurt anyone.

1968-69 Big Year for UMass Hoopsters

"I said this would be our greatest team and they have gone ahead and proved they were best." Thus did UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman sum up his team's 17-7 Yankee Conference title season.

However, the third year Redman mentor, who has compiled a 42-32 record to put him third on the all-time school coaching listings, could not help sounding a bit disappointed and bitter about his team's absence from the National Invitational Tourney.

"We set our goal at the start of the season as being the sole Conference champions," Leaman went on, "and we accomplished that. I also thought we could win 16 games and the team exceeded that. It was just a terrific job."

The Redmen broke fast from the gate this season with successive wins over Rider, A.I.C., Vermont, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Connecticut and Maine. While none could be considered upsets, the road victories at Vermont, Connecticut and Maine, always trouble spots for visitors, plus having five Conference wins quickly under the belt, were encouraging signs.

Big performances in this stretch were a 21 point performance by Ken Mathias in his first varsity performance, Ray Ellerbrook's 24 against A.I.C. and what would be a season high output of 31 against Maine, Dennis Chapman's performance against Rhode Island and Peter Gayeska's steady double figure outputs.

Three of these first seven wins were played without Joe DiSarcina, who was absent due to a family death. However, the Redman co-captain returned against Maine, and set a school assist record with 15 setups in the Redmen's only 100 point ballgame.

However, things suddenly turned sour, as UMass entered what Leaman called "the low point of the season." Vacation period proved disasterous for the Redmen as they lost two games in the Evansville Christmas Tourney, one a single point overtime defeat to Tennessee Tech. Ellerbrook was honored with the Sportsmanship Award in the tourney.

UMass then came to Boston during intersession and lost to Boston University, in what proved to be the roughest game of the year and bowed to Northeastern in a tight struggle. Leaman said of these losses, "The time we were away from practice because of exams and the holidays took away our edge. You take away those four games and a great season would have been a lot greater."

But basketball, just like all sports is a game of momentum and from the low point, the Redmen rose to their high point. They traveled to Providence to meet the always tough Friars and won with their finest performance in years. Gayeska was especially strong in this encounter.

The return to a record Cage crowd of 5500, saw UMass crush nationally ranked Fordham by 13. The final score was misleading. They should have won by more. Chapman had maybe his finest ballgame in this one leading all scorers with 22. A week of success continued with a road romp over Syracuse.

Thus the stage was set for the biggest tilt in years, a battle for New England supremacy with Boston College. UMass stayed close all the way, and led on several occasions, but with Gayeska sidelined with fouls the Eagles moved away and won, virtually camping on the foul line in the closing minutes.

A costly win came next as the Redmen defeated Vermont but lost the indispensible DeSarcina for what would be almost a month. His absence showed in a decisive defeat at the hands of an overpowering Holy Cross five, however, it was here in the next weeks, that the team proved its worth.

Playing without their leader, the now tourney-hungry five rolled to five straight wins, including a big road win at Navy. Leaman said of these wins, "We won these games without Joey and the guys who did the job were John Shockro, Bill Greeley, Bob Dempsey and Dick Starsiak. They filled in when they were needed and helped out at a crucial time."

Then a great season was shadowed by a one point loss to Rhode Island. It was a tough one to take. The defeat snapped a 13 game conference win streak, ended hopes for an undefeated conference season, dispelled hopes of a new school win record and by all future events, destroyed hopes for a N.I.T. berth.

The season, an excellent and successful season, ended in the ludicrous setting of Durham, N.H., as 90 people watched the curtain close on UMass' finest basketball team.

Coach Leaman is blunt in his N.I.T. evaluation. "We were slighted. I think we deserved it what with our 17 wins, and a major conference title. But things like this, run into politics I guess, and involve things other than basketball. But I know this team deserved a chance to show what it could do."

The N.I.T. snub failed to dampen Leaman's enthusiasm for his team. When asked for any surprises, Leaman said, "Chapman was a pleasant surprise, especially in the middle of the season. Also, the overall steady play of Mathias was a welcome sight.

"And then of course there was Gayeska. He was simply unbelievable. He played as good as anyone in New England."

Leaman was not surprised by Ellerbrook, who led the team in scoring with an 18 point average, not to mean he took anything away from the classy southpaw. "I knew and everyone else knew that Ray was going to have a tremendous year and he disappointed no one," said Leaman.

The already mentioned Greeley, Shockro, Dempsey and Starsiak, plus the valuable relief work of Dick Samuelson, and the spot performances by John Dreyer, all combined for a team effort.

"Everyone picked up when he was needed," said Leaman, "and this has to be the greatest thing about the season. We lost Joey for 10 games. Dennis had some illness in the family that hampered him, but the rest of the team just picked up the slack."

The 1968-69 Redmen set many marks to be shot at by future teams. Their 17 wins tied a school record, while the nine Conference wins set a record. The squad set a new team record, shooting .453 per cent from the field. The team was outrebounded in only four games.

Maybe statistics could tell the story. Gayeska's .568 field goal percentage, a new record, his 15 points a game and 11 rebounds, Chapman came through with 11.3 while Mathias had 10.5. The incomparable De Sarcina averaged 8.5 and as usual paced in all assists, with eight a game.

But statistics aren't that important, if you believe the N.I.T. committee. So a UMass season that should still be in progress, but was stalled by selections of such teams as Fordham, ends. Well in a sense not, as Leaman will coach the New England all star game Sunday in Boston, with Gayeska and DiSarcina participants.

It sounds like there should be mourning because of the N.I.T snub. But just disappointment. And as good as this year was, as many as the thrills were, a look at the returning veterans, a peek at the freshman team, and the addition of some promising transfers, the best may be yet to come.

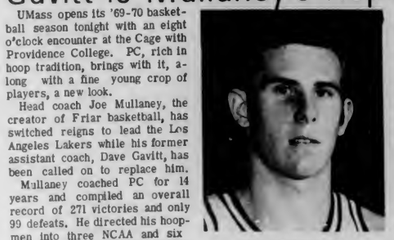
Redmen Host 'New Look' PC Tonight

Gavitt is Mullaney's Replacement, Heads Fine Crop of Players

UMass opens its '69-70 basketball season tonight with an eight o'clock encounter at the Cage with Providence College. PC, rich in hoop tradition, brings with it, along with a fine young crop of players, a new look.

Head coach Joe Mullaney, the creator of Friar basketball, has switched reigns to lead the Los Angeles Lakers while his former assistant coach, Dave Gavitt, has been called on to replace him.

Mullaney coached PC for 14 years and compiled an overall record of 271 victories and only 99 defeats. He directed his hoopmen into three NCAA and six NIT post-season tournaments and, in '61 and '63, the Friars copped NIT titles. He leaves a talent-laden squad in the capable hands of Gavitt.



JIM LARRANAGA

Gavitt, who was PC assistant and frosh basketball mentor three years ago before taking the head coaching job at Dartmouth for two seasons, heads a Friar unit that could really bloom into an Eastern power.

It is a team reminiscent of past PC winners, a lot of shooting and running and a sturdy defense. It is also a young unit with three seniors on the entire team, only one of whom will start.

Providence will show off its two high-scoring junior guards, Jim Larranaga, 6'4 and Vic Collucci, 6'2.

Larranaga was the team's top scorer last winter with a 19.5 average. His scoring and fine playmaking led to his selection to the NCAA District 1 All-Star Team. An accurate shooter, the Redmen will have to be wary of his long jumpers from 20 feet and beyond.

Another guy who throws up bombs from long distances is Collucci who, as a sophomore last year, tallied 36 points against national champion UCLA. He was second leading scorer on the Friar squad with a 15.4 average and canned 19 points in PC's 75-62 loss to UMass.

Seeing a lot of action as a reserve guard will be sophomore Don Lewis, 5'11. He was the second leading scorer on last year's frosh with a 17.5 average. The fourth guard will probably be 6'1 senior Walt Violand.

At center for Providence will likely be burly Ray Johnson, a 6'7-230 pound junior who was a starter all last year when he rebounded at a 10.4 clip. A bespecialed giant and hard worker, Johnson got his glasses smashed against the Redmen last season but stayed in the game and rambled on without them.

GARY WILKINS

Taking over one forward post will be the Friar captain Craig Callen, a 6'5 senior. A workhorse at his position, he can also move to center as a back-up for Johnson.

The other forward spot should be the personable property of 6'3 soph star Gary Wilkens. As a frosh Wilkens scored 571 points in 18 games for an impressive 31.7 average per game. His scoring mark is the second best in Providence freshman history; four times he scored over 40 points in frosh contests.

Providing adequate depth at forward are senior Dennis Walsh, 6'5, and soph Mike Hagen, 6'4.

Sixty-eight/sixty-nine was a rebuilding year for Providence. Gone were the days of Jim Walker, John Egan and Len Wilkens and the Friars were coming off an infrequent losing season. However, PC made considerable strides last winter as it compiled a 14-10 record even though its schedule included several teams of championship caliber - UCLA, St. John's, Duquesne, Villanova and Dayton. Thus PC enters tonight's fray with the same thoughts that the Redmen will be entertaining.. a winning campaign and a post-season tourney berth.

Coaches Sound Off On Own Teams and UM

One coach kids about already going to the NIT, another claims there is no such thing as a "Sports Illustrated jinx". Then there is the usual lament about the loss of key personnel from last year's team. And, of course, there is the line, "I just can't see how we can be as good as last year."

Providence invades Curry Hicks Cage tonight with a new coach, Dave Gavitt, and a starting line-up of all underclassmen. Juniors Ray Johnson, Jim Larranaga and Vic Collucci will lead the Friars.

Johnson, a 6'7 pivot man, has been impressive in pre-season drills. Larranaga will be moved up to forward this year. At 6'4 he lacks the power to be an outstanding rebounder, but he has the finesse which could compliment the rest of the team. Collucci, at 6'2, is a great shooting guard.

Sophs Gary Wilkens and Don Lewis will be the other starters. Wilkens was last year's leading frosh scorer in New England but at 6'3 he may find things tougher at the varsity level. Lewis is an outstanding leaper, and plays much bigger than 5'11.

Gavitt calls the opener, "the toughest first game I can remember in a long time." The former Dartmouth mentor added, "We'll have our troubles getting the ball off the boards this year and, if we don't control the boards, we'll have a lot of problems."

AIC is picked by Sports Illustrated as the Number 1 team in the College Division. Coach Bill Callahan is not in total accord with SI's opinion. "I don't think we should be rated first, but I guess someone has to be rated there. As far as a jinx is concerned, that's a lot of nonsense. It's what you do today that matters, not what someone wrote yesterday."

Callahan lost Al Carter and Curtis Mitchell from last year's squad even though both were eligible to play this year. To replace them he has sophs George Kastrinakis and Miks White. White, thus far, has looked woeful in practice, and will not start in the opener against North Adams State.

Greg Hill, a College Division All-American selection, will lead the returnees. Bob Rutherford and Alan Bush are the others that will make or break the Yellow Jackets chances.

Callahan has a lot of respect for the Redmen. "I know Jack is a good coach," he said, "and I know he has quite a team this year." he cautioned, "I don't feel that one game will necessarily prove that much, but we know we'll have to play real well to win."

B.C.'s Chuck Daly has the unenviable task of following Bob Cousy at the Heights. Daly also loses Terry Driscoll, the fourth pick in the NBA draft, and ace playmaker Billy Evans. The only thing to offset these losses is the return of Bob Dukiet. A top performer as a sophomore, Dukiet had to sit out last year with a bad knee.

"We're struggling," admits Daly, "and unless we get some offensive rebounding, we won't be nearly as good as last year." The Eagles are going with Frank Fitzgerald and Tom Veranneal in the pivot. Soph Pete Schmidt, currently bedded down, is also in contention for the berth.

Holy Cross has been given the top spot in the pre-season polls. Even though the Crusaders lost top scorer and rebounder Ed Siudut they still have three returning starters, and a equal number of sophs.

"We've got to beat them on the court and not in the newspapers, but I like our chances," admits Coach Jack Donahue. Donahue, through his summer camp, is familiar with UMass' Ray Ellerbrook, Julius Erving and Dennis Chapman, and respects them all.

In handicapping the New England race Donahue offered, "UMass, BC and Providence are all going to be tough, and Rhody won't drop dead for us, but we should have a good year if our youngsters pull through."

Some guys have all the problems.

Opener Last Tuesday . . .

Redmen Rout Lowell Tech, 9-3

NASHUA, N.H. - Sophomore Bob Bartholemew's first varsity goal at 4:10 of the second period broke open a 2-2 game, as UMass defeated Lowell Tech 9-3 last Tuesday night here in the season debut.

UMass dominated the play during the early minutes of the opening period. The inexperienced Tech team was unable to control the swift-skating Redmen. Lowell goalie Tom Girard made several fine stops during the opening moments, but the inevitable finally happened when the Redmen scored at 7:43.

Bartholomew started the play by passing the puck to Eric Scrafield at center ice. Scrafield went around a Lowell defenseman and fired a low, hard shot at the goal. Girard blocked the shot but wing John Sullivan took the rebound and quickly passed the puck to the other side of the crease. Left wing Ed Riley gathered in the pass and deposited the puck into the empty corner of the net.

Suddenly the Redmen stopped hitting and began to fool around with the puck too much. Lowell regained their poise and began to dominate the play. Utilizing the small size of the rink, Lowell employed a position style of hockey. Constantly they intercepted Redman passes and proceeded to dump the puck in the UMass zone.

Their perseverance finally paid off at 9:54 when Jim Bishop banged in a rebound shot past goalie Bruce Crawford. Twenty-four seconds later Bob Roy broke in on Crawford. He was unable to get off a hart shot but, as the puck was traveling towards the goal, it hit a piece of ice and bounced over Crawford's shoulder. The supposedly hapless Engineers now led UMass, 2-1.

Lowell continued to dominate play throughout the period but, at 19:11, Jack Edwards proceeded to come out of the penalty box and bang in a Dan Reidy rebound past the Lowell goalie. The period ended with UMass lucky to escape with a 2-2 tie.

The Redmen came out charging during the second period. Bartholomew scored the go-ahead goal at 4:10. Lowell was unable to get the puck out of their own end. Two minutes later Scrafield sent Riley in on Girard and Eddy scored his second goal of the night. UMass continued to exert pressure at 8:43 when Charlie Donovan scored a power-play goal.

The mighty Redmen had regained control of the game and turned it into a hopeless rout. Mike Waldron scored the sixth UMass goal when he parked himself in front of the Lowell net and waited for what seemed like eternity as Dennis Grabowski finally passed to Mike, who dropped it in the net. At the end of the second period, UMass led 6-2.

Coach John Canniff started employing four lines and replaced Crawford with goalie Larry Walsh. Lowell was still unable to mount any type of offense. It took them eight minutes before they were able to gain possession of the puck in the UMass zone. As a matter of fact, during the last two periods, Lowell only had possession of the puck for a mere ten minutes out of a possible 40.

Waldron scored his second goal off a Grabowski rebound at 1:17. At 9:18 UMass had a power play advantage. The Redmen quickly rifled four quick shots at Girard, who proceeded to make four you-can-open-your-eye-type saves now. Reidy finally ended the foolishness when he parked a high shot over Girard's shoulder. The game became a little sloppy as the Redmen completely outclassed the Engineers. John Mongan to scored the final UMass goal at 18:31.

Lowell finally managed a little offense as they riddled goalie Walsh with a bombardment of shots. To Larry's credit he stopped two breakaways and, on one particular play, stopped a shot at the left corner of the net and proceeded to block the rebound attempt at the right side of the net. But, at 9:56, Bishop scored his second goal for Lowell and the game ended, UMass 9, Lowell 3.

CRACKED ICE - Riley and Waldron ended with two goals for UMass. While Scrafield, Grabowski, Donovan, Reidy and Edwards each collected two points....Hard luck story of the night was Billy Mc Mahon who just couldn't seem to buy a goal although he had numerous opportunities....UMass had 49 shots-on-goal while Lowell could only manage 1?....Special thanks to colorman Pat Keenan, frosh hockey star from the Northland.

CAMPUS NEWS ROUNDUP

Professor To Speak In D.C.

By special invitation from the President of the United States, Prof. Louis S. Greenbaum of the University history department will attend a three-day White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health in Washington, D.C.

The conference, scheduled for Dec. 2,3 and 4, will bring together 2500 educators, scientists, medical and health professionals, representatives of agriculture and the food industry, government officials, and spokesmen for consumer and social-interest groups. The purpose is to lead the way to a national nutrition policy, and top priority will be given to recommendations for action on proposals to end hunger and malnutrition among the poor.

The program will deal with the health and diet of the American population, improving nutrition of vulnerable and depressed groups, the technology of food production, the role of education, and ways to improve federal programs that affect nutrition.

Dr. Greenbaum, a specialist in French Church history, began his study of the history of public health through its connection with the Church, which before the modern period was nominally responsible for health, education and welfare. Under a National Institutes of Health grant last year he studied public health history at Harvard University and lectured there on the history of public health. Currently he is working on a book dealing with the French scientist Lavoisier and the development of public health in 18th century France.

Dr. Greenbaum received his B.A. and M.A. degrees from the University of Wisconsin and his Ph.D in 1955 from Harvard.

Communications Seminar Set For Colonial Lounge Dec. 6

A special, informal program for University students interested in careers in the communications field will be conducted at the Student Union Colonial Lounge Dec. 9.

The two-hour program, beginning at 7 p.m., will present representatives from news, public relations and educational books firms. Each will be available for informal chats with interested students about starting salaries, advancement opportunities, qualifications and other pertinent points.

The sponsoring Alpha Phi Gamma, the campus honorary society for journalism students, said the session is open to all students but juniors and seniors interested in summer work or careers in the field should be especially interested.

Represented will be newspaper, radio and television news general public relations, PR news and PR advertising.

Some of the speakers, all professionals from the Western Massachusetts area, will have displays of some of the types of work their firms produce.

Raid on Repairman Nets Three Bombs

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - seven U.S. Treasury agents, joined by officials of other law enforcement agencies, raided a home in the Indian Orchard section Tuesday and arrested a self-employed television repairman on a federal charge of manufacturing destructive devices.

Victor R. Fezio, who led the Treasury men, said they confiscated three bombs each weighing about six pounds, and caches of fireworks found in the cellar and garage.

Fezio, chief special investigator of the Treasury's alcohol, tobacco and firearms division, said the bombs were powerful enough to "destroy a car or wreck a small home." He said they were packed in cardboard tubing and enclosed in brown wrapping paper.

Fezio said his men confiscated enough raw material to "make many, many more bombs."

The TV repairman arrested was identified as Stephen Skowron, 43. Skowron was arrested previously by Springfield police in April, 1968, on a charge of illegal manufacture of explosives. He was fined $100 the following June.

At that time, Fezio explained, manufacturing destructive devices was not a federal crime. Now it is.

The Treasury men were joined by Springfield detectives, representatives of the state fire marshal's office and an Army demolition detail from Ft. Devons which handled the explosives.

Skowron was arraigned before U.S. Commissioner James P. Morlarty who set bail at $5,000 and ordered a hearing Dec. 22.

A.Q.E. Holds Conservation Forum Today

Action for a Quality Environment (A.Q.E.) will sponsor a Conservation Forum in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union at 7:00 p.m. tonight. All faculty, staff, and students interested in conservation or environmental quality are invited.

The Forum is planned for teachers, researchers, scholars, and interested individuals of the 5-college community who may not know of or have contact with those knowledgeable in this area. Suggestions and comments are invited; A.Q.E. will carefully consider all with a view towards increasing the cross-fertilization they hope to foster through the Forum.

If you wish to find out about the various conservation organizations, or to publicize your own project involved in environmental areas, you are invited to attend.

Nixon Urges Legislation To Fight Malnutrition

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon said Tuesday America cannot live with its conscience if millions of people are hungry, and urged support for three bills he has recommended to Congress.

"Taken together," he told some 3,000 persons at the opening session of the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health, "these three measures should virtually eliminate the problem of poverty as a cause of malnutrition."

The audience was polite in its reception. Nixon was halfway through his speech before the audience interrupted with applause.

Legislation for which the President asked support includes:

- The new family assistance plan placing a $1,600 income floor supplemented with food stamps up to about $2,350.
- Expansion of the food stamp program.
- Creation of a Commission on Population Growth and the American Future - along with a goal to provide "adequate family planning services to all those who want them but cannot afford them."

Nixon told the conference participants, "I expect to read that you have had a lively difference of opinions" and then ad libbed, "you already have."

Sen. George S. McGovern, D-S.D., who received a hearty round of applause when introduced after Nixon had left, commented that the President's speech was constructive but he was disappointed that there were no specific proposals.

"It seemed to me he was holding back on his own proposals to see what the conference comes forward with," said McGovern, chairman of a Senate committee on hunger.

The legislative program Nixon asked to be supported falls considerably short of proposals that 20 conference panels and eight task force groups put together in advance.

Students May Be Legal In Amherst Elections

Many students, particularly graduate students, may be eligible to vote in Amherst's next elections in February. The tentatively scheduled date for the election, the seventeenth of February, will be voted on by the Town Selectmen. Potential voters register with the Town Clerk in Amherst's Town Hall.

Requirements for becoming a registered voter are: (1) residency in Massachusetts for 1 year prior to the date of the election and (2) residence in Amherst 6 months prior to the date of the elections. Twenty days before the elections is a closed period.

According to Town Clerk Esther Dimock, the application for voter's registration asks for biographical information and if the applicant is not born in the United States, he must present papers to verify that he has become a citizen. Finally, the applicant must swear that all statements on the application are true. It is optional whether or not party affiliation is stated.

If the application is accepted, the person remains a registered voter of Amherst for as long as he lives in the town.

Any ten unregistered voters may present a petition to the Town Clerk requesting a specific site for voter registration.

The offices that voters will be determining this February are: Town Moderator - a 1 year term now held by Harry Allan; two 3-year terms on the School Committee; one place on the Board of Selectmen; two places on the Housing Authority; Trustee for the Jones Library; and any town meeting members' whose term expires or where there are vacancies.

The present members of Amherst's Board of Registrars includes two Democrats, George Como and Raymond Morin, two Republicans, Donald La Croix, and Esther Dimock, who is Town Clerk and EX OFFICIO member.

Common Market Talks Begin

THE HAGUE (AP) - The six nations of the European Common Market decided Tuesday to open negotiations with Britain and three other countries on their bids for membership.

A communique reporting this after a two-day session here mentioned no date for the start of the negotiations with Britain, Ireland, Denmark and Norway, but Premier Piet de Jong of the Netherlands said all members agreed the talks could start by the end of June.

The new French president, Georges Pompidou, told the meeting his government urges "active, rapid and positive" preparations for expanding the Common Market.

Although Pompidou said France is "favorable" to accepting new members, he was reluctant to suggest a date for the start of talks with them.

The Common Market now is made up of France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg.

The fact that no date was mentioned was a victory for Pompidou, whose pre-summit position was that no firm timetable was necessary.

Pompidou's partners gave him satisfaction on the key question for France: The permanent adoption of a scheme to finance agricultural price supports. France is the area's biggest farm producer.

Redmen Roast Friars, 90 - 85

By PETER PASCARELLI Sports Editor

The University of Massachusetts basketball team mixed the old time flavor of Ray Ellerbrook's shooting and steady performancesof fellow seniors Dennis Chapman and Dick Samuelson, with the new time spice of a record breaking Julius Erving and a ballhawking John Bettancourt, threw in a little good luck, and mixed it up in the form of a scintillating 90-85 comeback win over talented Providence College.

The attendance was announced at 4200. If there were 4200 in the Cage, then there were 4200 at the World Series. 600 were turned away, they were sitting everywhere, and if the Cage takes any more people than this, there will be no Cage left. That would be a crime.

Back to what was a great, great ballgame. Providence led virtually all the way, but had three men foul out in the second half, and that could have proved the difference. The hot-shooting Friars led by as much as eight points late into the second half, but could not hold off the scrambling Redmen, fired by a riotous home crowd.

Erving, in his first varsity game, broke the school rebound record as he hauled down 28 caroms, breaking the previous mark set by Connie McDonough in 1955. Erving also scored 24 points in the second half, to break at single half scoring mark.

But it was the veterans Ellerbrook, Chapman and Samuelson who kept the Redmen in the game in a poorly played first half. Both teams threw away chances to break open the contest as the lead changed hands several times in the first half.

Providence unspellables, Vin Colluci and Jim Larranaga, pulled Providence into a five point lead late in the half, on some long range bombing and quick drives. Ellerbrook, after a torrid first ten minutes, cooled off during this time, and the Friars held their best margin of the half, 35-29 with nearly six minutes remaining.

However, Chapman and Samuelson rallied the Redmen, and, helped by a Bettancourt hoop off one of his many steals, the Redmen climbed back into a 38-38 tie with a little over one minute left in the half. Larranaga, however, hit another of his hoops, and added with another score by Friar sophomore product, Gary Wilkins, gave Providence a 42-40 lead at halftime.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

WASHINGTON (AP) - Railroad, union and government officials expressed cautious optimism Tuesday that their round-the-clock wage bargaining talks could head off a possible mid-night strike that would precipitate a nationwide rail shutdown.

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) - Gov. Ronald Reagan said Tuesday he would not run for the U. S. Senate in 1970, saying if he runs for anything it would be for governor.

The Republican governor declined to indicate when he might announce his political plans for next year. He is expected to seek a second term.

HONOLULU (AP) - Massive walls of water, rising up to 50 feet in some places, slammed the island of Oahu Tuesday and police reported one person missing.

The waves, spawned 1,500 miles away by a mid-pacific storm, forced more than 500 to evacuate their homes in low-lying areas. Hospitals reported treating 15 persons for injuries, none of them major.

NEW YORK (AP) - The stock market sank Tuesday to a new 1969 low on the basis of the Dow Jones industrial average. This widely followed average fell 3.69 points to 801.35, dipping below its previous low for the year of 801.96 reached on July 29.

MY LAI, Vietnam (AP) - Four residents of this hamlet told South Vietnamese legislators Tuesday they saw no killing by U. S. soldiers here in 1968 but they heard the rattle of gunfire and cries of civilians.

NEW DELHI (AP) - A socialist member of India's Parliament who said he did not believe in God was overrruled by an 111-5 vote when he proposed deleting the phrase from judicial oaths: "I swear in the name of God."

Holy Hippies Held In Hollywood Homocides

LOS ANGELES (AP) - A grand jury said Tuesday it will investigate the Sharon Tate killings, linked to a quasireligious band of hippies, three of whom have been arrested.

The county grand jury announced its investigation - expected to be completed by Monday - soon after a 20-year-old girl was arrested in New Hampshire on a Los Angeles murder warrant accusing her of killing Miss, Tate, a honey-blonde actress, and four others last Aug. 9.

Also under arrest were Charles D. Watson, 24, of Copeville, Tex., who surrendered Sunday night in McKinney, Tex., and Patricia Krenwinkel, 21, of Los Angles, apprehended Monday in Mobile, Ala. Police said they were holding five women as material witnesses, but declined to name them.

Miss Tate, 26, pregnant wife of Polish film director Roman Polanski; her jet-set friends: Hollywood hair stylist Jay Sebring, coffee heiress Abigail Folger and Polish playboy Voityck Frokowsky, and Steven Parent, 18, friend of a teen-age caretaker on Miss Tate's plush Bel Aire estate, were stabbed and shot.

The next day, several miles away, Leno and Rosemary LaBianca wealthy owners of a Hollywood market chain, were killed in so-called "copycat" slaying.

Police have said all seven slayings were committed by several members of a nomadic group of hippies that included Watson and Misses Krenwinkel and Kasabian.

Officers declined official comment on reports from a lawyer and the Los Angeles Times that the band is led by Charles Manson, 34, who refers to himself as "Jesus", "God" and "Satan" and who holds a grudge against the wealthy.

Richard Caballere, attorney for a young woman he said was "hypnotized" and "intrigued" into joining Manson's cult, told newsmen his client was at the scenes of the Tate and LaBianca slayings but "had nothing to do with the murders" as she was under what he described as Manson's "hypnotic spell."

Manson is in jail in Independence, Calif., on auto theft and arson charges stemming from a raid on hippies in the Death Valley area in October.

Los Angeles police have filed no charges against Manson.

Caballero said his client, Susan Denise Atkins, 21, also known as Sadie Glutz, also was present during the slaying of musician Gary Hinman, 34, in his Topanga Canyon home last July. Caballero entered a plea of innocent to a murder charge in the Hinman slayings on Miss Atkins' behalf.

The Los Angeles Times linked the hippie cult to the Hinman killing of which Miss Atkins is accused and to three other unnamed murders.

Capt. George Walsh of the Los Angles sheriff's office said his detectives were reinvestigating "numerous" slayings to determine whether the hippie band might be involved.

Miss Kasabian surrendered to police and agreed at a court hearing to return to California for trial. Police said she was married, but her married name was not made public. She was booked as a native of Biddeford, Maine. She said she was born June 21, 1949.

Interdepartmental Student Committee to Improve Representation

By JERRY RICHMAN and MATT NOVAK

UMass has grown rapidly in recent years increasing the fragmentation and the isolation of student from faculty, student from administration, and student from student. Because of this the university has not been able to adapt itself rapidly enough to the changing needs of the academic community. Despite the hard work of interested administrators, faculty, and students there still remains a significant communications gap between the three elements. This gap results from the fragmentation of legitimate power and a lack of organizational structure within the university community.

A dean or other administrator often has only vague resonsibility or power for adjusting the University's response to new realities. Administrators are frequently only as powerful as their own personalities make them. The massive turnover of personel, the temporary nature of appointments, and the sometimes violent attacks made on them can deter even the most dedicated from initiating anything controversial. Such an atmosphere does not encourage one to go out on a limb for something that is new and untried.

The faculty are in better shape organizationally since they can discuss any proposed reform at monthly departmental meetings, the results of which can be expressed to the administration at monthly department head meetings.

The student body however lacks any such effective and representative structure for creating academic change. Though the student senate might seem to be the answer to this problem it has proven to be unsatisfactory for a number of reasons, however, this does not mean to downgrade the many excellent things that the student senate has done and will do to promote reform.

Also the nature of the student senate constituency does not insure equal representation on academic or any other reform. Even if all of its debates and committee meetings are open to the public this does not insure that there will be equal representation of all departments; it can only insure representation by campus area.

In response to this need an interdepartmental student committee was recently formed, composed of elected student representatives of the student-faculty liason committees within the various departments. The advantages of this committee in trying to bridge the communications gap is fourfold.

(1) It will be representative of all students in the college of arts and sciences. Instead of representing a hetrogenous mixture of students each department committee represents an organized category of students -- English majors, History Majors, Entemology majors, etc. This will insure that all interest group views on reform can be insured through a permanent and ongoing structure.

(2) This committee has limited goals. This committee will be concerned only with the goal of academic reform -- the very core of University life. It will thus eliminate political issues and with it the hope of personal prestige that may detract from this goal.

(3) It would make an effective lobbying and advisory committee. Currently student-faculty committees within the departments work without knowledge of what their counterparts in other departments are doing. By attending regular meetings of the ISC ideas on reform and procedures can be exchanged. In addition a resolution of one committee supporting a particular reform justifiably carries little weight, however the resolution of a committee representing all departments in the College of Arts and Sciences should create a much greater impact than either the student senate or current student faculty department committees.

(4) The ISC would promote better communications between students and faculty as a whole. Currently there are several student groups within the community working toward reform. Most however have no way of discussing their views with faculty by means of a representative and ongoing structure. Most of the departments however have several faculty members assigned to the student committees and allow students to attend department meetings and help form policy. By working through these committees the ISC can try to insure the community wide views are made available to the various department faculty.

This provides a theoretical justification for a new student committee.

Theory is fine, but students are needed who are willing to put this theory into practice, to organize and to work in every department in the College of Arts and Sciences and to work in the ISC. Students are needed who are willing to develop a course and professor evaluation and description system which will cover every course and professor in the college and which will result in a guide permitting the rational selection of courses on the basis of hard knowledge.

Representatives from student committees in the History, English, Speech, Psychology, French and Government Departments have met in order to establish the ISC. Representatives are needed from other departments. All those interested please contact Jerry Richman 546-5112 or Matt Novak 546-7128.

Happy Birthday

He was a really great guy. We were little kids together. He'd play guns when he was real little. One day he was Jesse James; the next day he'd be Dwight Eisenhower. He always used to tell the other kids not to point their cap guns at anybody. He was so serious when he said that; it was really funny.

You should have seen him in his little league uniform. He thought he was Mickey Mantle; he even wore #7. He was really proud of that number. He was as competitive as can be during the game, and he always cheered for his teammates, but after the game he'd go tell the other team they played a good game. Remember when we used to shout "Two, four six eight, who do we despise and hate?" He never used to do that, even in fourth grade. He liked the other kids too much.

His parents didn't have much money, so he worked hard in school and out so he could go to college. Finally he got a scholarship that covered most of it, but he didn't know that at the time. He worked all day Saturday the last two years of high school. He had a girl friend Senior year. They were going to get married.

Things were looking pretty good for Joe. It seems funny, he was a guy who never forgot your birthday, even if he hadn't told you what it was. He told kids not to point guns at other kids' heads. Now, because he was born on September 14, somebody has a gun pointed at his.

He was a nice guy. It's really too bad.

Our Library

The next few weeks will be the most hectic academically of the semester, with many papers falling due and finals closing in, and this increased work load will prompt many students to utilize the facilities of our University Library. I am sure that many, if not most, of them will discover that this service is woefully inadequate. The library is incredibly understocked. Many important books in numerous disciplines are not carried. Other frequently used books are stocked -- but only one copy is carried and that copy is ALWAYS out. If, by chance, a student desires to look at an art book or a philosophy book, he is faced with six flights of stairs to climb to a stuffy cellar before he discovers that the one copy of the book he wanted is out.

Library hours are too limited. Anyone coming out of an evening class, hoping to pick up a book before going home, finds that the library closes up its meager collection at ten o'clock this year. Of late, I have found it more convenient and rewarding to tour the local paperback book stores rather than waste time and effort running up and down library stairs in search of books which are never there. Meantime the new multi-million dollar library building goes up -- while there is not enough money to stock the old one.

Our library ranks 50th, last, among state university libraries, and it seems that unless some drastic action is taken soon, it will continue to be last and worst for many years to come. I have worked long and hard to earn money to attend this school -- and every time I open the door of Goodell Library, I know I have been screwed out of an important aid to my education by the University and the Massachusetts Legislature.

NICK COSTA

A Modest Proposal: 1969

It is certainly a sorrowful experience for My Fellow Americans and I to witness every day in our Great Country the thousands of truly impudent snobs who make it their infectious business to preach Anti-American and Communist inspired propaganda for Peace on Earth.

Surely, these inexperienced, thus ignorant radicals should be set straight concerning the American Way. I venture to say it would be in the best interest of this country to either alleviate or ignore this deplorable situation of confused ethics. But being the caliber of Humans we are, I humbly suggest we take the harder course, in the image of our Commander-in-Chief and our forefathers, I propose that rather than dismiss the presence of this horrible monster, we meet it head on and as in the past, crush it Gloriously.

Personally, I have been weighing the possible schemes for solution to this grave problem since the current war began. After much earnest deliberation, I do not hesitate to submit my own plan for the ending of this derision to the name of our land.

I shall now, therefore, humbly propose my own thoughts, which I hope you will not disagree with.

I have been led to believe, in my recent discussions with a noted Russian neurologist, that with the mere flick of the wrist, an obviously disturbed and disillusioned Peace-Loving individual can be miraculously transformed into a serene, programmed, vegetable-like member of the very Silent and very American majority.

I do therefore propose, in the interest of my country that the thousands of dubiously called Americans subscribing to the Unattainable cause of Peace, be immediately forced to submit to the aforementioned operation, and thus cure their affliction, and yet further, remedy this entire regrettable situation.

I furthermore respectfully offer that the advantages of this arrangement are many and Beneficial.

Why, imagine the strong bodies of youths who marched miles for their ludicrous Cause now marching with fixed bayonnets down our streets in a glorious parade of Power and Might.

Think of the tremendous bolster to our depleted labor force. Certainly, this newly Made army of Americans would be a joyous sight on its way to work at one of our Sophisticated arms factories.

And shouldn't the intellectual proponents of this ghastly crime be stripped of God's divine gift of intelligence which they so Vilely misused? And shouldn't they be rightfully guided in their recognizance of our beloved Red, White, and Blue? The colors which see fit to reckon with them and thus salvage their poor souls from the slovenliness which will undoubtedly be their end.

These are but a few of my proposal's projected effects. I'm afraid I must say it's the answer we've all been waiting for.

And so in conclusion, I, a mere servant of my Flag, but a minute cog in a great Military-Industrial-Economic machine, beseech you, My Fellow Americans, in the name of White-Anglo-Saxon-Protestantism, to contemplate and put into effect this truly Modest and American Proposal.

I make this plea with no other motive other than as a public service to God and My Country. I ask only that I be the first to receive the proposed operation.

JOHN M. McDONALD

Is there an Answer?

Much has been made of the phrase "courses are irrelevant." It has been used as an excuse to drop out of the University and as the springboard for curriculum reform, but I have never heard or read of its definition. What is it supposed to mean and in relation to what or whom? -- In relation to yourself, to your future career, to your own enjoyment, or to present country and world problems?

Does anybody know?

Mrs. Johnston's Flag

WASHINGTON - President Nixon's promise to bring the country together doesn't seem to be working too well. If anything, people are more polarized than they've been before.

A friend of mine, Mrs. Johnston, told me the other day what happened to her when she decided to fly the Flag on Veterans' Day. Mrs. Johnston's been flying the American Flag every Veterans' Day without receiving much comfort. But this year her effort became the CAUSE CELEBRE on the block.

The first person to mention it was a neighbor from across the street who congratulated her for flying the Flag and asked her to sign a petition to impeach Justice William Douglas of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Mrs. Johnston said she wasn't interested in signing any petitions against the Supreme Court.

"Then why are you flying the American Flag?" the neighbor demanded.

"Because it's Veterans' Day," she said.

"Would you be willing to go to a rally tomorrow against teaching sex education in the schools?" the neighbor demanded.

Mrs. Johnston said she wouldn't.

The neighbor said angrily, "And I believed you were a good American."

A little later, the neighbor's son, a college student, said, "Mrs. Johnston, I thought you were sympathetic to our getting out of Vietnam."

"I am," Mrs. Johnston said.

"Then why are you flying the American Flag?"

"Flying the American Flag has nothing to do with my feelings on Vietnam, Bobby. It is our Flag and I believe it should be displayed on national holidays."

"What about all the innocent people whose villages have been burned and bombed, and the profiteering South Vietnamese generals who have numbered bank accounts in Switzerland?" Bobby said.

"That has nothing to do with the Flag."

"Only super-Hawks fly the Flag," said Bobby, as he walked away in a huff.

A little later Mrs. Johnston received a call from the lady down the street. "Mrs. Johnston, I notice you're flying the American Flag. Would you be interested in joining the American Legion Auxiliary?"

Mrs. Johnston said, "No, my husband isn't a member of the American Legion so there is no reason for me to join the auxiliary."

"You had us fooled, Mrs. Johnston," the lady said, "I'm sorry I called."

The delivery boy from the local market arrived at this moment and he said, "You hate me because I have long hair, don't you, Mrs. Johnston?"

"I don't hate you," Mrs. Johnston protested.

"I saw the Flag outside," the delivery boy said. "I know how you people think." He slammed the groceries on the table and left.

The plumber arrived to do some work, but when he saw the Flag he decided Mrs. Johnston would be interested in how he felt about "People who are on welfare and don't do any work and who are always waiting for handouts, and how the protesters ought to all be put in jail...."

It cost Mrs. Johnston an extra $9 an hour to listen to the plumber's political philosophy.

When Mr. Johnston came home from work, Mrs. Johnston told him everything that happened during the day.

"Don't feel bad," he told her. "I was driving WITHOUT my lights on today and a taxi driver yelled at me, 'If you don't like America, why don't you go back to the Soviet Union where you belong!' "

S.B.A. Forum Sponsors Counseling Session Today

The S.B.A. Forum will sponsor an information and counseling session today in Rm. 111, S.B.A. between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m.

The S.B.A. Forum is an open group of people interested in developing the potential of the business school. There are presently four areas in which the Forum is working: Evaluation of Professors, new curriculum, Critique of S.B.A. (counseling, advisors), and the school's relationship to the Business Community. Anyone who has a problem, gripe or proposal is welcome to speak out at a Forum meeting.

Today's session is the first program under the Forum.

Lists of teacher-section assignments, advisee assignments, and seniors from each department willing to give advice about courses and professors for spring semester will be offered.

An open meeting to plan future events will be held at 1 p.m. in the same room.

Course on Soviet Union Offered

A multi-disciplinary course on the Soviet Union will be offered during the Spring semester at Orchard Hill as Orchard Hill 398. The course is being offered for the third time, carries three hours of academic credit, and is open to all university students. It will meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 4 p.m. in Noah Webster house.

Those interested in seeing the course description and syllabus should see either Prof. Leon Barron in Eugene Field house or Prof. Karl Ryavec, 334 Thompson Hall.

Blues Singer Guitarist Appears at Smith Friday

NORTHAMPTON - B.B. King, "the world's greatest blues singer and guitarist," will appear in concert this Friday at Smith College.

With his famous guitar, "Lucille," B.B. - for Blues Boy - will perform at 8 p.m. in John M. Greene Hall, Smith College. An added attraction will be Sha-Na-Na, a New York City Collegiate group who do songs of the 1950s and dress in the styles of that decade.

Critics have hailed King as "the prime influence on the contemporary music scene." Not only has he served as a model for virtually every blues artist active today, but he has also greatly influenced such rock stars as Hendrix, Clapton, and Bloomfield.

Master of a sophisticated electric blues style, King is a versatile performer who exudes excitement and vitality. Writing most of the hundreds of songs he has recorded, he also appears at numerous rock and pop music festivals throughout the country.

Tickets for the concert are available from 5 to 6 p.m. today and Thursday at the John M. Greene box office. On Friday the box office will be open from 5 p.m. until the time of the performance. All seats are reserved.

Three Plays To Be Produced By MHC Teatre

TIMES SQUARE, an Off-Off Broadway production of three short plays, will be presented December 11, 12, 13 and 14 by the Laboratory Theater at Mount Holyoke College.

"Ferryboat", "Halloween", and "Times Square", written by Leonard Melfi, encompass the fantastic as well as the starkly realistic. They depict the relationships that can develop between lonely people meeting each other for the first time. Nancy Enggass is directing the production which will be performed in Chapin Auditorium, Mount Holyoke College.

UMass Theatre to Present Danton's Death Dec. 11-14

The next production by the University of Massachusetts Theatre will be DANTON'S DEATH, by Georg Buechner. The director, Assistant Professor Gary Stewart, and the large cast are already well into the rehersal process.

Georg Buechner's play is about revolution. The play defies easy classification. While at least one critic has called it a fascist document, Herbert Blau finds it "a truly revolutionary play." In any case, DANTON'S DEATH suggests some questions for any of us contemplating revolution.

DANTON'S DEATH will be produced on December 11, 12, 13 and 14 at 8:30 p.m. in Bartlett Theatre. Tickets are available at the University Theatre Box Office, 545-2579.

Indian dancer and choreographer Manjusri Chaki-Sircar will perform Thursday at 8:30 p.m. at Smith College.

Soph Ace Erving Sets New Rebound Record

Ellerbrook hit a layup near the end, but the buzzer, made inaudible by the "4200" people, had sounded.

Erving, who suffered through an ice cold first half, began to connect in the second half, but poor Redman foul shooting, something which plagued UMass throughout the first half, and the shooting of Collucci and Wilkins, who alternated getting red hot, spurred the surging Friars to bigger leads in the second half.

UMass came within a point on several occasions in the first ten minutes, but bad floor play and Providence's shooters kept the Friars on top.

Then Providence began to lose people. Larranaga first, then big Ray Johnson, and finally reserve Craig Callan, all fouled out by 6:33 and the momentum, all Providence's previously, switched sides.

Ellerbrook canned one of his long-range jumpers, Erving hit a turn around, Ellerbrook a layup following a Bettancourt steal off of the UMass zone press, and Erving canned a followup of his own miss, to give UMass the lead, at 75-74 with 3:35 left in the contest. It was the first time the Redmen had the lead since 11:29 of the first half.

Wilkins brought Providence right back however with a quick hoop. Then an Ellerbrook bomb, a spinning jumper by Erving and a tip in by the super soph, gave UMass a five point lead, 81-76, with only 1:44 left.

Big foul shots by Ellerbrook, and the remarkably cool floor general, sophomore Bettancourt, iced the win in the dying seconds for UMass, loudly counted off by that screaming "4200".

Erving led all scorers with 27 points, while Ellerbrook was right behind with 25. The dependable Chapman had 13 while Bettancourt chipped in with 10 and added seven assists, and numerous steals. Samuelson put in an excellent stint at center, as he was forced into action due to a foul-plagued Ken Mathias.

Collucci led the Friars with 22 points on 11 field goals, while Larranaga had 17. Sophomore Gary Lewis, a nifty jump shooter had 16, while the smooth Wilkins had 14 markers.

It could have been one of the great Cage games. They say this is the "New Era" of UMass basketball. After this one, no one can argue.

REDMAN RANTINGS - Providence shot .50% from the floor, UMass only 43%, as the difference was at the free throw line, where U-Mass had 24 conversions to the Friars' 15....UMass Jack Leaman was to make the great understatement pleased...."We didn't play well in the first half, but I told the kids at the half that if they played ball we should win it. They had stayed in the game despite playing poorly"...."Chapman and Ellerbrook kept us in it in the first half and that's what seniors are supposed to do"...."Erving and Bettancourt turned the game around", Leaman went on,"and also Samuelson was excellent in relief, something I have come to expect from him".... Leaman called Providence "an excellent ball club", but said of his charges, "We showed we were a good team by taking advantage of the breaks"....He added about the crowd, "It was just great. I hope they keep it up every game, and prove to everyone that we need a new facility here."

LIGHTER THAN AIR - Senior guard Ray Ellerbrook seems to be floating in this shot but he had a great night, scoring 25 points, many at key moments. (MDC photo by Bob Mangriatti)

Little Redmen Surge Too Late

Frosh Fall to NH, 74 - 70

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Staff Reporter

Despite a tremendous last minute surge, the Little Redmen dropped their first basketball decision of the season last night to New Haven College, 74-70. The hoopsters were plagued by disorganization and poor rebounding in spots but on the whole showed good promise for the future. Bob Polakoff was outstanding as he came through with 24 points as was Tom King who, although he didn't start, scored 15 points and rebounded well.

The frosh hoopsters were slow in getting off the mark and didn't net their first hoop until the 11:42 mark of the first half although they had scored a field goal earlier on a goal tending call on New Haven's John Ferguson. Although New Haven's outside shooting, done mainly by Bob Foglio and Tony Simonelli, put them in front, the freshman took the lead, 17-16, when Polakoff took a pretty pass from Chuck Peters and scored on a lay-up.

He was fouled on the play by Simonelli and he converted the free throw to give UMass the lead. But Foglio came back with two hoops and Simonelli one and the Little Redmen could counter only with a hook by Peters thus giving New Haven a 22-19 lead with eight minutes remaining in the half.

New Haven started to pull away towards the end of the half as both Peters and Andre Polly got themselves into foul trouble. Turnovers also hurt the frosh as they fell behind 31-25 on two free throws by Ray Pennington.

UMass began to press and they left New Haven players all alone under the hoop as Bill Kirkpatrick made it 37-27. They maintained this lead and Chuck Olsen scored on a rebound at the buzzer as the teams went into the locker room with New Haven in front, 41-31.

The second half showed both teams more or less equal as New Haven maintained about a ten point lead for most of the half. Coach John Skockro, ex-Redman hoopster, who was coaching in place of regular coach Peter Broaca who was scouting in Vermont, started both Olsen and White in the second half. The move was due to the foul trouble which both Polly and Peters were in and also to give UMass stronger rebounding.

This strategy appeared to be paying off as White hit a jumper at 15:50 to close the gap to 46-40. After a free throw by Pennington and a jumper by Simonelli, Olsen hit two shots to make the score 49-44. But the Redman's shooting fell off and New Haven upped the lead to ten, 56-46, on an Al Maddaleno jumper. The teams exchanged hoops and with only 8:37 remaining White made a basket to make it 64-55.

The Little Redmen started their belated drive with 2:04 remaining and the score 73-62. Polly made a jumper and Polakoff stole the ball and scored to make it 73-66 with just about a minute left.

Polakoff intentionally fouled Simonelli and he made the great throw to give New Haven an eight point lead with only 33 seconds left. White then scored again on a jump shot and Bob Kalbfell made a lay-up at the buzzer making the final score, 74-70.

UMass' main problem throughout the contest seemed to be inexperience and inconsistency, two problems which can be solved only as the season progresses. However, the nucleus of a good squad seems to be there as many players were impressive.

Among the strong points of the team in their first contest were the rebounding of Polly, the shooting of Polakoff, and the shooting and rebounding of both Olsen and White. Also deserving praise was Mike McSharry who showed good ball control and played a strong game on defense.

Expos Send Jaster to B's

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA. (AP) - Baseball's annual winter meetings continued at a sluggish pace yesterday as a major league general managers did plenty of talking but little trading.

A three-player deal between Montreal and Atlanta was the only activity in the swap market. The Expos sent left-hander Larry Jaster to the Braves for righty Jim Britton and minor league catcher outfielder Don Johnson.

Jaster, a high selection in the expansion draft, was a disappointment to the Expos with a 1-6 record and 5.49 earned run average. Britton was 7-5 with the Braves and Johnson batted .280 in the Carolina League.

Gene Mauch, manager of the Expos, was happy over the acquisition of Britton. "All the hitters on my club have a lot of respect for Britton's stuff."

Undermanned Mermen Open with Amherst

By RAY ESONIS
Staff Reporter

In what could prove to be an abnormally long season, the varsity swimming team opens its schedule at home tonight against Amherst College with a squad of only six swimmers.

The team should normally carry close to fifteen men, but this year's turnout is so poor that coach Joe Rogers isn't expecting too many victories. In tonight's opener versus Amherst, the only swimmers for UMass will be Al Northrup, Morris Lynch, Ed Jazab, Mark Miller, Dick Vogel, and Herb Schuster. Amherst annually has one of the strongest swimming teams, and this coupled with the lack of Redmen strength should give the Jeffs a definite advantage.

As far as the UMass lineup is concerned, team captain Northrup will be swimming the 200 meter breast stroke and the 200 meter individual medley. Lynch will probably swim the 200 and 500 meter free styles, and regarding the remaining events, coach Rogers just isn't sure. As of now, he doesn't have anyone in particular for the backstroke, butterfly, or diving. Herb Schuster is being considered for diving, but Rogers is afraid that the other events could be lost by forfeit.

Last year's squad, having compiled a 4-6 record, was considered by Rogers the best team he's coached, despite the losing card. Their losses came at the hands of Amherst, Wesleyan, M.I.T., Central Connecticut, Bowdoin, and UConn, while victories were assessed against Holy Cross, Vermont, Worcester, and Coast Guard. Notable vacancies this season of last year's seniors include Bob Asquith and Dave Larson, the record holder in high and low diving competition.

The freshman situation is just as tense as the varsity dilemma. There are not enough swimmers to handle each event, and because of this, their first meet which was scheduled for tonight was called off. This lack of interest in swimming competition has affected other schools as well, as witnessed by Wesleyan's turnout of only seven varsity swimmers. Swimming is normally Wesleyan's biggest winter sport and they are annually one of New England's best. They will be hosted by UMass on Wednesday, Dec. 10.

Regardless of who UMass is playing, though, competition will be tough unless the Redmen are blessed with a few more swimmers.

Expos Hire Williams

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA. (AP) - Dick Williams, former manager of the Red Sox, who was fired by Boston late last season, was named a coach by the Montreal Expos yesterday.

Williams, 40, released by the Red Sox in September, had led Boston to an American League pennant in 1967. He will coach third base, replacing Dave Bristol.

Bristol was recently hired to coach the Expos, then quit when he was named manager of the AL Seattle Pilots.

Dr. William R. Grier, noted author and lecturer, spoke last in the Student Union. (MDC photo by Wayne Lilyestrom.)

Intergration is Accepted Only on Certain Levels

By DENISE MAGNELL
Staff Reporter

The death of the American urban areas was the main topic of a lecture given by Dr. William H. Grier, co-author of the best-seller, BLACK RAGE. The lecture, sponsored by the Five-College Student Lecture Series, was given last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

Dr. Grier expressed the view that the urban crisis that exists in American cities today is essentially the struggle of the black man in a white environment. He cited Berkeley after the Peoples' Park incident as a perfect example for the "death of a community," a death many communities have been dying for years. He maintains that this process is usually gradual caused by people bound more by their hate than their affection for one another.

References to the black man's history in America were made by Dr. Grier to stress the position of the black population today. Existing concentration of the black citizenry in our urban areas resulted from the black farmer's move from the countryside to seek anonymity and unquestioned equality, rather than to force himself on his white neighbor.

Dr. Grier believes that "integration has been working beautifully for people with white skin, but it has never honestly been tried for black people. The struggle over segregation in our schools is basically one over interracial dating and the possibility of mixed marriages, emphasizing further that integration is still only accepted on certain levels.

In conclusion, Dr. Grier said that the black man is the true follower of democracy since the white population has proved, in its dedication to this ideal, itself hypocritical by mistreatment of minority groups.

An impressive lecturer, Grier is a faculty member of the University of California's Medical Center and School of Social Welfare as well as director of the Child Psychiatric Clinic of San Francisco's Community Mental Health Services.

Silver to Speak At Coffee Hour

Isidore Silver, the campus legal advisor for University Students, will be present at this week's Student Senate coffee hour to answer any questions students may have about their rights as individuals. The coffee hour will be held in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union Thursday, December 4th., from 12:00 noon to 2:00 p.m.

Mr. Silver, an expert on the civil liberties of individuals, has often been called upon to defend the rights of University students in a multitude of situations. Presently, Mr. Silver is involved in the Women's Liberation League's fight to legalize birth control counseling and the distribution of birth control devices. Also, he was the leading spokesman for the bill to modify the ROTC program at this University which was recently passed by the Faculty Senate.

This coffee hour, sponsored by the Student Senate Public Relations Committee, offers the students of this campus the opportunity to free themselves from the morass of legal red tape in which they so often find themselves, by knowing their individual rights. It is also a chance to meet an individual who has done a great deal to further the rights of students.

Senate Calls for Campus Voice In Selecting New UMass Pres.

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

The Student Senate last night passed unanimously a special business motion to support the current student strike at Southeastern Massachusetts University and another regarding future selection of UMass Presidents. Both motions were brought up by Sen. Robert Kentfield.

Motion S-97 calls for the Student Senate of the University of Massachusetts to "express its full support of the student strike at Southeastern Massachusetts University" and furthermore, to communicate with SMU student leaders and find out in what other ways it can be of aid, and finally to send letters to editors of several widely read New England newspapers expressing the Senate's concern on what is going on at SMU. Sen. Kentfield said of his motion, "I think that it's pretty reasonable." There was no debate on the issue.

The current controversy at Southeastern Mass. University involves action taken by Univ. President Driscoll against three faculty members and their participation in an anti-war protest. The school's student body and student senate have called for support of the faculty members by calling a strike. As a result of this, Pres. Driscoll has threatened court injunctions and possible arrest of student leaders and academic action against any students participating in the strike.

The other special motion concerned "whether or not Board of Trustees should pick the new President of the University," according to Kentfield.

"The interests served should be those of constituent groups on campus rather than the Board," Kentfield continued. It is thus these special campus groups which should have a deciding role in selection of future University Presidents.

S-96 thus calls for:

Whereas, the role of University President as redefined nonetheless continues to encompass duties that are of a direct and vital interest to the undergraduate student body; and,

Whereas, the Student Senate, while recognizing that the final decision to appoint rests as a matter of law with the Board, believes that there can be no meaningful involvement of the University community in the selection process without firsthand contact between the proposed candidates and representatives of the University community; therefore

Resolved, that the Senate opposes participation in, and declares its intention not to participate in, any selection process that does not provide for such contact;

Resolved that the Senate, recognizing the unwieldiness of a larger and more strictly representative body, and the impracticality of eight separate bodies, does therefore recommend to the Trustee Subcommittee on Presidential Selection the establishment of an Advisory Committee on the selection of the President, consisting of one member of each of the eight existing advisory committees (appointed in accordance with the wishes of the appropriate constituent body to interview either jointly with the Trustee subcommittee or apart from it, each of the candidates under final consideration, the transcripts of said interviews to be considered generally public, subject to the discretion of the Trustee subcommittee;

In other Senate action funds ($312) was appropriated to establish an experimental "Rap Line" on campus next semester. According to one of "Rap Line's" spokesmen the line will consist of a phone service run by interested students for the purpose of helping those students with personal problems such as loneliness, boredom or other "hang ups." "There will be some one to talk with about anything," according to a "Rap" spokesman.

"Rap Line" is presently proposed to operate as many hours as there are students available to man the phones and for seven days a week. This service would not interfere with the Infirmary's Mental Health Service, Rap proponents stated, as any student be-

Moon Dust Contamination Worries NASA

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - As many as 30 people may have been contaminated by Apollo 12 moon dust and permitted to wander free, an official in the Lunar Receiving Laboratory said Wednesday night.

Russ Harmon, assistant curator of the laboratory and one of seven scientists quarantined after an accidental exposure to moon material said that perhaps as many as 30 others could have been exposed from the same source.

Another official, Dr. Robin Brett who was exposed at the same time as Harmon, confirmed that others could have been exposed but the number was "more like nine or 10..."

Harmon, Brett and nine other persons were thought exposed to moon dust at the laboratory Monday when a break developed in a rubber glove extending into a pressurized cabinet containing moon rocks.

The 11 were hustled into quarantine with the Apollo 12 astronauts. Harmon said he didn't know how long the flaw had been in the glove.

James Brown Is Coming

Ernie Lepore, President of the Class of 1972, yesterday dispelled the rumor that James Brown will not appear. Brown, who signed the contract for the S.E.N.D.O.F.F. Concert on Wednesday, November 26, will appear in the Cage on Friday night, December 5th, at 9:15 p.m.

Lepore said confusion and persistent rumors that Brown would not appear, or that Smokey Robinson would be his substitute, had hurt the ticket sales. He said there are plenty of tickets left with the concert only two days away. They may be purchased at the SU ticket office.

The holiday mood is starting to strike, as evidenced by the traditional Student Union christmas tree.

Senate Votes "Tax Cut"

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate voted Wednesday to increase the personal income tax exemption from $600 to $800, handing President Nixon his first major defeat on the tax reform bill.

In a 58-37 vote, the Senate ignored the threat of a veto and adopted an amendment by Democrat Albert Gore of Tennessee.

The Gore proposal would provide an average tax cut of more than 18 per cent by 1971 for families earning $5,000 to $10,000 and a far greater windfall for millions earning less.

It replaces in the big tax bill an administration - backed provision that would have cut tax rates without changing the exemption and delayed the impact until 1972. This approach has also been approved by the House.

The Gore proposal, if finally enacted, would raise the personal exemption to $700 next year and to $800 in 1971. Regardless of the outcome, income tax returns due next April for 1969 income will not be affected.

Although the Senate vote marks the closest any effort has come to increase the decade-old $600 personal exemption, chances appeared slim that the full increase will survive the difficulty trek that lies ahead of the tax bill before it become law.

In a letter to Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania Tuesday, Nixon said the Gore amendment does not meet the test of "fiscal responsibility."

He said he could only sign a bill that meets such a test.

House and Senate leaders who eventually will decide the issue in a joint conference also have said they are opposed to increasing the exemption.

But the backers of the Gore proposal said they think a formula acceptable to the President and including some increase in exemptions can be worked out.

Despite White House efforts to block an increase in the exemption, 10 Republicans joined 48 Democrats in approving the Gore amendment. Five Democrats and 32 Republicans voted against it.

Scott blamed the Treasury Department for a "resounding and glorious defeat."

"We blew it," said Republican Charles H. Percy of Illinois. "All we can hope for now is that the conference with the House will come back to a responsible position."

Before the crucial vote, the Senate turned back 72 to 23 a last-minute compromise proposal by Percy that had failed to pick up open White House support although Treasury aides helped work it out.

It also rejected a compromise offered by Republican Jack Miller of Iowa that would have provided a tax credit.

In opposing the Gore amendment, the administration and Finance Committee Chairman Russell B. Long, D-La., said it would cost too much too soon and would greatly set bakc the battle against inly set back the battle against inflation.

By administration estimate the Gore proposal would cost $9 billion a year by 1973 with $4 billion in 1970 alone. This compares with a cost of $1.7 billion next year in the administration proposal and $9 billion by 1973.

Plan Your Calls in Advance

BOSTON (AP)- If you're thinking of a holiday telephone call with a serviceman in Vietnam, better arrange to have him call you, the New England Telephone Co. said today.

A spokesman said it's also better to plan ahead on the call so that it is expected.

He said U. S. callers can reach only telephones in Saigon and the immediate vincinity, while servicemen may call from hospitals and bases in Ton Son Nhut, Long Binh, Cam Rahn Bay, Nha Trang, Que Nhon and Da Nang.

U. S. Callers to Saigon must have the servicemen's unit, his APO number and if possible a telephone number where he can be reached.

There are currently 10 circuits available for Vietnam service and they generally are open 12-15 hours daily, depending on radio interference. Calls average about 350 daily, but increase around holidays.

The first three minutes of a station to station call costs $9 and a person to person call costs $12 for the same time. Each additional minute in either case costs $3.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

WASHINGTON (AP) - A 16 per cent increase in Social Security benefits, effective Jan. 1, was approved Wednesday by the House Ways and Means Committee. Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., said he expects the House to pass the bill probably next week.

NEW YORK (AP) - The Dow Jones industrial average sent a chill through Wall Street Wednesday when it closed below the psychologically potent 800 level for the first time in nearly three years. The popular average tumbled 7.99 points to 793.36, its lowest close since it was at 791.14 on Jan. 4, 1967.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Negotiations in a nationwide railroad wage dispute resumed Wednesday on an optimistic note but still under the threat of a coast-to-coast railroad shutdown if an agreement isn't reached.

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Despite her pleas to "Let me have my baby," actress Sharon Tate and four others were killed one by one by members of a nomadic hippie-style band dressed in black for the occasion, two attorneys said Wednesday.

SAIGON (AP) - About 500 North Vietnamese stormed out of Cambodia Wednesday and were mangled by a rag-tag force of outnumbered South Vietnamese they had hoped to overwhelm, field reports said.

Nixon Controls Button

BRUSSELS (AP) - The North Atlantic allies sealed plans Wednesday that, Western diplomats said, give the President of the United States the sole right to press the nuclear button on behalf of the NATO alliance.

Defense ministers of 14 NATO Nations - with France keeping out - agreed on new guidelines for making the ultimate decision whether to use tactical nuclear weapons against an attacker.

These guidelines set a pattern of political and military consultation, the diplomats said, which leaves the final decision to America's chief executive. They said there appeared to be no qualifications. The President would possess the inviolate right even to reject the advice of his Allied partners.

Britain and France are the only other nuclear members of NATO. All Britain's nuclear weapon resources in the NATO area are committed to the supreme commander, Allied Forces, Europe-SACEUR-who is an American general. He is bound to consult the President on any situation involving the use of these weapons.

France, in theory, has the right to act alone but not in NATO's name.

The meeting of NATO ministers opened a year-end stocktaking on the military, political and economic state of the alliance.

American Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird sought to assure his colleagues the United States will maintain its troop commitment at current levels at least until mid-1972 if Congress accepts administration recommendations.

The ministers also adopted two secret plans, designed to give the West more time to repel a Soviet invader before resorting to the use of nuclear missiles, and setting forth how and where nuclear weapons could be used in case of a west-ward thrust by Communist armies.

lieved to have extremely serious psychological problems would be referred to the Mental Health Service and Rap Line personnel themselves would be screened by Health officials.

The Senate also passed a Budget Committee recommendation that the present policy regarding subsidization of Index be retained.

The committee's recommendation followed a study to investigate "alleged injustice to the student body arising from mandatory subsidization of the Index." The feasibility of placing the Index on voluntary subscription basis had been proposed as an alternative to the present policy.

In a poll of 700 students chosen at random, the Budget Committee found that a majority of 382 voted to keep the present policy.

Despite debate over the validity of the Budget Committee's report and its poll, and a proposed amendment by Sen. Rick Verrochi to put the Index on subscription basis for underclassmen and Senate fund subsidization for seniors, the Senate passed the committee's findings following Sen. Dawn Dudash's remark: "It's about time we listened to the majority of students on this campus.

Ski Card Offers Reduced Rates

College students, from would-be skiers to experts, will be able to ski for a lot less money this season, under a new plan announced jointly by a large group of Northeastern ski areas and the Student Ski Association.

For the first time, special rates for college, grad, and professional school students are being made available through a "Student Ski Card" program.

The plan works as follows: on any non-holiday weekday (from Monday through Friday) a collegian with a Student Ski Card will pay only one half of the regular weekend cost for his lift ticket and (if he wishes) ski lesson and rented ski equipment.

On weekends and holidays he will save at least $1 on his all-day all-lift ticket.

Such prominent areas as Mt. Snow and Jay Peak, Vt., Vernon Valley, N.J., and Mt. Cranmore, N.H. have joined with 20 other ski resorts all over New England, New York, and New Jersey to make these reduced rates available to collegians.

Like the airline youth-fare card, the Student Ski Card costs $3.00 and entitles the user to substantial savings. Students wanting a card or a complete list of participating areas should write to the Student Ski Association, 1138 High Court, Berkeley, Calif. 94708 or to the Eastern office at N. Grove St., Rutland, Vt. 05701, Attn: Mr. Kim Chaffee.

House Passes Appropriations Bill; $4 Billion to Public Works and AEC

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House passed Wednesday a compromise appropriations bill providing $4,756,007,500 for public works and the operations of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The measure, sent to the Senate, would provide $800 million for water pollution control grants to assist states and localities in building sewage treatment plants.

The bill carries $2.2 billion for flood control, navigation, reclamation and power projects for the 12 months ending next June 30.

The House refused to accept a $75,000 allowance added by the Senate for planning a flood control project for Minot, N.D.

Joe L. Evins, D-Tenn., recommended that the House accept the Senate's provision for money for project, even though construction had not been authorized through regular congressional channels. The request was rejected by voice vote.

He said the authorization included in the appropriation bill was justified by an emergency homes and forced the evacuation of 11,800 residents.

Reps. John Rhodes, R-Ariz., and Glenn R. Davis, R-Wis., said authorization of a project through appropriation procedure violated long-standing congressional rules and opened the door for a flood of similar requests for projects that have not cleared the review by congressional public works committees.

The bill is $552 million more than President Nixon's budget estimates. The administration had recommended only $214 million for sewage treatment plants.

Panther Leader Arrested

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Secret Service agents arrested Black Panther party chief of staff David Hilliard on Wednesday on a charge he threatened President Nixon's life in an anti-war rally speech Nov. 15.

Hilliard, 27, of Berkeley, Calif., was arrested in an automobile without incident soon after a federal grand jury returned a secret indictment, said Tom Hanson, agent in charge of the Secret Service here.

Hilliard was held in lieu of $30,000 bail for a plea hearing tentatively set for Dec. 17 by U.S. District Judge Stanley Weigel.

The indictment said Hilliard "referred to President Richard Nixon as 'the man that's responsible for all the attacks on the Black Panther party nationally' and stated 'we will kill Richard Nixon.'" Hilliard's remarks were made to an estimated 85,000 persons at Golden Gate Park.

Hilliard is awaiting trial on charges of assault with a deadly weapon and attempted murder in Alameda County as a result of a gun battle involving Black Panthers and police in Oakland.

Introducing Madame President

By CINDY BALCOM
Staff Reporter

The new Student Senate President, Cynthia Oken, foresees no great difficulties in taking over her office. Miss Oken, in fact, has an optimistic view of the Senate and its potential.

The former Senate President, Bruce Balboni, was gone for two weeks last April. Thus Miss Oken has previously been the Senate's acting President. Upon his return, they did much work together. "I feel that I have had a lot of experience for the position" Miss Oken told the Collegian. She also stated that she and Balboni who resigned Nov. 19, are fairly similiar in views. Thus, she thinks that this will make it easier to start where he left off.

According to the senior from Sharon, the purpose of the Student Senate is the same as that of any governmental agency - to allocate responsibility. She feels that the Senate has ". . . lots of potential but it can't do anything without student support." She said, with student backing, the Senate can take "a hardline stand on real issues."

To Cindy Oken, the Senate should lead the students. "I think it should be a step or two ahead of the student body, and then bring them up to its level. But if it's too far ahead - you lose them." said Miss Oken in response to a question concerning the Senate's relationship to the student body.

The new president agrees with Balboni that the Senate has "set a new style" and has passed "much important legislation." She said she has seen the evolution in the four years she has been on the Senate. For example, the Senate is no longer concerned with having open house more than once a month. Now, according to Cindy, Senators are dealing with the principle that a student's life in a dormitory is his own, and he should have to answer only to the people he lives with.

Thus Miss Oken feels that the University Board of Trustees should not be involved with social issues. She also thinks that the students, along with the faculty, should have a say in academic matters.

When questioned what the Senate's relationship with the outside community should be, the President said, "That is something you question for years." The Senate could, according to Miss Oken, spend all its energy trying to change laws. She then goes on to say, "Things on campus are not perfect. I take one thing at a time."

Hanoi Rally Is Sunday

The Massachusetts chapter of Young Americans for Freedom (YAF) Sat. announced it will hold a "Tell It To Hanoi" rally Dec. 7 - Pearl Harbor Day - at 7 p.m. on Boston Common.

The chapter asks that participants gather in front of the State House at 6:45 p.m. for a candlelight parade to the Common. Candles will be available but marchers are urged to bring their own.

The procession will move down Park Street to Tremont to Boylston to Charles, where marchers will assemble for the rally at the Charles - Beacon corner of the Common.

Speakers will include YAF leaders from this area, two Marine veterans from Vietnam and a representative from South Vietnam.

Invited to speak were Vice President Spiro Agnew, and U. S. Rep. Mendel Rivers (D-S.C.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee. A spokesman said it is not known if Agnew will appear, but there is a good chance Rivers will.

In a statement, the state YAK urged America's "silent majority" to "commit themselves publicly for the United States, for our prisoners of war in Vietnam, for our fighting men in the battlefields of South Vietnam, for the freedom of the South Vietnamese people, and for freedom both here and around the world."

Poor Usually Unheard But...

In Dorchester County, South Carolina, there is a community of Blacks and Indians who are trying to do something about this situation. How widespread is the poverty in Dorchester County?

The 1960 U. S. Census reported a total of 24,383 people in Dorchester County - 12,480 whites and 11, 903 non-whites. Out of the total population of the County, 9,654 were earning less than the official poverty level of $3,000 a year: 8,094 of these poor people are non-whites. The estimated Indian population of 500 in Dorchester County was not even earning poverty wages - the unemployment rate among these Indians was 100%. However, the most recent annual figures (1966-1967) show that the State public welfare assistance budget for Dorchester County is only $31,000 which amounts to $3.20 per person per year. By contrast, $386,000 was alloted in the same year for "public highways" in Dorchester County. According to recent figures from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, only 2,017 people are enrolled in the Government Food Stamp Program.

Poverty is easy to talk about, but it is hard to live. The community of Blacks and Indians now have their own freedom school, initiated and developed from within. Under the direction of Mrs. Victoria Delee, a local Black resident, they have pushed to integrate the schools and register voters. But with all these programs, they have yet to overcome the deficiency of food and clothing.

Revenue Service Center To Receive Tax Returns

BOSTON - The 3.2 million Federal income taxpayers in Massachusetts will be sending their income tax returns directly to the Internal Revenue Service Center in Andover, starting in January, District Director William E. Williams announced today.

When filing their return individual taxpayers will be using the new Form 1040 which consolidates the old card Form 1040A and provides all taxpayers the opportunity of taking advantage of every tax saving benefit.

The new Form 1040 is a one-page basic form to which particular tax situations can be covered by filing available schedules. In Massachusetts the 722,669 former Form 1040A filers may take advantage of the unlimited deduction limitations.

Director Williams' announcement concerning the direct filing to the Service Center instead of the Boston District Office as in past years, states the new filing plan is designed to reduce processing costs and to expedite the sending of 1.5 million refund checks valued at $293 million within six weeks after the return due a refund is correctly filed.

Hit 'Em In the Box

All over the nation students want to throw the war machine off campuses, end ROTC and eliminate research done for the Defense Department. Noble ideas, but they miss the point. Forcing military programs and projects to leave campus will not accomplish anything of substance.

Certainly, ROTC as it is now conducted is not an intellectual endeavor, but that military officers are trained in what is presumably a questioning, ethical environment may produce officers who are also human beings. The charge has been made that decision-makers in the military are not ROTC men. True, but a college trained man is more likely to disobey a brutal, Hitleresque order than is an officer trained elsewhere. To remove ROTC will only make the military more irresponsible and isolated from the people than it is now. Some other way of controlling it must be found.

Eliminating defense research is short-sighted. The fact is that we need a well-armed military force, albeit not armed with nerve gas, Q fever and other genocidal weapons. Although this organ of our body-politic has spurted out of control, raped Vietnam and ruptured our generation's faith in America, we must not castrate it. We may need to use it again - if only to give weight to future foreign policies. The power of the Pentagon must be harnessed and subjected to civilian control. The Pentagon must be forced to realize that it exists as an organ of society for society's sake, not vice-versa.

Therefore action ought to be taken against those who control the military and appropriate funds for it. If we would change the position of the military in America, if we would stop research on weapons of genocide and end the vicious circle of competition between the two super powers, then we must control those who run the military. We must make all research reviewable by Congress. More importantly we must see that the chairmen of Congressional committees on the military are men concerned more with society and man that with the needs of the military-industrial complex. The seniority system must be replaced and liberal Congressmen must seek seats on the military committees.

Furthermore we must elect officials pledged to reduce the Pentagon's power in the nation. The decision makers of the nation must be changed if we are to diminish the power of the military. We must hit the military-industrial complex at the ballot-box by electing civilized men as Senators, Representatives, and as President.

Merely throwing the war machine off campus will not help, for it will simply move away to where we cannot even see it at work. By electing men who a s decision-makers will not permit research for death we can not only throw the machine off campuses, we can throw it out of the United States.

The emphasis of those who seek peace and fear global suicide should be altered. Concentration should not be on the symptoms of a sick national ethic but on the men who run the nation. Change the men who decide the priorities of the country, in Congress and in the White House, and you will change the influence and goals of the military and industrial complexes in America.

UNICEF

UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Fund has been at work for years helping children and their mothers in war-torn or impoverished areas all over the world. In its early years following World War II, UNICEF supported many emergency feeding programs. Large quantities of milk powder and Vitamins A and D helped stave off malnutrition for millions. But it soon became apparent that the race with hunger could be run only with long-range planning.

The attack on hunger in any country must be part of an overall program of economic and social development. It would do little good for a country to increase its protein food production if the individual mother did not know the importance of putting those protein foods into her child's diet. It would be equally hopeless to knock on every door to educate individual householders in the basics of good nutrition. And the least likely prospect of all would be that UNICEF, with its very limited budget, would be able to finance such projects to any effective degree.

But UNICEF doesn't work alone. In every country, there are people in government, in private agencies, professional people and volunteer groups, who want to help children. UNICEF's aim is to encourage their efforts by supplementing with international help the local resources, making them more effective.

For every dollar UNICEF allocates, the assisted government spends an average of two dollars and fifty cents of its own. In addition to more than doubling the available funds, this system assures that the project will help the receiving nation to help itself.

To do this, UNICEF itself needs help - your help. One of the ways you can make a very real contribution to the needy children of Asia, Africa, Latin America and the Middle East, is with the purchase of UNICEF Greeting Cards.

Designed by prominent artists of many countries, UNICEF Greeting Cards are lovely to look at, and demonstrate your concern for the children of today, who are the hope of tomorrow.

Once again this year, under the sponsorship of the Pan Hellenic Council, UNICEF Cards and Calendars will be on sale in the Student Union during the week of Dec. 1 - 5 between the hours of 9-4.

Home Ecch!

During the past weeks I have been an interested observer to the undercurrent of unrest in the School of Home Economics. As an undergraduate in the school and a student who has returned after a lapse of several years, I occupy a unique - if peculiar - position. I find myself a contemporary of several of the faculty and yet as an undergrad I am subject to the same pressures and frustrations as the other students. Perhaps these frustrations are even more acute in my case in that I feel the pressure of time passing rapidly and am eager to complete the learning process and begin the "doing". So when my fellow students speak of a course being relevant or irrelevant I know well what they are feeling.

It was with great anticipating that I went to last Thursday's Student-Faculty meeting in Skinner Hall, hopeful that many of our common complaints could be heard. And they were heard - but were they listened to I wonder? Shades of Simon and Garfunkel! "People talking without speaking. People hearing without listening." With a wave of the hand and a tolerant smile for the foolish ideas of youth, legitimate constructive criticisms were turned aside without the common courtesy of a moment's consideration. I was appalled and angry, and again I knew the frustration of my fellow students. The questions that might have been raised - should have been raised - were swept away in a total mind-numbing despair. And few of us could then question while in such shock. There was no warmth left; no one attempted to cross the chasm that had been opened. The meeting disintegrated into irrelevancy. "Sounds of silence?" I hope not.

Timid Tactic?

"The Peace March is over, leaving Pennsylvania Avenue strewn with litter." - One Washington radio station's coverage of a major historical event.

Before the emotional fervor that drew so many to participate in Washington on November 16 dies, and peace goes on vacation until next month's Moratorium, I would like to comment on the politics of what "should have been" a major historical event for the entire nation, the world.

The November March on Washington was a beautiful experience, and a very self-satisfying one for more than one million individuals that took part in it. (Yes - one million - this estimate given by UPI during the March seemed to havebeen lost in the crowd, for it never made print.) However, the March took second-fiddle to a college football game, and that well-planned patriotic phallis, the Apollo moon shot in its politics. Indeed Spiro had little to fear from the media that weekend, for it had been effectively strangled by Nixonian decree. The victim could probably have been found with the very same fingerprints about the neck that were discovered on the victim's neck in the transportation companies' strangulation that occured only a few weeks before - Government censorship maybe?

Television, rapidly becoming less the entertainer of, and more the mirror of the "sick society", lost its mirror luster that weekend. Instead, like the newspapers, television played up, and spoke out against the actions of the Yippies, the weathermen, and other militant factions at the Justice Department demonstration, for what they termed, "the marring of a peaceful protest". The protest against the trial of the Chicago Eight could not have marred what had been already marred by poor coverage, and the devotion of reporters to the sensational and gory details of the gassing of a couple of thousand people.

Which then was the more political - the massive non-violent march or the small, but glorified skirmish at the Justice Department?

Blacks marched peacefully, and in vain for a long while, and received a lot of lip service for their efforts. Only when the match was lit and a black fist was raised, did those who indulged in lip service begin to stutter and react. Could it be that these militant segments of our society are more politically conscious than most, and have come to realize non-violence as a weak and outmoded tactic in a country that seems to only react to violence?

Fast for Songmy

And God said to Cain: "Where is Abel your brother?" And Cain replied: "I didn't know." (Genesis 3:9)

"I amke heaven and earth witness against you this day; life and death have I placed before you, blessing and curse; you shall choose life if you and your seed are to live." (Deut. 30:19)

Did not the Nazis exist in our times? How long can we fail to bring it home to ourselves that there are NO automatic guarantees for men, no inborn limitations in our make-up? We can be humanized. We can be brutalized. We can no longer leave it to chance which way we go. The Nazis and the people who worked the camps with them or did nothing to stop them, the overwhelming majority of them were as sane as we are. Do we still think we are safe? Yes, yes we do! Hawk or dove, we think Songmy was an individual mother did not know the importance of putting those protein foods into her child's diet. We all play the game of Songmy, but the conditions are not yet so extreme for the most of us. When they will be, we will produce Songmys with no qualms, you and I. What are we doing to preyent those conditions from coming about?

The time has come for repentance and resolve. The accusing finger points to all of us, or to none of us. We are not guilty of the murders of Songmy. The courts will fix the guilt. We are all guilty of not having done anything to make a Songmy no longer possible. There is no one of us who should not be devoting his every effort, his every personal and professional sill, at least to the degree our society makes us responsible for ourselves and others to find how to make ourselves humane and viable creatures.

I, therefore, humbly suggest that before Moratorium Day, on December tenth and eleventh, from supper to supper, for all whose health and age allow it, be a day of total fast from food and drink. Let it be for repentance and resolve, and for the awareness that there will be no more food or drink, only looming fate of the brutally murdered, and the brutal murderer, or the impersonal, saturation-destruction of our earth at some "aberrated" moment in our psychology. The power of our evil is too great to wait for our good moments. We cannot leave it to God not to bring the Flood on our evil, for we have dislodged Him. Our earth cannot exist any longer without our manipulation. We are now the judges of all the earth. Can we afford NOT to do justice?

RABBI MARIN KOWAL

How do we structure limitations on our bahaviour into our very life patterns to make these limitations part of us, so that we may be free and not a danger to ourselves and our world? I don't know if Moses is now on the mountain, but you and I are dancing around the golden calf of self-deluded normalcy. Are our leaders leading us? No! Each, with pointed finger, dehumanizes others as fast as he can, as if the luxury was still with us. Some leaders talk about lack of patriotism, vested interest, spoiled upstarts; others bask in their self-declared superior humanity, and shout pigs, establishment, honkies, squares.

WFCR to Hold Auditions

WFCR, Five College Radio in Amherst, will hold open auditions for actors on Saturday, December 13th, from 2 until 5 p.m. The auditions are for "voices" to be used in the production of the 13 program series, "An Experiment in Sound Sensations Or, The Non-Drama".

Actors who are selected will be paid between $5.00 and $20.00 depending on the complexity of the part and the length of the script. All types of voices are needed, and previous experience in broadcast is not a requirement.

The auditions will be taped in the WFCR studios on the 3rd floor of Hampshire House on the University of Massachusetts Campus. The auditions are being held to develop an actors file for reference during the production of the programs, scheduled for com - pletion in June of 1970. The "Non-Drama" series is being funded by a grant from the Coprporation for Public Broadcasting.

Is there "something better"...

... than the usual radio-phonograph?

The KLH Model Twenty-Four is a complete stereo system in three unobtrusive oiled-walnut cabinets. The two compact speakers will fit neatly in any living area, and the stereo control center with its Garrard turntable and sensitive FM stereo radio produces a truly remarkable sound.

If you know there's "something better" than a radio-phonograph, buf haven't really heard what all the talk is about, then come on down and listen.

FWPCA Sponsors Pollution Seminars, Strives to Involve Youth in Cause

WATER POLLUTION CONTROL ADMINISTRATION

PLAN NATION-WIDE STUDENT SEMINARS ON PROTECTING THE ENVIRONMENT

Secretary of the Interior Walter J. Hickel announced recently that Interior's Federal Water Pollution Control Administration is sponsoring a series of student pollution seminars "to involve the youth of our nation in the fight to prevent the contamination of our environment." The one-day seminars will be held on December 29 and 30 in cities located in the nine FWPCA regions across the country.

"We want to tap the enthusiasm, vigor, and fresh ideas of our country's high school and college youth in this battle to protect and preserve our precious and irreplaceable water resources," Secretary Hickel added.

The seven-hour seminars will feature speakers and participants from the FWPCA's nine regional offices, and will focus on what is being done and what still needs to be done to combat water pollution. Particular pollution problems which have defied technological solutions so far, and problems in different regions of the country will also receive attention at the seminars.

Carl L. Klein, Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Water Quality and Research, said, "The seminars are planned for the Christmas holidays so as not to divert students from their studies and to permit maximum participation. We think that the contributions the young people of the country can make toward cleaning up the environment will be of great value. We intend to use the seminars as a starting point for enlisting their continuing help."

Klein explained that student advisory groups will be formed at each seminar to elect a five-member group to make up a regional Student Council on Pollution and the Environment (SCOPE). "Each regional SCOPE will elect one member to a national SCOPE which will serve in an advisory capacity to Secretary Hickel," Klein added.

Secretary Hickel will also designate a student to serve with National SCOPE to make it a 10-member body.

"We hope to expand membership of the regional SCOPEs to nine members to make allowances for possibly missing full representation at the seminars of schools across the country," Klein said. He added that he and David D. Dominick, Commissioner of the FWPCA, would be personally involved in all the meetings of the National SCOPE.

"The national and regional councils will serve as focal points for organizing student activities aimed at combatting environmental pollution," Dominick said.

Dominick added that the locations and dates of the seminars are as follows: Northeast Region, Boston, Massachusetts, December 29; Middle Atlantic Region, Richmond, Virginia, December 30; Ohio Region, Taft Center, Cincinnati, Ohio, December 29; Great Lakes Region, Chicago, Illinois, December 29; Missouri Basin Region, Kansas City, Missouri, December 30; Southeast Region, Atlanta, Georgia, December 29; South Central Region, Dallas, Texas, December 29; Southwest Region, San Francisco-Bay area, December 29, and Northwest Region, Portland, Oregon, December 30.

Activists Contribute To New Book

Bobby Seale, chairman of the Black Panther party, just convicted of contempt of court and sentenced to four years in prison; Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin, founders and leaders of the Yippies; David Dellinger, the leading pacifist-revolutionary; Tom Hayden and Rennie David, the two leading young political activists-both founders of SDS; Lee Weiner, doctoral candidate and teaching assistant in Sociology at Northwestern University; John R. Froines, professor of chemistry at the University of Oregon have all contributed to a new book, THE CONSPIRACY, with an introduction by Noam Chomsky, which was published by Dell Publishing Co. Inc., November 17th.

These eight prominent political activists who are on trial in Chicago federal court are accused of conspiracy "to incite, organize, promote, encourage, participate in and carry on a riot" in the streets of Chicago during the week of the Democratic National Convention. However, throughout the trial the eight intend to focus public attention on the root issues that brought thousands of demonstrators to Chicago - the war, racism, the continuing enfeeblement of the nation's political processes.

Wood Contest Winners

The Colonial Lounge at the Student Union was the scene of the Wood Technology Coffee Hour, November 17th at 7 p.m. The purpose of the event was to select the lucky winners for the contest sponsored by the group during Wood Industries Week.

The names and gifts presented are as follows: The Alumni Chair, donated by S. Bent Brothers, Inc., was won by Edward Brousseau. Kenneth Wissman received the tennis racket, donated by A. G. Spaulding Company. John Sinclair was presented a pool cue, donated by the A.M.F. Company. Lastly, Sue Owens won the coffee table, presented by the Winchendon Furniture Company. The 5000 wooden nickles that flooded the campus the last two weeks were donated by the Allen-Rogers Company at Laconia, New Hampshire.

The purpose of the contest was to publicize and promote the field of Wood Technology as a college major and future career.

Bond, Spock Head Springfield College Day of Concern

The Springfield College Student Council is sponsoring a symposium set for Wednesday, December 10, at Memorial Field House, Springfield College. Participants in the symposium include Julian Bond, Roy Innis, Col. James Feeney, and Dr. Benjamin Spock.

JULIAN BOND

Bond and Innis will head the 10:00 a.m. symposium on Racism. Feeney and Spock will be concerned with the Draft at their 1:00 p.m. symposium.

Tickets may be purchased at the ticket booth in the Beveridge Center on the Springfield College campus, 263 Alden Street, between 9:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. December 1-5, 1969. A $3.00 ticket will be valid for both symposiums. Tickets will also be sold at the door in the Memorial Field House.

JULIAN BOND

Bond, a founder of the Committee on Appeal for Human Rights and the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), has been on active civil rights worker. He is a member of the Georgia House of Representatives and serves as a member of the Southern Correspondents Reporting Racial Equality Wars (SCRREW).

Mr. Bond was co-chairman of the Georgia Loyal National Democratic Delegation, an insurgent group, in 1968. He and the group were successful in their attempts to unseat the regular, hand-picked Georgic delegation. Bond was nominated for vice-president, but withdrew.

A prolific writer, his poems and articles have appeared in many literary and political journals. Bond was the first co-chairman of the National Conference for New Politics and served as a member of the NCNP Executive Board.

ROY INNIS

Roy Innis, National Director of CORE - Congress on Racial Equality -, was born in the Virgin Islands and raised in Harlem. A City College of New York graduate, he majored in chemistry.

Mr. Innis served as educational director of the Harlem CORE and established one of the most active committees in the chapter. One of the main forces in the CORE drive for quality education and community control of the schools, Mr. Innis was responsible for changes in the ideological direction of CORE - black power and black self-determination.

In September 1967, Innis became executive director of the Harlem Commonwealth Council, a group formed to develop small industries and an investment corporation with the goal of creating capital instruments to bring about economic viability in Harlem.

COL. JAMES FEENEY

Colonel Feeney was appointed Deputy Director of Selective Service for Massachusetts in March 1965. This was another milestone in his career with Selective Service.

In September 1940, Colonel Feeney became a civilian employee of Selective Service and he entered military service in 1942 after receiving "Greetings" from his draft board. Commissioned a second lieutenant in early 1943, Colonel Feeney served with the Army in Europe during World War II.

A recognized authority on military manpower procurement, he has been assigned to Massachusetts Selective Service Headquarters since the outbreak of the War in Korea.

The Colonel was born and educated in Boston. He and his wife, the former Dorothy Griffin, reside with their three sons, Paul J., a student at Southern Illinois University, Richard and Donald in Mattapan.

DR. BENJAMIN SPOCK

From 1954 to 1963 Spock wrote monthly articles for the LADIES HOME JOURNAL and these were the material from which were made two books, "Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers," 1961, and "Problems of Parents," 1962, both published by Houghton Mifflin. Since 1963, he has written for REDBOOK. In recent years, he has emphasized the necessity for relating child rearing to the needs of the nation and the world.

Spock joined the National Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy in 1962 and was co-chairman (with Professor H. Stuart Hughes of Harvard) until October 1967. He then became co-chairman (with James Rollins of St. Louis CORE) of the National Conference for New Politics and made frequent trips to speak about freedom and peace for NCNP and other organizations.

In January of 1968, Spock was charged along with four other men of conspiring to counsel young men to evade the draft. In a subsequent trial, he (and three others) was found guilty; the case is now on appeal. He is currently speaking nationwide on behalf of the Civil Liberties Legal Defense Fund Inc., an organization which raises funds to provide for the legal defense of conscientious resisters throughout the country.

Redman Cagers, Sparked by Overflow Crowd, Proved Themselves Capable

By STEVE ROSS
Senior Reporter

What does he do for an encore? This must be the question that hundreds of UMass basketball fans are asking themselves about sophomore forward Julius Erving. In his first varsity performance, the 6'5 jumping-jack pulled down 28 rebounds, a school record. He also poured in 27 points, all but three in the final half.

But Julius did not lack for company in the spotlight of this shining moment of Redmen hoop history. Captain Ray Ellerbrook, Dennis Chapman, rookie John Betancourt, and Dick Samuelson were all major contributors in the win.

Ellerbrook, despite a short preseason that was hampered by a slowly mending clavicle, looked in mid-season form as he shot at a 50% clip in scoring 25 points. Surprisingly, he was the second leading UMass rebounder with 8.

Chapman drew plaudits from Coach Jack Leaman with a strong two-way performance. The 6'4 "Bopper" canned 13 points and played his usual strong game on defense.

Bettancourt inherited Joe DiSarcina's number, and, even though DiSarcina was sitting at the press table, it looked like he was back on the floor. Bettancourt quarterbacked the attack, ball hawked superbly, and managed to score ten points including two big free throws in the final minute to help ice the game.

Samuelson's performance was far more important than it may have looked on the surface. Eight points and three rebounds are not the performances that send crowds home gasping, but while "Sam" was in, he contained the PC inside game quite well. The Friars were never allowed penetration, and, as a result, were never able to blow the game open.

Another major contribution made by Erving was his ability to draw fouls. He was the major reason for the early departure of Jim Larranaga, Craig Callen and Ray Johnson, as he shot a dozen free throws.

Probably the turning point of the game was the inability of Providence to cope with the 1-3-1 halfcourt trap press of the Redmen in the final 6:33. As PC mentor Dave Gavitt put it, "We threw the ball away too much."

The crowd itself was a major story. The 6000 or so that were counted at 4200 were undoubtedly the most spirited aggregation ever assembled under the roof of the Cage. The 50 or so PC students that motored up from Rhode Island sparked the home crowd even more.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - The Boston newspapers took the UMass win in typical fashion, i.e., silence. The Globe had nothing either a.m. or p.m. The Herald Traveler had one paragraph, and who reads the Record American?

A lack of class was showed by a few of the home folks in their treatment of Jack Gallagher. The vicious comments were totally uncalled for. Gallagher is primarily a defensive specialist, and, as a result, will never be mistaken for Billy Cunningham on offense. All the hecklers who were booing showed a total lack of basketball knowledge.

Leaman disclosed that the big play in which Bettancourt hung up a pass at the right of the lane which allowed Erving to launch himself, gather it in, and score, all in the same motion was Bettancourt's idea, and not a set play. Leaman joked, "I'm too dumb to think of something like that."

The Conference opener is Saturday with Vermont. There is really no reason in the world why the student body can't show up like it did on Tuesday for every home game. It's unquestionably the fastest way to a new Field House.

JOHN BETANCOURT scores two more in Tuesday's victory over Providence.

Celts Win 113-105

(AP) - Larry Siegfried, who led all scorers with 31 points, came up with his biggest basket with just about one minute to go after the Bullets had drawn within two points at 107-105 and the Celtic's backcourt ace then sank two free throws with 10 seconds remaining to clinch the decision.

Havlicek wound up with 27 points while Gus Johnson led the Bullets with 26 and Earl Monroe tossed in 20.

The Bullets hit six straight points just before the intermission to make it 56-54, and with Johnson, Monroe and Jack Marin heating up they put it down to 75-70 midway through the third period.

Siegfried hit three straight baskets at this juncture and banged in two more early in the final quarter to hold off the surging Bullets, who twice drew within three points early in the session and then got it down to two points near the end but could never catch up.

Wrestlers Entertain U.R.I. Friday in Season Opener

Veteran Squad, Along with Talented Sophomores, Could be UMass' Best

By BOB GANLEY

With an aim at improving on last year's 9-6 record, best in the school's history, the UMass wrestling team opens its season tomorrow night at home against Rhode Island. The Redmen then travel to Medford on Saturday afternoon to meet Tufts.

Coach Homer Barr has a veteran squad, with lettermen returning in seven out of the ten weight classes. However, the members of the UMass New England champion freshmen of a year ago have provided strong competition for the upper classmen and the result is that Coach Barr find s himself with probably the strongest team in UMass wrestling history.

"I think we will be a better team than a year ago," said Barr when commenting on the upcoming season. "We have a young team, but more overall balance from light to heavy weights than last year. I'm extremely pleased with the way the squad has been working," he continued, "and in many cases the sophomores are beating the lettermen."

There are ten veterans returning from last year's squad which finished third in the New England tournament. Junior George Zguris from Shirley, N.Y., who had a 4-5 dual meet record but was N.E. champ at 191 lbs., has been moved up to the unlimited class by coach Barr but may wrestle at his old weight as soon as footballer Dick Donlin, a 280-pounder from New Britain, Conn., can get in wrestling shape.

Senior Tim Perkins from Ipswich, who was 3-0 a year ago until an injury sidelined him for the season, will be wrestling at 191 or even 177 if the situation demands it.

The outlook for the Redmen was hurt considerably when it was learned that Bob Freeman, a N.E. champ at 145 lbs. and the best wrestler on the team last year, will be lost for the season with a neck injury. Freeman would have wrestled at 150 this year, under the new weight classes, and his absence presents a problem for coach Barr.

Brian Urquhart, a senior from Hingham and a very steady performer for the Redmen, would have been an excellent replacement for Freeman, but sickness has put him out of action for an inefinite period. This leaves Steve Bercovitch, Blaubelt, N.Y., alone at 150 and Barr feels that he could be a pleasant surprise if he continues to improve.

Mike Brauner, Pottstown, Pa. and Tom Young, Clearfield, Pa., both mainstays on last year's team are battling each other for the starting nod at 158 lbs. Brauner compiled a 10-4 record last year while Young was 11-2 and fourth in N.E., and together they should make this class one of the strong points for the Redmen.

Another strong class for the redmen will be 177. Veterans Tom Andrewes, Springfield and Bob Willman, Teaneck, N.J., are vying for this spot. Andrewes was 12-3 a year ago and Willman was 7-4 and third in N.E.

Sophomores have a strong hold on the lightweights and Barr hopes they will strengthen the area which hurt the team most last year. At 118 lbs., soph Dave Reynolds, Portville, N.Y., has a slight edge on junior Nick DiDomenico, Bellville, N.J., who had a 9-7 record last year. Reynolds was 6-1 as a freshman and also N.E. champ. soph Barry Godowsky from Newark, Del., who was 5-2 as a freshman, is also h contention.

Junior Rich Tyma, from Levittown, Pa., didn't wrestle last year, but came out this year and surprised Barr by gaining firm control of the 126 lb. class. Barr is very happy with the way Rich has wrestled and, right now, he is th e most definite of the Redmen starters.

Sheldon Goldberg, a soph from Valley Stream, N.Y. who was undefeated as a freshman has the edge over Phil Davis in the 134 lb. class. Davis, a junior from Wilmington, N.C., was 10-6 last year and was the most versatile member of the team, wrestling at three different weights. Clay Jester, a soph from Dover, Del. and N.E. freshman champ, will start at 142 and will be backed up by another sophomore, Mark Thone, from West Newbury.

Kent Mignocci, a soph from Riverdale, N.Y., placed second in the N.E. tourney as a freshman and has been given the starting berth at 167 lbs. Another soph who may be a starter is Jim Godkin, Bergenfield, N.J. who has gained an edge over veterans Brauner and Young at 158. Other Redmen to see action will be Bruce Buckbee, a soph from Greenbush, N.Y., at 177; Larry Piccioli, a soph from Ashland, at 150 and Bob Parent, a 126 pound sophomore from Scituate.

The Redmen should win both meets this weekend, but URI could be tough with several returning lettermen. Coach Barr will be happy to be at .500 at Christmas with the likes of Harvard, Ohio St., Indiana St. and Bloomsburg (Pa.) St., all wrestling powers, coming up on the schedule.

Ellerbrook, Erving Win 'M' Club Luncheon Awards

Ray Ellerbrook and Julius Erving were honored at the first Varsity 'M' Club basketball luncheon yesterday at the Newman Center. That was no surprise. Both were outstanding in the big win over Providence.

Coach Jack Leaman, who coached his Redmen to one of their biggest victories, also was not surprising in his assessment of the win. "It was a terrific way to start the season, a great effort. It was one of those games we have to win to prove ourselves a good ballclub and we won it. We proved to ourselves, if not to anyone else in New England, that we are as quality as basketball team as anyone."

"The crowd had a lot to do with the win", Leaman went on, "as they had a great influence on the way our kids played. Also the seniors, Chapman, Samuelson and Ellerbrook all played real well, and kept us in the ball game. They gave us the stability we needed."

Leaman termed Ellerbrook's performance, "his finest all-around game he has ever played at UMass" and the performances of two of his super sophs, Erving and John Bettancourt, "remarkable jobs for kids in their first games."

Leaman was not happy with one thing, the defense. "We have been never worse than third in New England in defense in the last few years, and we have to improve our work in this area."

Assistant coach Peter Broaca gave two scouting reports on Vermong and Rhode Island. He termed Vermont, Saturday's Cage opponent for the Redmen, "one of their tallest teams, but a team that we should defeat if we play basketball."

Concerning the powerful Rhody squad Broaca had a more ear-catching prognosis. "I have been awed in scouting a team only twice. Once was a few years back when scouting one of those great Boston College teams. The other time was Tuesday night seeing Rhode Island. I really couldn't believe my eyes. They have gone out and got junior college transfers and are building a powerful program."

"There are not many better teams in New England and, if we are to defend the Conference crown, we must defeat them."

Amherst Downs Mermen, 68-26

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

A well-balanced Amherst swimming team defeated the UMass swimmers, 68-26, last night at the Boyden pool. Depth was the winning factor for Amherst, as it placed at least two swimmers in the scoring column in each race. With only six swimmers, UMass was not able to compete with their depth.

The meet was highlighted by outstanding performances from Amherst's Gary Haag, who set a new pool record in the 200 yard butterfly, with a time of 2:05.1, and from UMass' Mark Miller, who won the 50 and 100 yard freestyles and anchored the winning 400 yard freestyle relay team.

Individual winners for the Jeffs of Amherst were Kister, Leach, Playe, Starkweather, and Borton. It's 400 yard medlay relay team had no opponent, as the lack of men forced UMass coach Joe Rogers to place no entries in this race and also in the 200 yard butterfly.

The Redmen swimmers were deservedly tired at the end of the meet as four men swam in three races and the other two men swam in two races. Captain Al Northup took a second in the 200 yard breaststroke and a third in the 200 yard individual medley.

Morris Lynch added to the scoring two second place finishes, one coming in the 200 yard freestyle and the other in the gruelling 500 yard freestyle. Herb Schuster came up with third place finishes in the 200 yard breaststroke and the diving competition.

Rounding out the individual scoring was Dick Vogel, who took a third place in the 200 yard backstroke. The Redmen ended the meet with a satisfying victory in the 400 yard freestyle relay, as each of the four men on the team was swimming in his third race.

Everyone at UMass, including Coach Leaman, thinks the Redmen are No. 1.

Trades Continue

(AP) - Baseball's trading deadlock broke in a hurry Wednesday night when three deals were announced -- tw o of them within minutes of one another -- as the sport's annual winter meetings moved here from Fort Lauderdale.

In the biggest trade, the Atlanta Braves swapped veteran outfielder Felipe Alou to the Oakland Athletics in exchange for right-hander Jim Nash.

Alou, a 12-year veteran with a career batting average of .290, was the first name player to be swapped at these meetings. Limited by injuries last year, he appeared in 129 games and batted .282 for the Braves.

Nash, 24, is 10 years younger than Alou. The 6-foot-5 right-handed pitcher was a disappointment to the A's last year with an 8-8 record and 3.68 ERA. He was rookie of the year in 1964 when he won 12 of 13 decisions.

Brubacher to Leave At Semester's End

Paul W. Brubacher, Assistant Dean of Students in charge of the Southwest Residential College, will leave the University at the end of the current semester to assume the post of Dean of Students at the University of Rhode Island.

Since coming to UMass four years ago Brubacher has served as Area Coordinator for Southwest and then as Asst. Dean.

Also leaving the University in January is John A. Messanger, Central Area Coordinator. Messanger, who announced his resignation several weeks ago, will become Dean of Students at Calgary University in Canada.

One University official said he believes Brubacher's departure is related to the fact that he was not appointed to the position of Associate Dean of Students earlier this year when Dr. Mark Noffsinger resigned. Late this past summer Daniel Fitzpatrick from the University of Michigan was named to the position of Associate Dean.

As of now there are no immediate plans to find a replacement for Brubacher.

Faculty Senate Rules Frosh Can't Flunk Out

By AL SIROTA
Staff Reporter

The Faculty Senate yesterdaypassed a motion which prevents Freshman and first Semester transfer students from flunking out of the University.

The Senate reasoned that it is difficult for new students to adjust socially and academically to the University, and that this adjustment usually takes at least a year to achieve.

Also, the Senators reasoned, students often take a year or more to find a major in which they are interested. It is wrong, they argued to penalize a student for doing poorly in courses which they dislike and which they discover they have little interest in. They said that students should be able to "change to something else, something which interests them.

The Board of Admissions and Records felt that allowing a student to continue at the University and take advantage of personnel services offered during the second semester would be more beneficial than a semester of forced absence.

The text of the motion follows:

For a trial period of two years, beginning in June 1969, no freshman shall be charged with academic suspension at the end of his first semester;

and

That any freshman who fails to achieve the retention average for his class shall therefore be allowed to continue for a second semester at the usual time, with no penalty except being placed on academic probation;

and

That any freshman who fails to reach the retention average following the second semester shall be charged with an academic suspension, which shall be his first;

and

That the Registrar present to the Faculty Senate a report of the retention experience of these students in September 1970.

In other senate business, Provost Tippo announced that the Board of Trustees has approved the addition of 1500 students to the University.

SUG Board OK's Student Pay Hike

The Student Union Governing Board passed an act last night that would put part time student employees on the same base as non-student employees, effective in the Fiscal year of 1971. This action will increase the Student Union payroll by approximately $1500 per month.

Secretary-Treasurer of the SUG Board, Bob Twiss, commented, "After a number of years of discrimination against students in reference to wages and working conditions in favor of non-students, the SUG Board has finally taken authoritative action to place part-time student employees on the same basis with non-students."

Joe Ackerstein, a member of the SUG Board Finance Committee which recommended this action, pointed out that, "This applies just to people paid out of general funds, work study students do not apply."

Amsterdam Education a Rewarding Experience

By LOU DIMONACO
News Editor

(Editor's note - With vacation coming us, MDC News Editor Lou DiMonaco today begins a five part series on the world's best nighttime entertainment spots, based on his travel experiences in Europe and North America.)

Far, far away, across the great ocean, the Ocean of Eric the Red, Columbus, and Putney Swope lays a land of dikes and wind-blown windmills, the land of Holland.

Now there is nothing really outstanding about Holland itself, unless you dig flowers. But the city of Amsterdam, the capital of the Netherlands, holds a host of erotic pleasures for anyone in the mood for sensual saturation.

Admittedly American is turning a more liberal eye toward the better things in life, but if you wish to view the future of sexuality, visit Amsterdam. Tomorrow's America lives on Canal Street.

Among the less tempting, but nonetheless curious privileges of Amsterdam can be found in the sacred halls of Paridisio, and Fantasio. For the nominal price of three Gildens (approximately $.84) one may purchase a membership card to these socalled "experimental clubs".

Take for example Fantasio, after paying the membership fee, and checking your coat, you are drawn to a small room adjacent to the entrance hallway. Therein are scattered assorted individuals from around the world, engaged in idle conversation over a warm cup of tea, and all the marajuana, hashish, and capsules that anyone's heart, or rather mind, could desire. It is a veritable king's banquet of psychadelia.

Downstairs, amid a miriad of dark and mysterious corridors lurks mephistophilan creatures preoccupied with the sale of all forms of mind benders. And on the second floor, on the right as you go up the stairs, is a small, cozy bar designed to quench the thirst of travelers, after a weary and wayward trip.

To the left, is a large room, usually packed with the younger generations version of the United Nations (only they get along with each other). Here you can find a light show that has not been parralelled since the creation of the universe. The band, needless to say, plays that type of music which is condusive to "living sound dimension".

But, adventure seekers, this is just the tantilizer. Once you leave the smoke filled rooms and halls of Fantasio, and make your way to the celestial streets by the canals, not far from Central Station you will find the zenith of liberation.

Amid the bright, florescent, red, blue and yellow lights of Canal Street stand the infamous displays of Women. All shapes and sizes, colors and complexions; all specialties and appetities can be found in the windows, like a Christmas display of wares.

There they sit, eyeing the passerby, accentuating their strong points, minimizing their weak points, (which, in fact, are very few), asking you to spend a little time and very little money before you fade into the sunset, and another land.

Haynsworth to Stay on As Appeals Court Judge

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon, after meeting with Clement F. Haynsworth Jr., announced Thursday Haynsworth will continue to serve as chief judge of the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Nixon said he told the judge of his philosophy that an individual cannot expect to avoid defeat but must accept it without fear.

"The judge has suffered a defeat, but he is without fear," Nixon added.

The Senate on Nov. 21 by a vote of 55 to 45 rejected Nixon's nomination of Haynsworth to be an associate justice of the Supreme Court.

Nixon termed it "a very close vote" when he and Haynsworth talked Thursday with White House reporters. It was the first time the two men had met.

In announcing Haynsworth's decision to remain a chief appellate judge despite Senate rejection of his higher ambitions following a lengthy debate over conflict-of-interest accusations, Nixon had this to say:

"I must say that after the brutal, vicious and, in my opinion, unfair attack on his integrity, I would well understand why the judge would retire to private life. A weak man would, a fearful man would. The judge is not a weak man, he is a strong man.

judge is not a weak man, he is a strong man."

The chief executive said "a man of his courage, his integrity, is needed on one of the highest courts of this land and I am very delighted to announce today that the judge will continue to serve as chief judge of the 4th Circuit."

Speaking in his pronounced Southern accent, Haynsworth took over the microphone from Nixon to say:

"No one likes to lose. I don't. But I never have felt that a setback should be accepted as a final defeat of a man as a judge." Turning to Nixon, Haynsworth said:

"I am very grateful to you for your trust. Your support has been constant, unflagging. It has been a great source of pride to me and I will take that pride with me as long as I live."

Haynsworth was nominated by Nixon to succeed former Associate Justice Abe Fortas who resigned in the face of conflict-of-interest charges.

If you are just passing through, you can spend a pleasurable thirty minutes in conversation (or what ever) learning the many ways and means of Dutch life. And you will be only $2.80 in the hole, or in the red, whichever you prefer.

If your stay is longer, it may well be worth your while to pass some time in one of the local bars (be sure you understand the policy of the saloon you plan to "get to know, some may decidely not be your type), that the wondrous women attend between their long, but no less enjoyable, professional hours. Once you get to know one of the many stimulating females, they may offer to show you the sights and sounds, and other sense features of lovely, liberal Amsterdam.

But, if for some reason, you cannot make it with one of the fascinating femmes, then, for a mere 10 Gildens you can spend a night, and even a day, whiling away the hours, learning all there is to learn about the land of dikes and wind-blown windmills.

By no means should you feel out of place on the streets of Amsterdam. One can see wandering the electric fields, everyone from the soiled hobo to the local constable, the bum to the businessman.

And you will find in time, that the style of life has filtered down to the young and curious people of the city. Anything is possible in Amsterdam, and no matter what your attitude toward "higher education," once you have been there, you will always return.

Consider Amsterdam as you search for a course in intersession.

Student Senate Action Clarified

Because of a slight mix-up the incorrect version of the Student Senate's bill S-96 was printed in yesterday's Collegian. The correct bill is as follows:

Whereas, the role of university president as redefined nonetheless continues to encompass duties that are of a direct and vital interest to the undergraduate student body; and,

Whereas, the Student Senate, while recognizing that the final decision to appoint rests as a matter of law with the Board, believes that there can be no meaningful involvement of the University community in the selection process without firsthand contact between the proposed candidates and representatives of the University community; therefore

Resolved that the Senate, recognizing the unwieldiness of a larger and more strictly representative body, and the impracticality of eight separate bodies, does therefore recommend to the Trustee Subcommittee on Presidential Selection the establishment of an Advisory Committee on the selection of the President, consisting of one member of each of the eight existing advisory committees (appointed in accordance with the wishes of the appropriate constituent body, to interview either jointly with the Trustee subcommittee or apart from it, each of the candidates under final consideration, the transcripts of said interviews to be considered generally public, subject to the discretion of the Trustee subcommittee;

Resolved, that the Senate authorize the Amherst undergraduate Advisory Committee to participate in the preliminary stages of the process, so as to avoid undue delay, with the understanding that this authorization shall be reviewed by the Senate upon the decision of the Trustee.

Resolve that the Senate recommends to the Amherst Faculty Senate and Graduate Student Senate, and to the representative agencies of the other campuses, that they take similar action, to insure that all constituencies with a legitimate interest in the appointment are consulted in a meaningful manner.

Many have moved... but the Paulists Stay On...

The Paulists arrived on the West Side of New York City in 1858. In 1895 they moved into San Francisco's Chinatown and into the fringes of Chicago's Loop in 1904.
They're still there.
Times change. Neighborhoods change. Sometimes they go up. Sometimes they go down—but through it all the Paulist stays. As long as there are people to be served the Paulist will be there.
The Paulist may be in the same old place but he constantly does new things. That's one of the characteristics of the Paulist order: using their own individual talents in new ways to meet the needs of a fast-changing world in the colleges...in communications...in the ghettos.

Lodge Ends Paris Term With Private Meeting

PARIS (AP) - Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge ended his 10-month term as chief American delegate at the Vietnam peace talks Thursday with a 30-minute private meeting with North Vietnam's Xuan Thuy.

A North Vietnamese spokesman later declared that Lodge "continues to cling to the American policy of aggression."

It was the first private meeting between Lodge and Thuy since August. It took place in a coffee break at the 45th plenary session of the deadlocked conference. At the plenary session, Lodge said the United States would continue to participate fully in the talks and seek a negotiated compromise.

But he also blamed North Vietnam and the Viet Cong for an "obstinate attitude" which he said had prevented the talks reaching agreement on any point except the shape of the conference table.

He accused Hanoi of wanting to "conquer and dominate South Vietnam so as to create a new authoritarian state of some 50 million people."

"You want to do all this," Lodge added, "so as to discredit the United States, so as to shake this confidence of smaller countries - wherever they maybe - in the value of American friendship, and to shake the confidence of Americans themselves in their capacity to help those smaller countries."

Thuy and acting Viet Cong delegate Dinh Ba Thi devoted much of their speeches to the alleged American atrocities in South Vietnam and asserted that American and South Vietnamese troops were committing mass slaughter of civilians "every day and every hour."

Lodge took the floor a second time to denounce what he said were "wild and inaccurate charges" concerning the alleged U.S. massacre at My Lai.

"An incident such as that alleged in this case is in direct violation not only of U.S. military policy but it is also abhorrent to the conscience of all the American people," he said. "Whatever happened will be known because we do not conceal the truth."

Talking to newsmen at the American Embassy, Lodge said: "I don't give up. I think the achievement of a negotiated peace is of over-whelming importance and a thing as important as that is, I think it will come about some day."

Professor Everett Emerson will not teach English 275, section 3 next semester. However, Prof. Emerson will remain on campus as head of the honors program.

Problems Found in Search For New Draft Director

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration has found it more difficult than expected to fill the shoes of Gen. Lewis B. Hershey as director of the Selective Service System.

Last Oct. 10 the White House announced that Hershey would be replaced next Feb. 16. The delay was to give his successor a chance for on-the-job training as Hershey's deputy while awaiting the transition.

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said then the successor would be named "in the near future."

Almost two months later, the estimate had mellowed to: "as soon as possible."

An informed source confirmed that the search for a new director is still on.

He rejected the idea that it is hard to find qualified people willing to assume the thankless task.

"There are a number of people that really want the job," he said. "We have a couple of highly qualified people. But it's hard to find the kind of qualities we're looking for."

What kind?

They're fairly obvious, said the source, but for one thing a new director would have to be "acceptable to the various constituencies with which he has to deal."

That meant someone who would be welcomed - or at least tolerated - by the nation's draft-age youth as well as congressional leaders who oversee the draft.

One possible prospect was David O. Maxwell, 39-year-old Pennsylvania budget director, who confirmed he was in touch with the White House about a job; neither he nor the White House would say whether they discussed the draft post.

But that was over a month ago.

Paul Dietzel, football coach at the University of South Carolina, said three weeks ago the White House sounded him out about heading the draft, but he wasn't interested.

Hershey, now 76, helped design the modern draft and has headed it since 1941. One president after another kept Hershey despite his advancing age and near-blindness.

Tate Murder Charges Made

LOS ANGELES (AP) - An indictment charging conspiracy to commit murder in the killings of Sharon Tate and others will be sought against the bearded leader of a roaming group of hippie types a prosecuter said Thursday.

This word from Deputy Dist. Atty. Aaron Stevitz was the first indication that Charles M. Manson, called "God" and "Satan" by his followers, will be the target of charges.

Several members of his band have been accused by police of the shooting-stabbing slayings of Miss Tate, actress wife of director Roman Polanski, and six others.

But the only charge thus far against Manson is in Independence, Calif.

Symphony Band Plays Sun.

This Sunday's concert by the University of Massachusetts Symphony Band is featuring two distinctive works composed for winds. Alan Hovhaness composed his SYMPHONY NO. 4 in 1958 for the American Wind Symphony of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Based on Armenian folk melodies, the work exploits a variety of rhythms and textures. Principal players of each of the wind instruments are featured prominently in the symphony.

Throughout the work Hovhaness has scored superimposed meters written for keyboard instruments: celesta, piano, vibraphone, xylophone, glockenspiel and marimba. The composer describes the final movement as unleashing, "a crescendo of clashing bells in free rhythm. I would like to ring all the bells in the thousand towers of the lost Armenian city of Ani in wildly clashing free rhythm."

Bernard Rogers set the THREE JAPANESE DANCES for orchestra in 1933 and later recast them for performance by the Eastman Wind Ensemble. The work, inspired by the art of Japanese wood block masters, opens with a "Dance with Pennons," a delicate, finely wrought movement. The "Dance of Mourning" employs an elaborate group of percussion instruments against a primitive motive sounded by the flute. In contrast, the "Dance with Swords" is an exciting, fiercely rhythmic movement accented with unusual percussion effects.

The concert will be given this Sunday, December 7 at 3:00 in bowker Auditorium. There is no admission charge.

Panther Leader Slain In Chicago Shootout

(AP) - The leader of the Black Panther party in Illinois and a party member were slain and six persons injured Thursday in the second shootout within a month between the militant organization and Chicago police.

Three members of the Panther party were charged with attempted murder and aggravated battery in the predawn gun battle in an apartment on the West Side.

The dead were Fred Hampton, 21, chairman of the Panther organization in Illinois and considered No. 3 man nationally in the organization, and Mark Clark, 22, of Peoria, Ill. Two policemen were injured slightly.

A similar gun fight Nov. 13 claimed the lives of two policemen and a Panther member. Seven persons - six of them policemen - were wounded.

The Cook County - Chicago - state's attorney's office said gunfire erupted as investigators, carrying a search warrant, raided an apartment shared by Hampton and Bobby Rush, another Panther official.

The warrant charging illegal possession of firearms was issued in Circuit Court Wednesday.

Lennon God?

LONDON (AP) - Beatle John Lennon won't be portraying Jesus in St. Paul's Cathedral after all because Lennon's personality might shove Christ into the background, a record company announced Thursday.

The long-haired Beatle had been considered for the lead in a pop musical called "Jesus Christ" in the cathedral next spring. But the writers of the show and the recording company said they were convinced that a relative unknown should be the star.

"Someone like Lennon would imprint his own personality to such an extent that people would read the star's character into the part."

FROM OUR SIDE

The House That...

Many of the words in our vocabulary have originated as a result of folklore. The following is my version of the origin of the word patriotism.

Back in the early days of this country there lived two brothers by the name of Patriot. The older of the two was called John and the younger Adam. The brothers were very close to each other and when they were younger they had a terrible fight with their parents which led them to move away.

They moved to the woods and built the house they now live in as this story is told. Because of their seclusion in the woods the love they each have for the house is the strongest bond between John and Adam. The house was built out of rocks and wood and the labors of the brothers through a hard winter and into the summer. Each part of the house was assembled with the love and pride of a mother seeing her first born. When the house was finally finished the love which John and Adam gave it was clearly evident. In a word it was magnificent. It was the very model of what a house should look like.

During the next few years John and Adam were visited by people in the surrounding area who wanted to see the house. The people soon became good friends with John and Adam and they were admired and respected by all.

A few more years passed and all the while the brothers made new friends. They had a reputation for coming to the aid of any neighbor who was in distress and soon they were the best liked people in the area. The house of course was the main reason for John's and Adam's reputation. For the house gave them strength, with it they set an example for other people, and they could be confident in that whatever they did was right.

However, one day when John and Adam Patriot were sitting in the house something happened. Adam was sitting in his chair and happened to look up at the ceiling which was made out of wood boards. He noticed that a few of the boards had cracks in them. Then he looked at all the stone walls and noticed that a few of the boards had cracks in them also. He told his brother John about this but got no reaction. He told John again and again but John ignored him.

Adam loved the house fiercely and did not want to see it crumble. So despite his brother, he set about to repair the house. But before he got to the door to get tools his brother John asked him where he was going. Adam replied that the house needed repairs. You must understand that John too loved the house, and he told Adam that there was nothing wrong with the house.

Adam insisted there was need for repairs and pointed directly to all the cracks in the house. Then John told Adam that he loved the house as it was and warned Adam not to touch it. Whereupon Adam told John that he too loved the house and because of his love for it he wanted to repair it and make it stronger.

John did not accept this and told Adam to leave the house and never come back unless he agreed to keep the house as it was. The argument raged back and forth, each accusing the other of wanting to destroy the house and as they argued the cracks got wider and wider. Then came a loud crack as the main rafter broke and the house crumbled to the ground killing John and Adam.

Thus when we think of Patriotism we usually think of John and ignore Adam. But had John listened to Adam's patriotism, the house might have been saved.

"No Credit": The Same Old Line

One of the clearest and most blatant forms of racism being committed against black students at UMass is the refusal of the UMass academic administration and the apathetic white student majority to acknowledge the legitimacy of black students on this campus. This rampant form of racism is implemented by the intellectual colonization of black students and reinforced by a naked and oppressive white cultural ethos which by its very nature denies black people any legitimacy except within a white context. A clear example of this statement is the refusal of the administration to accept the Black Studies Program as an integral part of the Academic Curriculum. It makes the University look good, but black students can't take Black Studies courses to fulfill university requirements. Not even Swahili. Perhaps Swahili isn't a foreign language, or at least it isn't one of the Romance or European languages - it ain't white. But "Nigger, you can take it but it means nothing to us. It doesn't meet university requirements. You mustn't forget, we're trying to give you a chance so don't rock the boat. If you do we'll send you back to the plantation. If you want an education you'll get one on our terms. Do you understand that?"

No! Given the reality that this is a white campus, a subterfuge of white racism, black students whether they be enrolled at Old Miss or UMass, can no longer tolerate nor accept the type of rampant cultural imperialism, which is characteristic of white America, being practiced upon them. We can no longer allow white people to define for us less continue to allow this man to keep his feet on our throat. Regardless of where we are, black students must define for themselves. This is the first order of business in the revolutionary process.

The needs, political, economic, intellectual, etc., of black people are different from those of white people. Given this reality, our educational process must be different. There is no such thing as a determinant American culture constituting a total way of life for the whole people inhabiting this land. American culture is fragmented, oriented only to those who have white skin, blue eyes, blonde hair and the dollar bill and who came here from Europe. It doesn't include black people beyond the status of a slave or a colonial subject adding his life to the colonial empire. Of what benefit is this man's education to us in this land. Of what benefit is this man's cultural ethos to us. Frederick Douglass made his answer crystal clear in a speech at Rochester, New York on the 4th of July, 1852.

> "What, to the American slave is your 4th of July? I answer a day that reveals to him, more than all other days in the year, the gross injustices and cruelty to which he is the constant victim. To him, your celebration is a sham; your boasted liberty an unholy license; your greatness swelling vanity; your sounds of rejoicing are empty and heartless; your denunciation of tyrants brass fronted impudence; your shouts of liberty and equality, hollow mockery; your prayers and hymns, your sermons and thanksgivings, with all your religious parade solemnity, are to him mere bombast, fraud, deception, impiety, and hypocrisy - a thin veil to cover up crimes which disgrace a nation of savages. There is no nation on earth guilty of practices more shocking and blooding than are the people of the United States, AT THIS VERY HOUR."

The realities of Black America are different from those of white America and regardless of how UMass tries, this cannot be overlooked or escaped by some stroke of liberal do-goodism. The facts must be faced. It is of no issue whether or not white people can understand, that is of no excuse and can no longer be used lest they be willing to pay the price. And, sensitivity sessions, race relations, dope, or hippie philosophy can't be used as an escape. White people must start dealing with the truth and with their own lies about themselves. And the University of Massachusetts would do well to begin questioning its criteria of education. As it stands now it is not even relevant to white people, how can this man expect for black people to be satisfied with something his own children are vomiting up. Black studies has a function. It would be to everybody's advantage for the university to understand this reality. The price of misunderstanding is awfully high. And the sign on the wall says, "No Credit"!

"Good News, Dear—The Government Says Next Year It'll Be Going Higher Slower"

Number 84. They are All Christs

Number 84 . . . Dec. 25
Draft Board #3, United States
Dear Sir,

This letter is to notify one citizen, Jesus Christ, that pending a pre-induction physical you will be inducted into the Armed Services of America on the date of March 29, in the year of our Lord, Nineteen Hundred and Seventy.

"Are you Jesus Christ?"

"Yes, I am."

"Well now, we give hippy-freaks special attention around here. Go to the examination room, boy, and take off your robe."

"Well doctor, does she pass or not?"

"Mr. Christ does have strange scar tissue on his side, hands, and feet, I feel that he is still physically qualified though."

"Well boy, unless you know some pretty important people, you better get a haircut and shave - you're hardly human. But don't worry, we'll make a man out of you if it's earthly possible."

"Raise your right hand and repeat after me. I, Jesus Christ . . . I said raise your right hand and repeat!"

"No, Sir."

"Listen boy, when I get through with you, you won't be able to stand up."

"It is very hard."

"Boy, I'll give you one more chance . . . I've heard that you have openly spoken against our Army and people are listening to you. Now if you still refuse the oath, you will be arrested as a traitor and sent to prison."

"It is against everything I believe in to kill another man."

"Don't you want to kill, maim, and destroy those gooks and their families for your country? Don't you want us to take your mind? Trust us, we will teach you to kill and not be bothered by it - in fact, you will learn to like it."

"Gooks are human beings that God created, and I cannot kill another man unless he is attacking my own country, and threatening my family. Then I would trust that God would give me strength, but I will not submit to your senseless, inhuman barbary and carnage."

"You are a threat to our establishment. If we allow you to preach against our army's killing and slaughtering, we could be out of our jobs, and the U.S. Army could not play its war games. People listen to the truth too much and we are afraid. You are under arrest for evading the draft and for perpetrating traitorous acts against the United States."

"Father forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Ever since the campus wide vote for funds for the Washington Protest, referendums seem to be in vogue. It was in the wind that referendums should be called for such things as putting Index on subscription to removing the Collegian editors. Putting the referendum in vogue is a good thing, after all isn't that what true democracy is all about?

Journalism Jobs To Be Discussed In Tuesday Meeting

Five area professionals will be available at the SU Colonial Lounge Tuesday from 7 to 9 p.m. to discuss job opportunities in mass communications with interested students.

Sponsored by Alpha Phi Gamma the campus honorary journalism society, the Communications Career Convocation will be informal and casual. Students will be able to talk with the professionals in small groups or individually.

Among those who have accepted APG invitations are Richard Garvey, editor of the Springfield Daily News, who will serve as the resource for newspapers; Durham Caldwell, news director for WHYN radio-television, Springfield; Miss Dorothy Potter of Northampton, who runs a general public relations firm; Ramon Folta of Folta & Schaffer, Greenfield PR advertising agency; and Wesley M. Snapp, market analyst for Channing L. Bete Co., Greenfield, which produces educational books and brochures.

APG Pres. Bill Dickinson said the convocation is open to all UMass students. It should be especially helpful, he said, to seniors looking for career opportunities and juniors seeking advice on summer employment.

Winter Night Skies, cold and uninviting, surround the campus these days, as the Christmas season advances. A Store on The Union, selling Christmas gifts has been set up for student convenience.

each for most popular 8-track has our competitors using a lot of four letter words! But after all, what's a better way of getting to know each other than selling ABBEY ROAD at $2.10 off regular list? You'll really blow your mind when you see the selection (over 2150)! L.P.'s are on sale too. Get into The Stones, Blood Sweat & Tears, Trip on Led Lepplin, Janis Joplin, James Brown — all for just $2.99 each . . . . we've even discounted our service rates 25% and are giving away 3 stereo tape players during this truly heavy 2 week sale.

But please hurry while the selection lasts. If you don't you'll probably get angry and start talking like our competitors.

Massachusetts Review Called One of Nation's Best

A unique institution called the Massachusetts Review marks its tenth anniversary this year.

The quarterly that is now regarded as one of the leading literary magazines of the 1960's made a modest beginning at the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus in the fall of 1959.

Today MR has subscribers in every state in the union and abroad from Moscow to Tokyo. Its list of contributors reads like an honor roll of arts and letters and it is especially noted for publishing the finest art reproductions of any literary periodical in the country. MR has published the best in contemporary poetry by new and well-known writers and has been noted for its special sections: those on Thoreau, Emily Dickinson and Irish writers have later appeared as books.

Since its founding the Review has provided a forum for black and white thinkers and writers on the importance of black culture in America. This commitment is being marked at the tenth anniversary year by the publication of "Black and White in American Culture: An Anthology from the Massachusetts Review," by the University of Massachusetts Press.

W.E.B. DuBois, Martin Luther King Jr., Nat Hentoff, Stokeley Carmichael and Leonard Baskin are among the contributors. The 478 page volume of essays, fiction poetry and art inserts is edited by Jules Chametzky and Sidney Kaplan, both members of the U-Mass English department and both present or past MR editors.

Some recent honors include Borestone Mountain Poetry Awards for two MR poems, an article and a poem from MR in the American Literary Anthology 2 of the National Foundation for the Arts and Humanities, a short story selected for the 1969 O. Henry Prize Stories, and the special MR supplement "Greece Today" chosen as a textbook by the New School for Social Research.

Chametzky, MR editor (on leave) says that the Massachusetts Review, along with the Tri-Quarterly Paris Review and a couple of others, "represent the most significant additions of the 1960's to quality literary journalism." He adds: "In the opinion of many we are the best of this group."

Many other s agree. Lewis Mumford, Norman O. Brown, Mary Ellen Chase and others highly regarded in arts and letters have praised the magazine. Allen Tate says "The Review is one of the three of four best quarterlies we have. . ." Ben Shahn has called it "one of the outstanding magazines in the country." Leslie Fiedler terms it "a handsome and impressive journal."

From its earliest issues the Review has been concerned with design and art. "Our earliest and first distinction was due to our art work and it's a distinction we've tried to maintain," Chametzky said. A major reason is the association of Sidney Kaplan of UMass and Leonard Baskin of Smith College. Kapland, who is an editor at Baskin's Gehenna Press, was in the group that founded the magazine and Baskin was art editor for the first four years. "Baskin has left his imprint indelibly on the magazine," according to Chametzky.

In its first decade the Review has printed more than 15 special art sections which have also been bound separately as supplements. The illustrations are the work of the Meriden Gravure Company of Connecticut, one of the top firms in its field in this country. The art sections have covered a wide range -- Daumier, the caricatures of Manet, two acts of a play and a portfolio of photos of sculpture by Ernst Barlach, the Negro in the Art of Homer and Eakins, the lithographs of Rodolphe Bresdin, plus sections on work by such contemporary artists as Baskin, Leonel Gongora and Michael Aytron.

How does a magazine like MR get started? The original idea in the case of the Review came from Jules Chametzky and David Clark of the English faculty, who in 1958 suggested a publication of some kind for the purpose of stimulating departmental creativity. Then it became a question of how to finance it.

A pledge of $1500 came from the Associate Alumni of the University and the founders decided to go ahead on that amount and seek more money later. "Our strategy was that if we were good enough we'd make it -- we'd find an angel in the wings somewhere," Chametzky recalls. Sidney Kaplan insisted that the magazine be a good one and an impressive one whatever its chances of survival.

Attending the birth of the infant publication was a faculty board of six -- Chametzky and David R. Clark from the English Department, and F.C. Ellert, F.S. Troy, William Deminoff and Paul Gagnon, from various departments, all alumni. The editor was Dr. F.C. Ellert of the German department; the associate editor was Dr. Troy of the English department (now retired and a UMass trustee); and the managing editor was Sidney Kaplan of the English department.

Volume 1, Number 1, the first issue, was dated October, 1959, and established the format that characterizes MR today -- Caslon type, heavy white stock, simple black and white cover with red borders and an illustration. The designer was Leonard Baskin. For the first issue the cover illustration was a Robert Frost portrait. Inside were contributions by Frost, Leonard Baskin, E.E. Cummings, John Ciardi and many others.

The Review struggled in deep poverty for some time. "The way we survived was by tremendous amounts of volunteer labor by everybody," according to Chametzky.

Venture: Use a love call to count bacteria.

The lampyridae beetle family. Delight of small boys. Biological light bulb. And prime source of raw material for another Du Pont innovation.

Luciferase, an enzymatic protein with intriguing properties, obtainable only from fireflies. Luciferin, an organic molecule also found in fireflies, but synthesizable. Adenosine triphosphate (ATP), a common energy-yielding substance found in all living cells.

Those are the three main ingredients in lampyridae's love light. And because ATP is common to all living cells, university researchers discovered they could produce an artificial glow by mixing luciferin and luciferase wherever life is present.

Noting that phenomenon, Du Pont scientists and engineers went on to develop it into a practical analytical system. Correlating the intensity of the artificial "glow" with the amount of ATP present in bacteria, they designed a means of measuring the reaction.

The result is the luminescence biometer—the first really basic improvement in bacteria-counting methods since the time of Louis Pasteur. Rather than waiting days for a culture to demonstrate growth density, a doctor or technician can now get a digital readout of bacteria concentration in a matter of minutes.

Other potentially lifesaving uses for the biometer are being suggested every day—such as diagnosing metabolic rates, enzyme deficiencies and nerve damage.

Innovation—applying the known to discover the unknown, inventing new materials and putting them to work, using research and engineering to create the ideas and products of the future—this is the venture Du Pont people are engaged in.

You can become one of them, and advance professionally in your chosen field. See your Du Pont Recruiter. Or send us the coupon.

Grapplers Host URI

Hosting Rhode Island, the UMass wrestling team will open its 1969-70 reason tonight at home. The meet will start at 7:30 in Boyden Auxiliary gym preceded by a freshmen meet at 6.00.

There will be a few changes in the starting lineup for the varsity due to injuries and upsets in the final eliminations. Nick Di Domenico topped Dave Reynolds in the final elimination at 118 lbs. and won the starting nod against URI.

An injury to Steve Bercovitch, the lone remaining wrestler at 150 lbs., has caused Coach Homer Barr to do some reshuffling in a few weight classes. Clay Jester will be moved from 142 to 150 and Sheldon Goldberg has been moved up to 142. Junior Phil Davis will wrestle in the 134 lb. class, vacated by Goldberg. Other starters for the Redmen will be Rick Tyma, 126; Jim Godkin, 158; Kent Mignocci, 167; Tom Andrewes, 177; Tim Perkins, 191; and George Zguris, unlimited.

Varsity sweaters are in for football, soccer and cross-country and can be picked up at the athletic equipment issue window.

Farrelly, McGarry Chosen Grid Capt.

Nick McGarry and John Farrelly have been elected co-captains of the 1970 UMass varsity football team.

McGarry, a 6'5-230 lb. end, has led the Redmen in pass receiving for two years. This fall he grabbed 21 passes for 302 yards and 5 touchdowns and tied the Yankee Conference record of four touchdowns in a season. He has 43 receptions and nine touchdowns in two varsity seasons and has played both tight and split end.

Farrelly has seen considerable action at linebacker for two years. He is 6'1 205 lbs. and is a graduate of Mt. St. Michael's. Farrelly's fine performances were instrumental in the much-improved defense this fall.

Head Coach Vic Fusia praised both players as having good leadership ability with a great desire and team spirit.

Massachusetts ended the season with a 6-3 record and the Yankee Conference championship.

Gayeska Plays in AAU

AKRON, Ohio - Former UMass star Pete Gayeska, a 6-10center is playing basketball this season for the Akron Goodyears, of the National AAU Basketball League (NABL).

Gayeska, who averaged 15.8 points per game in his senior season at UMass was the 10th leading field goal percentage shooter in NCAA major colleges and universities last season, hitting on 57 per cent of his shots.

Co-captain of the Redmen's 17-7 squad last year, Gayeska was named first team center in the Yankee Conference and was second team All-New England, losing out to All-American Terry Driscoll of Boston College. Gayeska also was named honorable mention Converse All-American by the 1969 Converse Basketball Yearbook.

The 22-year-old native of Somerville, Mass., was voted UMass' most valuable player last season by his teammates, as well as being named the team's most improved performer.

While averaging 9.6 points per game throughout his three varsity seasons, Gayeska maintained close to a 3.0 average in the classroom and gained a bachelor of science degree in economics.

Gayeska, who weighs in at a hefty 225 pounds, is being looked to as a replacement for AAU All-American center Lloyd Sharrar, who has retired as an active player.

Frosh Icemen Open at Yale

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

The UMass freshman hockey team will make its season's debut at New Haven, Conn., Saturday afternoon against the Yale J.V.'s. According to Coach William Richards, the frosh sextet may open without the services of co-captain goalie John Erickson who has played exceptionally well in practice. He suffered a recurrence of an old cartilage injury in practice and will be replaced in the nets by John Kiah.

The first line will be centered by co-captain Don Rlley with Lonnie Avery and Joe Roache at the wings. At the points when the first line is on the ice will be Bob Shilalie and Dave Branch.

The second line, which Richards feels may be his highest scoring line, will find center Pat Keenan flanked by Paul Whitney and Bob Shea at the wings. Defensemen Don Lowe and Rick Anderson will see action with the second line.

Center Dave Kelly, Wings Frank Galligan and Winchester Woolard, and Defenseman Bruce Kay will form the third line.

These lineups, however, are only tentative, and Richards will alternate freely in an attempt to get the best combination.

As far as the outlook for the season, Richards is cautiously optimistic. He feels Erickson will show up well in the goal and also expects his team to do its share of scoring. He is particularly high on the scoring ability of centers Keenan and Riley and wings Avery and Whitney and the defensive work of Branch, Anderson, and Lowe.

The team has played creditably in scrimmages against the varsity, but the first-year coach is worried about a lack of depth and the occasional weakness of his team in the areas of back-checking and fore-checking.

The season opener should answer a lot of questions about this year's Little Redmen sextet.

Hoopsters Go for Number 2 vs. Vermont

UM Begins Conf. Title Defense at Cage Sat.

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Assistant Sports Editor

UMass enters the basketball wars for the second time when it entertains Vermont Saturday night at 7:30 at the Cage. The Catamounts, led by seniors Frank Martiniuk and Ray Greenmen, will be the Redmen's first Yankee Conference opponent in their quest to regain that league's title.

At 5:30, the UMass Frosh will play Springfield Tech.

The Redmen will be looking to up their record to 2-0, having opened their season with a 90-85 conquest of Providence. Likewise, Vermont initiated their season with a victory, 70-54 over Maine. It had a home tilt with Dartmouth last night and will be hoping to be 2-0 when it faces UMass.

Martiniuk, 6'1 was the leading scorer in the Catamount win over Maine with 17 points. A sharpshooter who established single game and season scoring records last winter, Martiniuk will probably be starting at one guard slot. His average as a junior was 19.2 as he compiled 479 points for the UVM record. Within his range this year will be the Catamount all-time scoring mark.

At the other guard post will be Greenman, a six-footer who tallied 13 points against the Black Bears. Although a senior, he will surrender a lot of playing time to sophomore Ray Ortiz 5'10 who had a 20.8 scoring average as a frosh and came up with six points against Maine.

The Catamounts are deep in reserve backcourtmen with juniors Tom Clay, 6'2, and Bob Zeiff, 6'1, both experienced enough to come off the bench and do an adequate job.

Vermont has three players who are good forwards, Ray Bueb, Bob Hutton and Mark Miller. Bueb was the third best Catamount point-maker against Maine with ten. Hutton, a veteran senior, was the leading rebounder last year with a 9.4 average, adding to this mark a 12.4scoring average as he made 55.5% of his field shots.

Miller is a second soph notable who, in '68-69, led all New England frosh with 19.1 rebounds a game. Fourth on the forward list is 6'6 soph Tom Schull.

At center for Vermont is senior Aldo Salati, 6'7, not the greatest, but his experience is an asset. Backing him up will be 6'9 sophomore John Diebert.

Redman coach Jack Leaman is wary of the Catamounts. In the first place, he expects UMass to have a letdown after the big win over the Friars. Secondly, he points out that, over the past few seasons, UVM has been a pain in UMass' neck.

Then, early last season, when UMass took undisputed possession of the Conference championship, the Redmen downed the Catamounts 68-50, only to have Vermont come back later in the year and give Leaman some anxious moments before losing by five, 63-58.

Leaman reiterates, "Vermont has always given us fits. Most of our wins have been heartstoppers."

When game time arrives and the opening tap is a few seconds from reality, Leaman will send his starters, captain Ray Ellerbrook and John Bettancourt at guards, Dennis Chapman and Julius Erving at forwards and Ken Matthias at center on to the floor. Whether a Catamount jinx will hold against this starting five and its fine bench will be answered Saturday at the Cage.

REDMEN DEPEND ON STEADY SENIORS

Gymnasts Open on Road at Syracuse

With a meet at Syracuse University, the UMass varsity gymnastics team will open its season tomorrow at 2 p.m. The Redmen will enter the meet as favorites over Orangeman squad that should show definite improvement since last season.

Last year Syracuse compiled a 1-6 record and finished near the bottom of the Eastern League. UMass outclassed Syracuse last season with a one sided 153-92 Redman victory.

This year Coach Erik Kjeldsen predicts a closer meet since Syracuse has a number of fine returning lettermen and the UMass squad has been hampered by injuries to some of its key members.

Saturday, the Redmen will be without the services of Dave Genest and John Calabria, who sustained injuries during the past week. Also, Scott Stover and Tony Vacca will see only limited action because of injuries.

In the all-around event, Norm Vexler and Joe Reed will represent UMass. Reed, who finished 6th in the all-around event at the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League Championships last year, could give UMass an excellent chance of scoring high in this event.

In each event, there are five positions open to each team in a gymnastic meet - the all-around men occupying two. The remaining three positions in each event will be filled by the following specialists.

In floor exercise, Joe Godwin, Bill McCauley, and co-captain Mike Kasavana will probably represent UMass. Floor exercise could be one of the strong events for the Redmen since it was not affected by injuries.

On side horse, Frank Dean appears to be the only gymnast assured of a starting position. Filling the remaining two positions will be either Rick Riley, Len Aubrey, or Ed Jones.

Coach Kjeldsen will have a choice between Dick Searle, Ed Myslicki, Ed Jones, and Len Aubrey to fill the three positions in the still rings event.

In the long horse vault, the Redmen will have Bob Henry and co-captain Steve Cary as definite starters. The condition of Stover and Vacca will determine who will fill the third spot in this event.

The horizontal bar event remains wide open at present with Myslicki, Vacca, Stover, and Doug Salisbury competing for the starting positions.

On parallel bars, the Redmen will lack some of their potential strength due to the injuries of Genest and Vacca. However, the slack should be adequately taken up by Cary, Henry, and Salisbury.

Coach Kjeldsen expressed optimism for Saturday's meet by indicating an overall increase in the quality of performance during the past weeks. In a practice meet held during this past week, the Redmen scored just under 150 points, about three less than their effort against Syracuse last year.

According to Coach Kjeldsen, "Our goal against Syracuse will be to score over 150 points."

Spiro Roots for Rams Veep Biased in His Football Coverage

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew and other political dignataries are scheduled to view the National Football League game Sunday between the Minnesota Vikings and the Los Angeles Rams.

A Ram spokesman disclosed Thursday that the vice president, U.S. Sen. George Murphy - R-Calif. and Gov. Ronald Reagan of California will have seats on the Rams' side of Memorial Coliseum.

Former Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey is also slated to attend and you can guess from which side of the field the former senator from Minnesota will watch the game.

New Icemen Open Home Season Tonight

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

UMass hockey gets into the swing of things this week end with two key games versus Colby, tonight, Orr Rink at 7:30 p.m., and tomorrow night at Vermont. These back to back contests should provide some indication as to just what the 'New Era' Redmen are capable of doing.

Tonight's Colby match-up is one that UMass coach Jack Canniff has been pointing to for quite a while. The White Mules, with 10 lettermen coming off a 13-8 season, figure to be tough.

"It's definitely a key game," said Canniff, "we haven't beaten them since 1956." The Redmen, who were defeated by Colby, 2-1, last year, hold a 2-8 record in the series.

Colby scrimmaged Lowell Tech who UMass had previously defeated 9-3 Saturday, and emerged with an 11-0 white-wash under game conditions.

A team with good all-around skating ability, the White Mules have a solid defense with good size and excellent goal tending. Three of the defensemen are seniors who average 6'1, 188, and the goalie, Dan Timmons, was named to the Division II All Star squad last season.

Colby's style of play is similar to the Toronto Maple Leafs of the Imlach era. They like to force the puck into the offensive zone, keep the pressure on, and take advantage of the break.

According to Canniff, the White Mules figure to be tough in bringing the puck up ice. How well the young Redmen can handle Colby's combination of size and speed, behind the blue line in particular, could well determine the outcome of the game.

Vermont thus far has a 1-1 record, losing to Northeastern, 5-3, and defeating Norwich, 6-4. "They should have won the first game," said Canniff, "and in beating Norwich, they topped a team which almost upset Dartmouth, a formidable Division I opponent." Norwich had a goal lead on the Big Green with 55 seconds left, only to have the game tied and then lost in overtime.

So, UVM is no slouch either if comparative scores mean anything. The Catamounts, with 19 lettermen and several promising sophs, figure they have a good shot at the Division II crown.

Heading the list of returnees are All East defensemen George Kreiner and forward George Minarsky who set a UVM scoring mark last year with 24 goals. In addition, goalie Dave Reece, who holds every UVM season record is also back.

With Kreiner, Reece, Steve Lane and two promising sophs, Ted Yeates and Bill Dunnington, the defense, a weakness last year, figures to be vastly improved.

Coach Jim Cross hopes to uncover some more high scoring forwards to go along with Jeff McLaughin, Bob Krebs and Minarsky. He may have found one in soph George Snelgrove who last year topped Minarsky's frosh scoring record.

This game is a match-up between two up and coming hockey squads. UVM's ice program is in it's fifth year while UMass has it's best looking squad in quite a while. The Catamounts coming off a 13-12 record last year, just may have too much of a head start for UMass and its 14 sophomores.

ICE CHIPS - Wednesday, the varsity scrimmaged the frosh with the varsity emerging as 6-2 victors....D. John Hartnett and Bob Whelden are expected to return to action tonight....Hartnett was out with a bad back, Whelden out with a bad knee....Both will play on the first line with Jack Edwards....This will shift Charlie Donovan on to Dennis Grabowski's line with Mike Waldron replacing Bill McMann who has shifted back to defense.... Dan Reidy becomes the swing man up front.... Three captains have been named, all are seniors: Mc Mann, John Hartnett and Doug Powling...

CONCERT REVIEW

James Brown And Company

By ROBERT LYNCH
Fine Arts Staff

For those who went, Friday night's concert with James Brown was a wild and exciting experience. The action began with the James Brown Orchestra, a precise and accomplished group of musicians working together with as much enthusaism as talent. The featured instrumentalist throughout the act was a tenor sax player, Macey O. Parker, who lacked none of the gutsy rawness of a soul sax man but who shaped his work with the sensitive creativity of a true artist. This part of the show was capped off by a brief preview of James Brown himself who sang "If I Ruled the World" and showed his virtuosity by handling the organ on a few numbers.

Next to perform was Marva Whitney who lived up the M.C.'s introduction as "dazzling, devastating, and dynamic." She opened with a well-known Otis Redding composition, "Respect," and did more than justice to it. Marva Whitney, the same singer who accompanied James Brown to Newport this past summer and totalled the audience with her vocal control and range, was at her best and well received, considering the poor turnout.

The James Brown Revue is famous for presenting something of every aspect of entertainment, music, song, dance, and comedy, and Saturday was no exception. The M.C. again Macey O. Parker, introduced as comedian "a bright, young, handsome, talented, cute, and unmarried performer," none other than Macey O. Parker. This performer seems to fit right into the James Brown tradition of including everything in his act, but as a comedian, he was only adequate. It is highly possible, though that with a little polish and exposure as a front-man, combined with his many other talents, he will soon be sought after as a featured performer in his own show.

Finally, with the M.C. barking out the traditional introduction of "Mr. Please, Please, Please, HIMSELF!", James Brown appeared. Amazing, fantastic, heavy - whatever you want to call him - James Brown is "the hardest working man in show-business," and one of the best performers alive today. Agility and precision can only describe his movements and dancing; the man can turn a simple microphone into a juggling act. As a singer, James Brown ranged in presentation from mournful and moving ballad renditions such as "Try Me" to the raw soul of songs like "Papa's Got a Brand-new Bag," "Kansas City," "Cold Sweat," and "I'm Black and Proud." As a performer, James Brown is unique in that he is considerate of the audience (the show began right on time and it was as full and as long as anyone could have desired). He pointed out at the beginning of his act that he realized and appreciated that it was the audience who had elevated him from a rough beginning in hometown Macon, Ga. (Georgia is a rough beginning for anyone) with the Famous Flames, to where he is now.

CONCERT REVIEW

Rock-Blues Were Great

By METAWAMPE
Staff Great One

Even if the groups, Saturday night in the Student Union Ballroom, and yesterday at the Cage, had just sat around doing nothing, the Sophomore weekend concerts would have been great. To actually have not one but two rock-blues concerts on campus in one weekend was an unusual pleasure for this old injun.

Of course, the groups did more than sit around. And 95% of the two concerts was the best on campus, in many a moon.

Saturday night, the super sophs hired the Woodrose Ballroom to transport their establishment out in Deerfield, to the Ballroom. And Woodrose showed the large crowds that they have a lot to offer if you can find a ride.

The Paul Pina Blues Band, led by a blind singer and lead guitarist of the same name led off the fast paced set. Pino, who is reportedly near an agreement with a major record company and is worth it displayed the hard blues of "So Many Roads", which was an encore number, the rock ability to do justice to an old Rolling Stones song, "Everybody Needs Somebody", and the sensitivity of his own composition, "Isolation" which he said symbolized his own life.

Country Funk, was next and they are heavy, for want of a better word. They have excellent stage presence, an excellent sound, and fine individual talents. The highlight of their set was the Beatles' "Things We Said Today".

Finally there was Wild Thing. They were truly putrid. Their hair was nice, and I suppose they have some talent (if a 15 minute In A Gadda Da Vida is talent). But it was the low point of an otherwise great evening. The only compliment heard for the Wild Things was that they brought you down quicker than any group in memory. That's saying a lot.

Woodrose brought its light show to the union, and it was its usually good self. The idea of hiring Woodrose was excellent and maybe it will spur people to support the Woodrose people, who are the only conveyors of good rock in the area.

And then there was Sunday at psychedelic Curry Hicks Cage. It was one of those concerts, that after each performance, you wonder how it can be followed, only to be rocked even better next. There were difficulties, poor sound at times, long delays that stretched the concert to over five hours, and the concert-in-the round format that deprived a great number of people view of the stage.

But despite all this, it was the best concert in the Cage for a long while.

Spooky Tooth, was first, and after initial sound diffculties did a good set. A highlight was a long jam, early in the program while the faulty microphones were being repaired. They did their most known number "Evil Woman" to perfection, with organist Mike Harrison and Gerry Wright guitar, exchanging vocals. They ended with "Tobacco Road", and did it well.

Then Winter. It's tough to review something you thought was the best thing you ever saw. Johnny Winter would be unbelievable alone. But there is also drummer Uncle John Turner, who put in a lengthy solo, bass Thomas Shannon, and the amazing younger brother of Winter, Edgar, who is star in his own right. Edgar played organ, saxaphone, drums, and sang and did all equally as dynamically good. Johnny Winter, who was approachable and friendly, enjoyed himself, as much as he was enjoyed. His post-concert comment "That was really a wonderful thing." He was just that.

Jethro Tull, with an insane Ian Anderson, doing the bulk of the excitement, fairly attacks the listner. Anderson can be taken as a Mick Jagger type of gyrator, but Anderson, is an amazingly talented and entertaining wild man. He had his sensitive times on his flute, which he plays with a beauty shown best in "Beret". He has much of support in bass guitar Glen Cornick, who had a great solo , lead guitar Martin Lancelot Barre, who took control of the receptive crowd with his lengthy solo and drummer Clive Bunker, who also did his own thing for a remarkable 15 minutes.

Really speechless is the word for the overall two conerts. It's about time for rock-blues freaks on campus. I guess its just thank you Sophs.

Boston Location For UMass President Opposed

By DONALD A. EPSTEIN
Editor in Chief

A proposal to stop UMass from moving its President's office to Boston next year has been submitted to Governor Sargent, and the Governor is reported to respond to the proposal within the next few weeks.

At last Thursday's Executive Council meeting Councilor Raymond J. Fontana, Republican from Longmeadow, obtained unanimous consent to make a statement which called upon Sargent to intercede with the UMass trustees to reconsider and rescind their vote allowing the university president to have his main office in Boston.

Fontana said the new university president must be required to remain in Amherst.

Sargent reportedly told Fontana that he would "look into it."

In a weekend interview with the DAILY COLLEGIAN, Fontana said he opposed moving the new president to Boston because the move "would not be helpful to students in Amherst" and it could lead to UMass becoming an "eastern oriented school."

"The greater number of students to be sure are on the western Mass campus and not in Boston," Fontana said. "It is best to have the president more accessible to the largest number of students and he can certainly be more accessible in Amherst."

The Executive Councilor said that citizens in western Mass. are very proud of the University and that "they don't want the school to become eastern oriented."

"Beacon Hill and the money may lie in Boston," he said, "but the students are in Amherst."

Fontana said that if the new president is allowed to establish his main office in Boston, the entire University system will become eastern oriented and the Amherst campus will suffer as a result.

"We lost the medical school battle when they took the school out of Amherst, and if we're not careful Boston will become the central campus instead of Amherst," he said.

Fontana told the COLLEGIAN that the Governor thanked him for bringing the matter to his attention. He expects some response from Sargent within the next few weeks.

However, Fontana said he will carry his campaign further and will continue to inform the public about the dangers of moving the new president to Boston.

The chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees, Joseph P. Healey of Arlington, refused to comment on Fontana's statement. He told the COLLEGIAN, "I don't have any comment until I can see it, and the reasons for it. I thought that we had come up with a carefully thought out plan."

Earlier this semester the Board of Trustees passed in principle a proposal which would completely realign the University administration. The new plan would have the new university president, who will succeed retiring President John W. Lederle this summer, establish his office in Boston along with four vice-presidents. The central administrative office in Boston would not be associated with the UMass Boston campus but would be located in an office building.

Chancellors would be selected to head each individual campus. It is generally expected that under the new plan, Provost Oswald Tippo would be chosen to head the Amherst campus.

The main reasons for the new administrative structure are that the university president should not be identified with anyone branch of the system, he would be in a better position to insure greater state support for the entire university system, and that he would spend his time working on long range development of the entire system instead of running just one campus on a day-to-day basis.

Retiring UM President Lederle is a strong advocate of the proposed new administrative reorganization plan.

A Woman Tells What Poverty Is Like

"You ask me what is poverty? Listen to me. Here I am, dirty, smelly, and with no "proper" under clothing on and with the stench of my rotting teeth near you. I will tell you. Listen to me. Listen without pity. I cannot use your pity. Put yourself in my dirty, wornout, ill-fitting shoes, and hear me.

"Poverty is getting up every morning from a dirt illness stained mattress. The sheets have long since been used for the baby's diapers. Poverty is living in a smell that never leaves. . .This is a smell of urine, sour milk, spoiling food sometimes joined with the strong smell of long cooked onions. Onions are cheap. . . .

"Poverty is being tired. I have always been tired. They told me at the hospital when the last baby came, that I have chronic anemia, caused from a poor diet, a bad case of worms, and that I needed a corrective operation.

"Poverty is dirt. You say in your clean clothes coming from your clean house, "anybody can be clean." Let me explain about housekeeping with no money. For breakfast I give my children grit with no oleo, or cornbread with no eggs or oleo. This does not use up many dishes. What dishes there are, I wash in cold water and with no soap. Even the cheapest soap has to be saved for the baby's diapers.

"Poverty is staying up all night on cold nights to watch the fire knowing one spark on the newspaper covering the walls means your sleeping children die in flames.

"Poverty is looking into a black future. Your children won't play with my boys. They will turn to other boys who steal to get what they want. I can already see them behind the bars of their prison through the bars of my poverty. Or they will turn to the freedom of alcohol or drugs, and find themselves enslaved. And my daughter? At best there is for her the same life as mine. It would be sensible for me to wish her dead.

"I have come out of my despair to tell you this. Remember I did not come from another place or another time. Others like me are all around you. Look at us with an angry heart, anger that will help you and help me. Anger that will let you tell of me. The poor are always silent. CAN YOU BE SILENT TOO?"

Please help these unfortunate people. Give to the Christmas Drive for Dorchester County. All forms of commodities - food, soap blankets, medical aids are needed, DON'T REMAIN SILENT. ALL IS NEEDED.

The Christmas Drive for Dorchester County, S.C., is being sponsored by the Committee on Poverty, the Freedom Committee, and the Afro-American Society. Canvassers are needed for both town and campus. For information about dorm canvassing, call Cathy McLeavey at 545-2152 or 549-1431. For town canvassing, call Paul Spiegel or George Child at 545-0156 or 545-0195.

WMUA's PovertyIn US

Tonight at 9 p.m. WMUA's "Focus" will continue examining "Poverty in the United States"--this week emphasizing the effects of hunger and malnutrition. Ken Mosakowski's special guest will be Renee Yuen, a student at Smith College who last week attended President Nixon's three-day White House Conference on Food, Nutrition, and Health in Washington, D.C. Miss Yuen will comment on the purpose of the Conference and the effectiveness of its proposals to eliminate hunger in America.

In another segment of the program, Sam Johnson of the United Christian Foundation will provide commentary on the proposed "Fast for Songmy" which is scheduled to take place on Thursday. The fast is being sponsored by chaplains of the Newman Center, Hillel, and the United Christian Foundation on campus.

Tonight's program will also include a progress report on the commodity drive for Dorchester County, S.C., which is continuing until December 18th, both on campus and in the town of Amherst.

Interested persons are invited to tune in on "Focus" at 91.1 FM.

Summer Session Sliced

Due to the University budget cut of last spring and large salary increases, the Dean of Administration's office has found it necessary to substantially reduce the summer program. This policy would not affect the swing-shift program but would reduce the normal sessions from the anticipated two six week programs to one session running from the 13th of July to the 21st of August.

Since there is a projected need of some students, especially seniors to take courses so that they may be able to graduate in their normal academic year, Dean of Administration William Venmen and his Office, in conjunction with the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee, are planning to offer a special session in the last three weeks of June and the first two of July. This program hopefully will offer up to six courses designed to meet the needs of those who desire such a program. If you anticipate being in this situation or would for another reason wish to see a course offered during this five week session it would be extremely helpful if you would drop off the necessary information in the Student Senate Office on the second floor of the Student Union either today or Tuesday.

QuinnMeetsAdministrators

At a meeting last Friday of College and university presidents, including UMass President John Lederle and Atty. Gen Robert H. Quinn, a decision was made to promote greater consultation between police and school administrators in the event of campus disturbances.

Quinn told newsmen that the Administrators and himself " are concerned here with the rights of the legitimate protestors as well as the rights of the non-protesting students and with the interest that the community as a whole has in our great institutions of higher learning."

Quinn is planning to meet with other state, private and community college presidents to discuss the handling of protests.

Quinn said that most of the college administrators seemed to be in general agreement that measures such as suspension or expulsion would be much more effective than court or police action.

Also present at Friday's meeting was Francis L. Broderick, chancellor of UMass of Boston, and officials of Boston College, Brandeis, Boston State College, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Northeastern, Harvard and Tufts Universities, Boston University and the state police.

Movie Review

"War Game"

By RICHARD C. HANSON

SCENE: Your eyeballs have just melted. Fifty percent of the skin on your body is charred. At that moment, you do not realize that the majority of the people in your town, in your state, in your country, and possibly in your world are dying. You are dying. The world has just experienced thermo-nuclear war. Mankind has played the "War Game" to its end.

The BBC produced film WAR GAMES has pictured life as it will be afterwards, when the air raid sirens finally sound for the purpose they were built.

What happens when man creates a war without a middle? What happens to mankind when there is no time for uni-lateral withdrawal or nationalistic pride and honor? How do you have peace talks when the enemies are radioactive particles? War becomes a blinding flash, a shock wave, and death.

Try escalating a war against an enemy; eating away at the marrow in your bones.

Thermo-nuclear war will reduce life to nothing. You are an ant in an anthill which has just been soaked with gasoline and ignited; by a fellow ant.

The film was obscene. It was reality placed in public view. Strange this race of ours where realities of our own making must be called obscenities. War is part of the world's social structure. It is economic. It is a "just" cause. It is romantic. It is real.

I SIT and LOOK out upon all the sorrows of the world,
And upon all the oppression and shame. . .

All the meanness and agony without end I sitting Look out upon,
See, hear, and am silent.
"I SIT AND LOOK OUT"
By Walt Whitman

Man has always been able to look upon the world's obscenities. They have always been "without end". Mankind could always "be silent." There was always room to play life's games of love and war, passion, humanity and tomorrow.

Man has taken the fun out of life. The entire earth has been soaked with radioactive gasoline. Picture yourself an ant. Man has not lost his childhood compulsion to play with matches or to fight wars. If a final burst of flame does engulf the earth, man will not "see" or "hear". He will only be silent.

The film pointed out that if any man takes the life of another man, according to our Western morality and legality, he must be willing to accept the destruction of his own life. It then holds true that any group of people, society, which allows its government to take the lives of others must be willing to accept destruction in return, as a matter of morality. Think of that the next time you hear the enemy death count.

Think for a brief time what life will be without you. Think what it will be without anyone; when even those who are not dead will have no hope.

Think for a brief time what it will be like to hear the sirens and be dead five minutes later. (NOTE: The five minute death will only be avilable for those within a reasonable distance of the actual explosion. Others will have to wait up to five weeks. Still others, the unfortunate, will have to continue to live upwards to seven years. Imagine seven years of nausea after having seen the destruction of everything.) If you aren't assured of a quick death for your self and your loved ones, try shooting them, then commit suicide. There will be nothing left after thermo-nuclear war; except pain and death. It may be better not to experience the pain. Make that your last act as a human being.

The reader may be thinking that this is insane. You still can't accept the potential reality. To accept the reality is to accept the Insane. To ACCEPT the insane is to . . . be insane???

WAR GAME was a simulation based on what has actually happened in the past when man has tried massive destruction; Hiroshima, Nagasaki, some of the bombed out WWII German cities, were all studied and recreated effects were staged in England. The potential accuracy of the film's prognosis is undeniable. The only true fiction was the hypothetical cause of the holocaust.

We would truly be foolish if we did not recognize the genuine ability of man to carry out this ultimate war game. We are truly insane if we do not, as a race, strive to remove the possibility of such a WAR GAME.

And we are here as on a darkling plain,
Swept with confused alarms of struggle and flight,
Where ignorant armies clash by night.
"DOVER BEACH"

Tufts Ends ROTC Program by '72

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) - The trustees of Tufts University voted yesterday to phase out the Navy ROTC program on campus by the 1972-1973 school year.

The action will preserve the status of about 90 Tufts students currently enrolled in the program.

The trustees' action was on a recommendation voted by the faculty last spring after extended debate on the campus about the status of ROTC.

School officials had been negotiating with the Navy on the possibilities of retaining ROTC without credit.

The faculty recommendation was that the trustees end the ROTC contract with the Navy, and asserted that if the trustees failed to do so, the faculty would not give credits for the program in 1973.

Agitation on the campus for an end to ROTC came to a head last spring when President Burton C. Hallowell closed the school for one day during which seminars and discussions of ROTC were conducted in many parts of the campus. The faculty vote followed that night.

Tufts also has had an Air Force ROTC program but the Air Force last spring ordered it closed down by 1972-1973, along with similar programs at several other schools, because they had failed to produce enough officers. The Tufts program currently has about 25 students enrolled.

Fiction Examined

"The Structures of Fiction" will be the topic of a lecture Friday (December 5) at Smith College.

Dr. Frank Kermode, visiting professor and fellow at the Center for Humanities, Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., will speak at 4:30 p.m. in the Alumnae House conference room. Sponsored by Smith's English department, the lecture is open to the public without charge.

Fare-Well

Dr. Paul W. Brubacher, Assistant Dean of Students in charge of the Southwest Residential College, will unfortunately be leaving us at the end of this semester to become the Dean of Students at the University of Rhode Island.

Dr. Brubacher came to the University four years ago as Area Coordinator for Southwzst and then as Assistant Dean. Most of us I think will remember him for his unfailing dedication to the students in southwest.

Southwest, the newest residential complex here, was a collidge of confusion, troubles, and torment during its initial stages of operation. Dr. Brubacher worked along with his co-workers relentlessly to make southwest work and function as a genuine experience in living and learning.

It is indeed with great reluctance that we must say goodbye to such a willing and able member of this community. It is a fact that many students and faculty as well as administrators have greatly benefited from the work Dr. Brubacher. I just hope that the University of Rhode Island realizes or at least will realize what a great asset they are getting in this very capable educator.

The Mitchells At Home

WASHINGTON -- All of Washington is talking about Attorney General John Mitchell's wife, Martha. Mrs. Mitchell has made almost as big a splash as Vice President Spiro Agnew, with such remarks on TV as the one that her husband would like to trade some American liberals for some Russian Communists.

She also told Time magazine's Dean Fischer, "Any time you get somebody marching in the streets, it's catering to revolution. . .My family worked for everything. We even had a deed from the king of England for property in South Carolina. Now these jerks come along and try to give it to the Communists. . ."

Commenting on life in Washington, she said, "It's quite a comedown in many ways. We're not living on the same means we had in Rye, N.Y. I think the government should give us free housing. We'll be happy to go back and make some money."

Mrs. Mitchell in her TV broadcasts and interviews has given us an insight into a Cabinet officer's life that we never had before, and I can imagine what happens when the Mitchells return home in the evening to their posh apartment at the Watergate in the Foggy Bottom part of Washington.

The attorney general enters first and checks all the closets.

"There's none in here."

Mrs. Mitchell looks under the bed. "There's none here."

They both look in the laundry room. "There's none here," the attorney general says.

Mrs. Mitchell sighs, "Oh, John, can't you do something about the liberals, so we don't have to go through this every night?"

"I'm trying, Martha. I'm working on a list of liberals to exchange for Communists with the Soviet Union. Once we get it drawn up, we'll present it to Russians at the SALT talks in Helsinki."

"Good," Mrs. Mitchell replies. "I'd rather have out and out Communists in this country, than people with Marxist ideas who won't admit their true colors."

"Well, let's go to bed, Martha."

"Suppose THEY march tonight?" Mrs. Mitchell says.

"I don't think THEY will. The Justice Department would have let me know if they had any plans. We should be able to get a good night's sleep."

"How do we know THEY'RE not in the lobby waiting for us to go to bed?"

"Don't you remember? I checked the lobby before I came up. There isn't a liberal in the entire Watergate complex."

"If they only gave us a free house, we could electrify the fence."

"Martha, you shouldn't fret."

"Why shouldn't I? This place is costing us a pretty packet and it's certainly a comedown from Rye, N.Y. Why don't we go back and make some money, John?"

"We will, Martha, but there is important work to be done. Do you know I managed to keep a Marxist Belgian professor from entering the United States last week, over the objections of the secretary of state?"

"I'm so proud of you, John. Have you done anything yet about the 55 senators who voted against Judge Haynesworth?"

"I've got everyone at Justice working on it now. We think we may be able to prove a conspiracy between the mobilization organizers, the Eastern Liberal Establishment, Joan Baez and the senators who voted against Haynesworth."

"That would be wonderful. John, did you hear something in the bathroom?"

"The water's running. Stay back, Martha."

The attorney general goes into the bathroom and comes out whitefaced.

"It's John Kenneth Galbraith. He's taking a shower!"

"I knew it," Martha cries. "I told you we should never come to Washington."

American Conspiracy!

To the editor:

I write in response to "A Substitute for Logic" an article by Randall Bourne.

Your knowledge of Karl Marx, Mr. Bourne, is impressive. However your knowledge of Russian Communism is lacking. Four men were responsible for Russian Communism; -- your Karl Marx, Nicholai Lenin, Josef Stalin, and Nikita Krushchev. Marx based his theory of revolution on the industrial nation, never dreaming that the agrarian-based Russia would achieve any aspect of Communism. Lenin fashioned "modern" Communism for his own country -- the agrarian nation -- true, he still wished for world Communism, but he wanted to make Russia strong first. Stalin was the iron man, the one to install LENINISM as the government for Russia. Stalin retained this wish for world Communism. Krushchev, the more rational of the three Russia leaders, decided that "peaceful coexistance" between communist and "free" nations was the best way. True, he still wished for world Communism, not by violent revolution, but by infiltration.

You may say -- Aha! -- They're bent on destroying us -- they're infiltrating our "free" nation. But what about the over 4,000 military bases that we have scattered throughout the world in nearly every "free" nation? Could this be infiltration? Really, it's even worse, we actually have armed soldiers on another country's land. Oh, they were asked to be there? By whom? . . . Maybe it's an American conspiracy to take over the world! World Democracy! Hip, hip, hooray!!

As for the justifyability of violent overthrow of the bourgeoisie system -- wouldn't you be a bit ragged if you worked like a dog 15 hours a day for 10¢ an hour while your boss openly displayed his enormous wealth for you to look upon with reverence? Think about it. How would your emotions stand?

Where's YOUR rational rebuttal for the theory that North VietNam is winning the war? I really don't see how you can deny that they are winning "psychologically" and in "public opinion". Both factors have taken great toll on the United States. No amount of bombs could ever do the damage that these two factors have done on us. On propaganda, the only people who genuinely feel that the U. S. should be in VietNam are Thieu and Ky of South VietNam (mainly because American presense there assures their stay in power), and President Nixon and his business interests here at home. All of our allies have denounced our actions there.

Militarily, North Vietnam has one very important victory -- that of keeping a check on U. S. power which we are well informed is the most destructive on Earth (now, that's something to be proud of), and from conquering them for the last 15 years. (President Nixon was a bit awry in arithmetic in his speech. We have been in Vietnam in one form or another since 1954). Added to this is the fact that we've blown up nearly every square inch of North Vietnmese defenses, and they're STILL fighting us. That's a victory in itself.

As for being supported by outsiders, there's no denial there. In fighting the greatest, most powerful nation on Earth, it is generally accepted that one may need some help. As for Russian weapons being on North Vietnamese soldiers, it is generally accepted that allies help each other out. Oh, by the way, we gave Great Britain the atomic bomb. . .how about that?

"Patriotism is a valid cause when morally right". That's entirely correct. The true American Patriot would fight for HIS country, i.e., the United States of America, not for some far Asia country. And as for "morally right", since when is War morally right? As for North Vietnam having no right to enforce its government on South Vietnam. . .let's go back to 1954 again, soom after the French were kicked out. Vietnam (all of it) was run by a King, who gave up his power to the ELECTED leader, none other than Ho Chi Minh. It was then the U. S. fearing that Ho's socialistic tendencies would bring that awful scourge -- Communism -- upon the country, stepped in and through the guise of a Geneva meeting, set up North and South Vietnam and put our puppet in -- Diem. Now! -- who's trying to force their government on another? And even now, Thieu and Ky do NOT represent the PEOPLE. They're puppets also. It is well known that the Thieu-Ky government is one of the most corrupt governments in the world.

In closing, I urge Mr. Bourne and others like him, not to immediately condemn the North Vietnamese as horrible barbarians. Likewise don't accept the U. S. as the good guys, for more often than not we aren't.

The attorney general goes into the bathroom and comes out whitefaced.

"It's John Kenneth Galbraith. He's taking a shower!"

"I knew it," Martha cries. "I told you we should never come to Washington."

American Conspiracy!

To the editor:

I write in response to "A Substitute for Logic" an article by Randall Bourne.

Your knowledge of Karl Marx, Mr. Bourne, is impressive. However your knowledge of Russian Communism is lacking. Four men were responsible for Russian Communism; -- your Karl Marx, Nicholai Lenin, Josef Stalin, and Nikita Krushchev. Marx based his theory of revolution on the industrial nation, never dreaming that the agrarian-based Russia would achieve any aspect of Communism. Lenin fashioned "modern" Communism for his own country -- the agrarian nation -- true, he still wished for world Communism, but he wanted to make Russia strong first. Stalin was the iron man, the one to install LENINISM as the government for Russia. Stalin retained this wish for world Communism. Krushchev, the more rational of the three Russia leaders, decided that "peaceful coexistance" between communist and "free" nations was the best way. True, he still wished for world Communism, not by violent revolution, but by infiltration.

You may say -- Aha! -- They're bent on destroying us -- they're infiltrating our "free" nation. But what about the over 4,000 military bases that we have scattered throughout the world in nearly every "free" nation? Could this be infiltration? Really, it's even worse, we actually have armed soldiers on another country's land. Oh, they were asked to be there? By whom? . . . Maybe it's an American conspiracy to take over the world! World Democracy! Hip, hip, hooray!!

As for the justifyability of violent overthrow of the bourgeoisie system -- wouldn't you be a bit ragged if you worked like a dog 15 hours a day for 10¢ an hour while your boss openly displayed his enormous wealth for you to look upon with reverence? Think about it. How would your emotions stand?

Where's YOUR rational rebuttal for the theory that North VietNam is winning the war? I really don't see how you can deny that they are winning "psychologically" and in "public opinion". Both factors have taken great toll on the United States. No amount of bombs could ever do the damage that these two factors have done on us. On propaganda, the only people who genuinely feel that the U. S. should be in VietNam are Thieu and Ky of South VietNam (mainly because American presense there assures their stay in power), and President Nixon and his business interests here at home. All of our allies have denounced our actions there.

Militarily, North Vietnam has one very important victory -- that of keeping a check on U. S. power which we are well informed is the most destructive on Earth (now, that's something to be proud of), and from conquering them for the last 15 years. (President Nixon was a bit awry in arithmetic in his speech. We have been in Vietnam in one form or another since 1954). Added to this is the fact that we've blown up nearly every square inch of North Vietnmese defenses, and they're STILL fighting us. That's a victory in itself.

As for being supported by outsiders, there's no denial there. In fighting the greatest, most powerful nation on Earth, it is generally accepted that one may need some help. As for Russian weapons being on North Vietnamese soldiers, it is generally accepted that allies help each other out. Oh, by the way, we gave Great Britain the atomic bomb. . .how about that?

"Patriotism is a valid cause when morally right". That's entirely correct. The true American Patriot would fight for HIS country, i.e., the United States of America, not for some far Asia country. And as for "morally right", since when is War morally right? As for North Vietnam having no right to enforce its government on South Vietnam. . .let's go back to 1954 again, soom after the French were kicked out. Vietnam (all of it) was run by a King, who gave up his power to the ELECTED leader, none other than Ho Chi Minh. It was then the U. S. fearing that Ho's socialistic tendencies would bring that awful scourge -- Communism -- upon the country, stepped in and through the guise of a Geneva meeting, set up North and South Vietnam and put our puppet in -- Diem. Now! -- who's trying to force their government on another? And even now, Thieu and Ky do NOT represent the PEOPLE. They're puppets also. It is well known that the Thieu-Ky government is one of the most corrupt governments in the world.

In closing, I urge Mr. Bourne and others like him, not to immediately condemn the North Vietnamese as horrible barbarians. Likewise don't accept the U. S. as the good guys, for more often than not we aren't.

A graduate school with real teeth.

Set your sights on this: The computer industry is only fifteen years old and already there is 15 billion dollars worth of computer equipment in use.

By 1975, that will double, producing substantial new computer benefits for business and the community. And creating more than 500,000 new computer-related jobs.

Honeywell can prepare you for this bright future. You'll be able to apply computer technology to your chosen field.

Or you can make a promising career as a computer specialist.

We have the only program that's exclusively for college graduates. And because we make computer equipment, we're particularly well-qualified to teach you what computers are all about.

Classes are held in Wellesley, Massachusetts, beginning every January, June and September.

This could be your big chance. Pounce on it. Send the coupon.

Honeywell Institute of Information Sciences

PREREQUISITES: First, you'll need a college degree. Any major is fine, as long as you've successfully completed a four year program. Next, you will need to pass a group of tests designed to determine whether you have the basic aptitude to benefit from the course. (For about 20% of the applicants, Honeywell's Postgraduate Program would be a waste of time.) Finally we'll want to interview you. But then, you'll probably want to interview us.

SCHEDULE: You will put in twelve weeks, five days a week, for a total of 480 class hours. Sessions start in January, June, and September.

COST: Your investment is comparable to about one year's tuition at a private college. This includes all in-class and extracurricular lab fees for machine operation, maintenance, and supervision. (The actual tuition is established in the current Honeywell Tuition Schedule.)

CURRICULUM: The course gives you fundamental competence in programming and systems design. In addition, it orients you with the relationship of today's computers to general business management. You will have used the computer enough, in the classroom, and after hours, to be more than ready to make practical use of your skill.

FACULTY: Top men and women from Honeywell's Marketing Education Division, as well as veteran computer supervisors, will direct your instruction. All are eminently knowledgeable in their fields, and have been responsible for training Honeywell's customers to successfully apply over 5,000 Honeywell computers to the problems of business, government, and research.

ADMISSION: Begin by filling out the coupon, and returning it to us. We will call you to arrange for the testing and interview. If you have any questions, call the Admissions Office for Postgraduate Studies at (617) 235-7450, extension 709. Applicants accepted will be notified by mail.

Poetry Reading Slated For Moratorium Day

On Friday evening December 12, Diane Wakoski will give a Moratorium Day Poetry reading at 8:00 p.m. in Herter 227. Miss Wakoski has published poems in THE NEW YORKER, THE NATION, POETRY, THE MINNESOTA REVIEW and various other journals, and has collected them in two volumes, DISCREPANCIES AND APPARITIONS and INSIDE THE BLOOD FACTORY. Gifted with an unusual flair for reading her work, she has captured and delighted a growing audience among students and young people. In 1966 she read at the Guggenheim under the sponsorship of the Academy of American Poets, and since then has appeared on many college campuses.

Miss Wakoski lives in New York City and recently gave a course at the New School Of Her School. Of her poems, THE VILLAGE VOICE has said: "The power of the best of Miss Wakoski's poetry seems to come from...her ability to make simple and clear images and to express a complexity of emotion in a few, amazingly clean lines...The poems speak for themselves, they speak powerfully, and they speak in many languages.

UMass Debate Team Rolls Along Through November Winning Streak

The UMass Debate Team compiled still more awards as it continued its impressive winning streak in two top November Tournaments.

Travelling to Philadelphia, to the St. Joseph's College Villager Debate Tournament, the varsity switch-side team of Tim Hynes and Gerry Hayes were awarded a silver bowl for their fine showing there. Debating the intercollegiate 1969-70 proposition, "Resolved: that the federal government should grant annually a specific percentage of its income tax revenue to the states," Hynes and Hayes compiled an overall 6-2 win-loss record in the preliminary rounds, going 3-1 on both affirmative and negative sides of the topic. Wins came against Pittsburgh, University of Pennsylvania, King's College, Cornell, George Washington, and Loyola of Baltimore, with losses versus Marietta College and Navy.

From this impressive performance, they were moved into the quarter-final rounds, where they were victorious over the team from Middlebury. Hynes and Hayes were then advanced to the semi-final rounds where they lost to Navy on a very close 3-2 decision.

That same weekend, at the Southern Connecticut State College Tournament in New Haven, the overall squad record was a victorious 13-11.

In the Novice division, freshmen Bruce Murphy and John Day compiled a 5-1 record on the negative. Victories were earned versus Brown, Vermont, Middlebury, Delaware, and Worcester State. Their only loss came against Washington University of St. Louis. Murphy was awarded the third place novice speaker trophy for his fine showing in this division.

The Novice affirmative team of Paul Drager and Press Barnhill went 2-4, winning over Rochester and Southern Connecticut but losing to Rhode Island College, St. John's Jamaica, Delaware, and Middlebury.

The two Varsity teams, entered in the switch-side division. each went 3-3. The team of Roger Legendre and Matt Novak won over Wheeling, LeMoyne, and East Strousburg but lost to Colgate, Susquehanna, and Boston College.

John Hogan and Paul Lamarche of the other varsity team, won over South Dakota, St. John's, and West Chester State and lost against teams from Mt. Holyoke, Tennessee State, and Washington and Jefferson.

MHC To Appoint Student On Board

For the first time in the history of Mount Holyoke College, a recent graduate will be appointed to the Board of Trustees, and if pending legislation within the Alumnae Association is approved, the new Trustee could feasibily be joined by another of a similar age.

At their most recent meeting, the Trustees considered requests from the Student Government Association and the Alumnae Association that provision be made for a younger person to serve as a

The Board has approved a plan which provides for the classes of 1968, 1969 and 1970 each to nominate one or two candidates from their respective classes. The Trustees will consider each of these candidates and select one who will serve for a three-year term.

There is also a proposal within the Alumnae Association to eliminate a clause in the Association's by-laws which limits the election of a Trustee by the Alumnae to a candidate who has been out of college at least five years. If this clause is removed, it is conceivable that in the near future two of the College's Trustees will represent a younger constituency.

Action from Friday's 40-5 Romp of Rhody

Opening its season in strong fashion, the UMass wrestling team won two meets over the weekend. On Friday night, the Redmen romped over Rhode Island, 40-5, and followed with a 36-6 conquest of Tufts on Saturday afternoon.

UMass won both meets early as the light and middle weight wrestlers proved too much for the opposition. Against URI, the Redmen led 28-0 before the Rams could score a point. Nick DiDomenico (118), Rick Tyma (126), Phil Davis (134), Clay Jester (150) and Jim Godkin (158) all pinned their opponents and Sheldon Goldberg (142) won a 7-0 decision with an incredible seven minutes and fifty seconds riding time out of a possible eight minutes.

Goldberg did all he could to pin his opponent, but Damon of URI was content to remain on his stomach in order to avoid being pinned. Davis and Godkin won in the first period while DiDomenico and Jester won in the second and Tyma in the third.

After Kent Mignocci (167) lost a 7-5 decision on riding time and Tom Andrewes (177) put on a late rush to tie Bierty 7-7, the Redmen heavyweights finished off the Rams. Tim Perkins pinned Mc Kenna at 5:33 in the 190 lb. match and George Zguris gave the Redmen their final points, pinning Hurlburt with only fifteen seconds remaining in the match, in the unlimited class.

On Saturday, the Redmen journeyed to Medford to tangle with Tufts and the results were almost identical. DiDomenico won by forfeit, as did Zguris. Tyma pinned his man early in the second period and Jester won his second match in two days with another second period pin. Godkin won easily for the second time with a pin in the first period. Jim was the most impressive wrestler as he wrestled a total of only three minutes in the two meets and scored two pins.

Mike Brauner won impressively in his first action of the season with a pin at 2:23. Mike wrestled at 152 last year, but moved up to 167 and the change hasn't hurt him any. Phil Davis won his 134 lb. match, 7-0 and Goldberg won another lopsided decision, this one by a 12-0 score.

After UMass had taken a 31-0 lead, Tufts won decisions at the 177 and 190 lb. classes. A forfeit at the heavy weight class gave the Redmen their final points in the 36-6 win.

UMass gave advance notice that it will be a team to contend with in the upcoming season. The Redmen have a well balanced team and are particularly strong in the light weights. They are now 2-0 on the season and hope to improve that record at home on Wednesday night.

Pats Fall to SD, 28-18 Playoff Hopes Wiped Out

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) - Veteran John Hadl came off the bench to throw two touchdown passes, including a 76-yard bomb to Lance Alworth, and the San Diego Chargers rolled past the Boston Patriots, 28-18.

The Chargers, 7-6, killed the second place playoff hopes of the Patriots, 4-9, in the Eastern Division of the American Football League before 33,146 fans at San Diego Stadium.

Hadl watched rookie Marty Domres quarterback the Chargers to a 14-3 halftime lead, then entered the game to complete five of seven passes for 165 yards in the third quarter.

The Chargers took a 21-3 lead when Hadl pumped a 17-yard pass to Gary Garrison who split two defenders and ran into the end zone.

Hadl's 76-yard shot to Alworth was aided by Garrison who blocked Boston's John Charles, the only Patriot with a chance to catch the streaking Alworth.

Hansen Signs

Power-hitting first baseman Bob Hansen of UMass agreed Saturday on contract terms with the Seattle Pilots. Hansen, who received a "substantial" bonus, was signed by Pilot's scout Bill Enos.

A .400 hitter during his three years at UMass, Hansen, a 6'1 200 pound lefthander, will join the Vancouver team of the Pacific Coast League for Spring training.

Hansen hit 40 home runs at UMass and made the All-World Series team at last Spring's NCAA baseball finals. Hansen attended Boston Latin High School.

UMass Tops Vt.,90-73, Ups Record to 2-0

Redmen Thump Out Win Methodically

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Assistant Sports Editor

In methodic fashion the UMass basketball team built up a 45-28 halftime lead over Vermont and coasted the rest of the way to a 90-73 victory before 4500 Saturday night fans at the Cage.

The win gave the Redmen a clean 2-0 record and sent the Catamounts to their second loss in succession and a 1-2 mark.

Umass broke out into an early 7-6 lead on a Ken Mathias foul shot, two Julius Erving foul shots and two Erving field hoops. After Dennis Chapman and John Betancourt hit single shots from the line, Mathias followed with a two-point tap-in and Betancourt added a 20-foot jumper from the corner to put the Redmen ahead, 13-6, at which point the game was pretty much under their control.

For the next few minutes the teams traded buckets and, with 9:05 left in the half, UMass had a nine-point lead, 21-12. The home team kept inching ahead and, two minutes later, were out in front, 27-15. However, the action up to this point was slow, tedious and boring.

With 2:52 to go in the half, an 18-footer by Ray Ellerbrook gave the Redmen 34 points; UMass then started to pile up points in rapid succession. After Frank Martiniuk sunk an 18-footer for Vermont, Erving tapped in an errant Ellerbrook attempt and followed it with a charity hoop.

At 1:43 Mike Pagliara, subbing for Betancourt, made both ends of a one-and-one and Mathias came through with a short tap to put the Redmen in front, 41-25. Betancourt then came back on the scene and made a layup for two more points. Ellerbrook closed out the scoring with 18 seconds remaining on a fast-break drive.

UMass got off to a fast start in the second half as Dick Samuelson, who had come on for Mathias late in the first half, started at center. The 6'6 senior came through as he had against Providence, pulling down key rebounds, hitting key baskets and playing solid, all-around basketball. He hit the first Redman bucket 17 seconds into the half and, three minutes later, put in two foul shots to give his team a commanding 57-34 advantage.

A Samuelson tip-in at 13:56 made the score, 63-36, and coach Jack Leaman began to substitute freely. Jack Gallagher was already in for Chapman, while Pagliara was giving Ellerbrook a rest.

Soon Gallagher was replaced by Rich Vogeley and Ellerbrook came back in to take Betancourt's spot. At 12:03 and again at 10:38, the senior captain scored on driving layups after taking passes from Samuelson for Redman leads of 67-42 and 69-44.

Only two questions remained to be answered the rest of the way; how many points was UMass going to score, and when the game would end. Action was monotonous for the remainder of the affair; the Redmen outpointed their foes in the end, 90-73.

HOOP NOTES - High score and rebounder for UMass was Erving with 25 points and 15 caroms . . . He made nine of 14 from the field and seven of seven from the line; nothing more need be said . . . Tom Clay was the most impressive Catamount, making eight of 12 shots for 18 points, most of the long-bomb variety . . . Martiniuk, Vermont's big star, was kept in toe by the Redmen and scored only 15 points, nine of which came in the wide-open second half . . . Samuelson came up with eight rebounds and tallied two points for the enemy on a tremendous goal-tending effort . .

Gymnasts Crunch Syra.,149.8-96.5

By JOE PARNAR
Staff Reporter

With an impressive 149-8 - 96.5 victory over Syracuse University, the team opened its current season last Saturday. The Redmen took a 26-3 - 18.2 lead after the first event and continued to increase it throughout the meet.

Strong performances were turned in by all-around men Joe Reed and Norm Vexler, and co-captain Steve Cary. These three gymnasts placed in the top three, in two or more events.

The first event of the meet was floor exercise. UMass completely dominated this event with co-captain Mike Kasavana and Joe Reed scoring 8.6 to tie for 1st place. UMass' Joe Godwin captured the third spot with an 8.4.

The side horse event also ended in a tie for 1st place by UMass' Rick Riley and Syracuse's DeSteffeno. Riley turned in one of the finest performances of the afternoon for UMass by scoring a 9.0 in this event. Third place was taken by Vexler with an 8.4. At this point the Redmen had a commanding 51-2 - 40.9 lead.

The still rings event proved to be one of the few high points of the afternoon for the Syracuse fans. Syracuse's George Stalter won the event with a 9.2, the highest score of the afternoon. In second and third place were Reed and Vexler for UMass with scores of 8.7 and 8.1. Umass increased its lead at this point to 75.0 - 56.1.

The long horse vault was the last event in which Syracuse could capture one of the top three places. Silverstein scored an 8.6 to capture third place for the Orangemen. UMass' Steve Cary scored an 8.8 with his piked front handspring to win the event and edge out teammate Bob Henry, who scored an 8.7. After this event, the running score of the meet was UMass 100.7 - Syracuse 78.5.

JOE REED
Strong all-around job.

The parallel bars event saw UMass once again dominating the top three places. Joe Reed executed an excellent routine and scored a 9.0 to win the event. Right behind Reed was Steve Cary with an 8.9 and second place. The third spot was taken by Norm Vexler for UMass with an 8.4. UMass led at this point 127.0 - 96.5.

UMass captured the top three spots in the horizontal bar event as Syracuse did not enter a single contestant. Scott Stover won the event with an 8.2. Vexler took second with a 7.4 and Reed third with a 7.2.

The Redmen displayed excellent potential in their first meet of the season. Scott Stover won the horizontal bar event despite having recently recovered from an injury, and the all-around men, Reed and Vexler, performed extremely well.

With the experience gained in the first meet and the return of some key performers out with injuries, the Redmen could be the team to watch in the Eastern League.

The next Redmen meet will be this Saturday, Dec. 13th, against Southern Connecticut State College. The meet will be held in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym at 8:00 p.m.

Skaters Split in Fri-Sat Action

Redmen Defeat Colby, 4-2, Lose to Vermont 3-2

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

Excellent all-around play by the Redmen in general, and center John Hartnett and goalie P.J. Flaherty in particular, paved the way to a 4-2 victory over Colby, Friday night, before an appreciative capacity crowd at Orr Rink. The win was the first by UMass over the Mules since 1956.

This was the home opener for UMass and, if nothing else, it amply demonstrated that the Redmen should not be taken lightly by future opponents. They skated well, checked closely, and showed in Flaherty that they have a goalie who is very tough to beat.

Colby's John Bowey opened up the scoring at 5:55 of the first period, hitting on a rebound from right in front for the early lead on the power play. Assists went to Jack Wood and Charles Wood.

Dennis Grabowski tied it up at 18:51 with a beautiful break-away goal. Taking a pass up ice from Jack Edwards and streaking in all alone on the right side, he cleanly beat goalie Dan Timmons to the left corner.

Edwards put UMass ahead temporarily at 3:08 of the second, cashing in on a rebound, assists to Hartnett and Bob Whelden. Colby scored its final goal at 15:21 as Jack Wood's hard, rising shot from the left point trickled through Flaherty's pads.

At 16:51, Whelden scored what proved to be the winner. Edwards, flying down the right side, fired the puck goalward and Hartnett flipped a beautiful pass to Whelden, skating on the left, who lifted it into the right corner of the net.

Eddie Riley provided the insurance goal at 15:33 of the third period, scoring on a rebound from just outside of the crease. Eric Scrafield and Brian Sullivan received assists on the play.

With 55 seconds remaining, and Colby pressing, coach Richie Green pulled Timmons in favor of an extra skater, but it was all for nought.

BURLINGTON, Vt. - BobKrebs' goal at 1:27 of a sudden death overtime gave the University of Vermont a hard fought 3-2 victory over UMass, Saturday night at Gutterson Field House. The decision left UMass and UVM with identical 2-1 records.

This was a game that the obviously sluggish Redmen had almost no business being in from the start. Only the stellar goal tending of UMass' P.J. Flaherty kept the game close as the effects of a four hour bus ride and the 'down' from Friday night's Colby win were telling.

The Catamounts outshot UMass 30-17 and enjoyed a pretty solid territorial advantage throughout the contest. They skated well, hit hard and constantly beat the Redmen to the puck.

Flaherty was spectacular all night. Time after time, he came up with the big save in the face of overbearing UVM pressure. If not for him, the score might have been higher and the Redmen would not have had a chance to win it, as they did in the last few minutes.

Bob Bartholomew gave UMass the early lead as he banged one in from near the left point, at 5:15 of the first period, assists going to Bob Whelden and John Hartnett.

At 11:17, center Tom Crane tied it up for UVM, banging the puck into the left corner from just to the right of the crease. Flaherty dove quickly to his right and got his arm on the puck which bounced on it twice before finally fluttering into the net. The assist went to Walt Kelly.

UVM went ahead 2-1 at 4:01 of the third period on George Snelgrove's goal from Dick Mullany.

Over the last seven minutes, UMass finally started playing its own game and the work paid off in a Jack Edward's goal at 15:03 with a two-man advantage. Edwards took the face off from John Hartnett and flipped it past goalie Dave Reece from about 10 feet.

UMass' Bill McMann went off at 19:54 for elbowing to set the stage for Krebs' goal. After taking passes from George Kreiner and Crane, he beat Flaherty to his left, much to the delight of the Catamount crowd.

Nixon Optimistic on War End ,Denounces MyLai

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon declared Monday night that if the trends of 1969 continue, "the Vietnam war will come to a conclusion," even if peace talks prove fruitless.

But the President also said there has been no significant change in the outlook since his Nov. 3 policy report to the nation.

At a nationally broadcast and televised White House news conference, Nixon also denounced the alleged U. S. massacre of Vietnamese civilians at My Lai, but said administration investigations to date indicate it was an isolated incident.

"What appears was certainly a massacre and under no circumstances was it justified." Nixon said.

Nixon noted other Americans have helped the Vietnamese in ways such as building roads, pagodas and churches.

"This record of generosity and decency ought not be allowed to be smeared," he said. "Because if this is isolated, it ought not be allowed to smear" those who have gone to Vietnam.

The first question Nixon faced was that of Vietnam and the prospects for peace. Did he see any signs the situation is cooling?-

"Looking over the long period, yes," Nixon said. "As far as recent weeks are concerned since my speech of Nov. 3, no significant change."

But Nixon once again cited lower rates of Communist infiltration and of American casualties this year as compared with 1968.

"Looking at the future if that situation continues I believe we can see that the Vietnam war will come to a conclusion regardless of what happens at the bargaining table," he said.

"It will come to a conclusion as a result of the plan we have instituted" for the replacement of American troops with South Vietnamese forces, he said.

Turning to the Senate's adoption of an $800 personal income tax exemption in the tax reform bill and whether he would sign it, he said no.

Returning to Vietnam, Nixon was asked whether he planned an announcement soon on further troop withdrawals from the war zone and replied:

"As I indicated in my speech on TV Nov. 3, the reports from Vietnam with regard to infiltration and casualties are takeover by South Vietnamese there will be a troop cut with a takeover by the South Vietnamese later this month, perhaps within two or three weeks."

But he declined to speculate on timing or the number of men involved.

"We can go forward with our troop withdrawal program" he said, adding that any increases by the enemy can be contained.

But asked about a negotiated peace, Nixon said he does not rate the chances as very good, saying he does not foresee "any progress on the negotiating front at this time," and adding that the pressures on the enemy will increase with the improvement of the Vietnamization program.

Nixon, asked about his policy of carrying out the Supreme Court's order for immediate school desegregation, told the newsmen his policy " is to carry out what the Supreme Court has laid down."

"We'll carry out the law," he said.

The court refused earlier Monday to reconsider or amplify its Oct. 29 decision that requires immediate desegregation.

Nixon repeated his warning that if Congress fails to complete its work on the major appropriations bills before Christmas, he will call it back into special session after Christmas.

But he added both the House and the Senate are moving more rapidly than they were several days ago when he announce the possibility of a post-Christmas session.

Referring to Vice President Spiro T. Agnew's two speeches about the news media, a newsman asked Nixon whether he disagreed with points of the criticism.

"The vice president does not clear his speeches with me just as I did not clear my speeches with President Eisenhower," Nixon said, adding, "It seems to me these were useful suggestions. Perhaps the networks disagreed with the statements. I think they should be just as reasonable and dignified in responding to them as he was in making them."

Then he said: "The news media has been fair. I have no complaints about the extent of the coverage I have received."

Moratorium Plans Set

The Vietnam Moratorium Committee plans to announce at a Washington news conference today, that one of its major efforts in December will be activity by students in their home towns during Christmas vacation. Activities suggested include canvassing neighborhoods distributing leaflets to shoppers, organizing of high school students, sending delegations to elected officials, and holding vigils or processions on Christmas eve, one of the three Moratorium days this month.

Sam Brown, co-ordinator of the Vietnam Moratorium Committee said, "It would indeed be a tragedy to miss the opportunity to carry the anti-war movement from our university communities to our home towns. The work necessary to end the war in Vietnam cannot be restricted to the areas where we have already been active. We must 'Take the Moratorium Home for Christmas.' "

The Vietnam Moratorium Committee recently sent a special memo to its more than 3,000 campus organizers urging them to devote their attention to this effort. Students were encouraged to contact other students from their home towns now on other campuses. In addition, they should contact existing peace groups or sympathetic persons in home towns to bring them into the planning with the hope that the Christmastime effort could have a lasting influence. Spokesmen for the Moratorium pointed out that many students will return to their towns again in January for between semester break and could expand upon the initial December activity then. Thus anti-war sentiment could be solidified or peace groups organized in many areas which have seen little anti-war activity to date.

The Vietnam Moratorium Committee sponsored the October 15 Moratorium, and the activities around the country on November 13 and 14. The Moratorium Days for December are the 12th, 13th, and 24th. The entire focus for the month is on small scale, basically grass-roots activity which will be modest in scope. On the 12th and 13th, canvassing and leafletting will take place in many cities and towns across the nation.

Response to the draft lottery? Results of end-semester pressure? Not quite. University Theatre students attracted considerable attention yesterday as they set up a 12-foot high guillotine in front of the Student Union. Nixon Praises Agnew

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon said Monday night that Vice President Spiro T. Agnew "rendered a public service in talking in a very dignified and courageous way" in his recent speeches criticizing the news media.

Nixon also said, in answering questions at his news conference, that he thinks "the news media have been fair" in reporting on his administration.

Rather than oppose bias in television news commentary, the President said Agnew recognized that there should be differences of opinion.

"I don't want a bunch of intellectual eunuchs writing the news or interpreting the news," the President went on, saying he thought Agnew's main message to television was that it should follow the practice of newspapers in separating news from opinion.

In other words, Nixon said, "Don't mix the opinion with reporting the news."

"It seems to me these were useful statements," Nixon added, saying that if the networks disagreed with Agnew's statements "I think they should be just as reasonable and dignified in responding to them as he was in making them."

The question, put to Nixon by Dan Rather, of CBS, drew some laughter from the assembled reporters.

A few minutes later, when asked about his view of coverage of the administration, Nixon said "I have no complaint about the extent of the coverage I have received."

He will be satisfied, the President added, if the news media "allow me a chance to be heard" and then put on their commentators afterwards.

"I'll take my chances," he said.

Summer Session Sliced

Due to the University budget cut of last spring and large salary increases, the Dean of Administration's office has found it necessary to substantially reduce the summer program. This policy would not affect the swing-shift program but would reduce the normal sessions from the anticipated two six week programs to one session running from the 13th of July to the 21st of August.

Since there is a projected need of some students, especially seniors to take courses so that they may be able to graduate in their normal academic year, Dean of Administration William Venmen and his Office, in conjunction with the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee, are planning to offer a special session in the last three weeks of June and the first two of July. This program hopefully will offer up to six courses designed to meet the needs of those who desire such a program. If you anticipate being in this situation or would for another reason wish to see a course offered during this five week session it would be extremely helpful if you would drop off the necessary information in the Student Senate Office on the second floor of the Student Union either today or Tuesday.

Dartmouth Blacks Put on Probation

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) - Seventeen Negro students at Dartmouth College were placed on "college discipline" Monday for their part in preventing an Oct. 15 speech at Hanover by Nobel laureate William Shockley.

"College discipline" is translated as probation by Dartmouth spokesmen.

In Monday's cases, college discipline was imposed on all 17 for a single term, in this case the winter term. Dartmouth operates under a trimester system, so the period involved is one-third of an academic year.

Although the students were placed on probation, no restrictions were placed on them and they will not be listed in their activities. But the imposition of college discipline would be a factor if, at a later date, they became involved in other disciplinary procedures.

The penalties were imposed by the college Committee on Standing and Conduct. The cases of the 17 were heard by a judicial advisory committee for black students, which forwarded a 29-page report to the dean, who then made it available to the Committee on Standing and Conduct.

Names of the 17 students disciplined were not disclosed by the college.

They were accused of violating college guidelines on freedom of expression and dissent. These guidelines prohibit the use of "force of the threat of force, or obstruction of the orderly processes of the college."

Dr. Shockley, professor of engineering sciences at Stanford University, was in Hanover to speak at the fall meeting of the National Academy of Sciences of which he is a member.

Dr. Shockley has spoken widely about possible genetic differences affecting intelligence among the races. In Hanover the black students clapped hands in unison when Shockley attempted to speak. He finally gave up the attempt.

In its announcement of the penalties, the Committee on Standing and Conduct said that "Were it not for extenuating circumstances, some of which were explained in the report of the judicial advisory committee, the penalty would have been more severe."

Dr. Shockley shared a Nobel prize in 1956 for his work in development of the transistor.

Obscene Books Seized in Ludlow

LUDLOW, Mass. (AP) - State Police raided a warehouse Monday seized 1200 books, and arrested the warehouse manager on four counts charging possession of obscene books with intent to sell.

Police said the warehouse was a distribution center for western Massachusetts.

Leroy A. Brandorff, 37, of Warren, was taken into custody but later was released without bail for later court appearance.

Police said the seized books were hard cover copies and that they were made to retail at $25 each.

Student Senate Academic Affairs

SMU Students Hunt Pres. Head

Student strikers at Southeastern Massachusetts University ended 13 boycott of classes late last week. The SMU students have indicated however, that they will continue their struggle to oust University President Joseph Driscoll.

The recent controversy at SMU involved action by President Driscoll against two faculty members, this fall. In protest the school's student senate voted to boycott classes during Thanksgiving week and proclaimed its "strong determination to continue to seek the dismissal of Dr. Driscoll."

SMU's faculty backed the student action as 100 members of the school's chapter of the American Federation of Teachers passed a resolution maintaining that the trustees and administration "had abandoned this university."

As a result of this Driscoll had threatened court injuctions and possible arrest of student leaders as well as academic action against any student's participation in the strike.

Last Wednesday the student senate voted to end the strike, then 10 days old, but met opposition from the student body as 200 marched through the administration building. Some were wearing buttons reading "Joe must go," and chanting "Burn it (the university) down!"

Nine members of the senate then resigned including Byron Ford, a senior and president of the student governing body. Ford stated that he had met frustration in trying to deal with students, faculty, Driscoll and trustees.

The 3100 students of SMU and President Driscoll have been battling each other since 1967. And it all began over a nick-name concerning the school's athletic teams.

The student body wanted the name "Vikings", but Driscoll would have none of this. A Marine fighter pilot in WWII, he preferred the name of "Corsair" after the plane he flew in the war. The SMU teams were named the Corsairs.

According to one faculty member the incident created a "minor flurry." But later that year a bigger and noisier flurry was created when a school underground newspaper revealed that Driscoll had hired a private detective to follow aknown member of Students for Democratic Society. Driscoll defended his action by saying that it was "perfectly acceptable administrative practice," and that the student followed was a "professional organizer of disorder."

In February of 1968 Driscoll collided with the faculty. Assistant professor Donald W. Krueger of the art department had asked his students to design an American flag for the year 2000 A.D. One student created a banner displaying a swastika on a field of blue, which Krueger subsequently included at an SMU art exhibition. This upset Driscoll and with the art faculty's support he refused to renew Krueger's contract. Students staged a three day strike and the student senate voted a "lack of confidence" in the president.

The latest incident began in early November when Driscoll told assistant professor of English, Charles White, that he was denying him tenure, although the English faculty had highly recommended him. And at the same time the president also told Robert L. McCabe of the math department, an active worker in peace organizations, that because of his participation in the Krueger affair he would expect no increments in pay or promotions. Driscoll denied that his action with McCabe had political overtones.

The student body reacted to Driscoll's actions with a senate resolution declaring that the university president had "demonstrated to a great degree enti-intellectual, dishonoest and undemocratic methods." The senate called for his immediate discharge and circulated a supporting petition that 1800 students signed. Then some 400 students marched on the State House in Boston and presented a list of grievances to Gov. Sargent, who ordered a full report.

The faculty supported the students then with a 52-12 AA-UP chapter vote for Driscoll's resignation. Driscoll called national AAUP headquarters to send an investigating team to his campus.

Driscoll had defended the actions that have earned him censure from students and faculty alike. Presently he has expressed confidence that the AAUP investigating committee due on campus this week will support him. "I'll be bold enough to say we're going to win."

Chicago Seven Request Acquittal

By F. RICHARD CICCONE
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) - A motion for acquittal in the trial of seven men charged with conspiring to incite rioting during the 1968 Democratic National Convention was rejected Monday.

"The court, at this time, must consider more favorably the evidence presented by the government," said U. S. District Court Judge Julius J. Hoffman. The entire morning session was spent arguing the defense motion.

The defendants are David T. Dellinger, 54; Jerry C. Rubin, 31; Rennard C. "Rennie" Davis, 29; Abbot "Abbie" Hoffman, 31; Thomas C. Hayden, 30; John R. Froines, 31, and Lee Wiener, 31.

If convicted, each could receive a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and a $20,000 fine.

The motion for acquittal came after the close of the prosecution's case which lasted 10 weeks.

William M. Kunstler, a defense lawyer, said the only point the government proved was that "the United States is out to destroy the First Amendment. In that, they have succeeded."

In rebuttal, Richard G. Schultz, an assistant U. S. district attorney said: "We have proved statements by the defendants like 'Get him. . .Kill him,' were made in the middle of riots. These are not protected by the First Amendment."

Kunstler said the government failed to prove that the defendants conspired to come from other states to Chicago, that any defendant traveled to Chicago or that any defendant had criminal intent prior to coming to Chicago.

Schultz outlined six meetings attended by three or more of the defendants prior to the convention and he said this evidence was proof of a conspiracy.

HEY!

The Five College Student Coordinating Board is looking for ideas and projects that will benefit students in the Valley. Like a coffeehouse that doesn't close along with the rest of Amherst, Northampton and South Hadley. With a jukebox or a record player. . .and maybe even a band occasionally. Just a place to rap, have something to eat or drink. The possibilities are vast. But we need student support for that. Or how about the availability of course lists at the other schools just in case you'd like to take a course outside of your own school. Or maybe you've got other ideas that may need a financial boost or a project you need people to help with. So maybe we can help. Try us.

Submit proposals, complaints, suggestions etc. to the Five College Student Coordinating Board c/o your local representative. . .or bring it up at one of our meetings, 301 Converse Hall, Amherst College at 7:00 P.M. on Thursday nights.

FROM OUR SIDE

A Good Move

The action taken by the Faculty Senate regarding freshmen flunking out should be applauded. The Senate agreed that it is difficult for new-comers to adjust to the University and that this adjustment period "lasts about a year." But perhaps a more important reason for freshmen not flunking out is this: freshmen are more likely to do poorly in their required introductory courses; some which they have no interest in at all. According to the Senate motion, a student will no longer be penalized for having no interest in certain courses. Maybe the local draftboards will ignore freshmen for a while.

However, neither does the provision allow for goofing-off. A freshman on academic probation must achieve the retention average following second semester. The cumulative average required for graduation, 2,0, must be attained by the freshmen concerned regardless of the freshmen year.

Persons entering the University will now have a fairer chance to receive the education they deserve. A bad start does not necessarily mean an abrupt end to a college career, but may supply the motivation and initiative for the next three years.

Songmy:One In A Number

"A tragic, isolated incident!"

"There was no massacre at Songmy."

"The killing at Songmy was done under the influence of marijuana."

"I was there and I saw no massacre."

The Songmy massacre was the first such incident publically acknowledged. By no means does that indicate no other acts of genocide have taken place. The nature of the war in Vietnam is genocidal.

The four statements quoted above are comments or reactions to the incident. Public opinion is extremely important and Washington is trying its best to manipulate the situation to insure the least possible loss of public confidence.

Unsuccessful in suppressing information about the Songmy massacre, the government is attempting to confine public attention to a few "regrettable" episodes in an otherwise "clean" war.

The government is constructing a "show" trial with the intention of convicting several sadistic or stupid Gis to prevent public attention from focusing on the broad genocidal nature of the war.

Countless villages and lives have been destroyed by the U.S. in Vietnam. Napalm, bombs, anti-personnel bombs, flame - throwers, bulldozers, tanks, and crop (and life) destroying defoliants are all weapons of mass slaughter.

The American public is all too willing to believe what it is told by the government controlled media. But the time has come to face some facts. Genocide occurs every day in Vietnam. And the only real difference between us on this college campus and our brothers and friends in Vietnam commiting genocide is we had the money or the volition to attend school. Think about it.

Inroads In Education

For a long time educators and administrators alike have pondered the question of "What is the best way to teach?" It is generally agreed that education must be interesting and worthwhile.

Jermiah Allen, Dean of the U-Mass School of Education, and Rody McCoy, Superintendent of the Oceanhill - Brownsville District in New York, both would like to change the city's form of education.

Both Dean Allen and Mr. Mc Coy think that the problems of education are inherent in education's lack of variety. Another issue, says Dean Allen, is the problem of community control. How should the school board recognize the people? The board often may tend to be prejudiced towards other classes. For instance, they may tend to regard the educated upper classes with more importance than perhaps the unskilled workers. Also it is obvious that the twelve people on the school board cannot possibly represent five thousand people of many diversified classes and occupations. Many people do not feel that they are properly represented.

It is for this reason that Rody McCoy decided to embark upon a new and different program in education. He employs so-called "para-professionals" or people with either no college or with only a few years of higher education. These para-professionals are chosen because of their desire to join the program and their willingness to work. They are required to select one option like library science, reading, math, etc. and teach it in the school system. If they find that the option they have picked is not for them; they can choose another.

When asked the results of this system McCoy replied that thus far, "The results are frighteningly positive." It is also a fact that some of these people have had better success in eaching than people with B.A.'s and M.A.'s in education.

Mr. McCoy is under much criticism from the Oceanhill - Brownsville School Board. He is not very optimistic in getting the board to change for what has been proven is the better. He is trying to change their minds, however, by bringing in outside educators and attestments.

He has come to UMass to broaden the scope of some of the programs and to give them new dimensions. As an objective group, UMass can help with new ideas and provide an added resource staff and data analysis. In Mr. McCoy's own words, UMass has "public posture" in exerting its influence on the problems of the city schools with a desire to bring about relevancy and change. He also admits to the very excellent reputation of Dean Allen.

Here again we see how the School of Education under the very capable leadership of Dean Allen has gone far to further the precepts of professional education in all areas.

Birth Control: Needed Education

To the editor:

For two years a group of women have attempted to bring birth control literature on campus. Every attempt has resulted in failure. First the so called officials or administrators refused to become involved in this overtly "scandalous" action and then those student bodies called upon did not care or were unable to involve their own funds. It is totally inane that a University of this size has taken no steps to involve itself in this crucial problem. Especially since the rate of pregnancy on this campus is reported by the infirmary at being 5% plus. Just in the last two months the University infirmary has reported 85 cases of unwanted pregnancies. Yet the only information given out, is to those girls specifically requesting it. However the repressive and moralistic attitude of the infirmary doctors make it impossible for a girl to feel easy about consulting a doctor. Thus the pretensions of the infirmary doctors are totally ridiculous. There are only two doctors, possibly three, from whom one can obtain the pill. The rest can only inform you of your "compromising position" and moralistically reject your request. Only at the complaint of excruciating pain or a delayed periodic cycle will the request be answered.

This absurdity can no longer continue. The University students must take care of their own body. As a student senator, I urge the senate to reconsider the birth control bill just made null and void due to a bookkeeping error. This bill provided for a forty-four page pamphlet on birth control to be circulated to all University students, the organization of a research committee, and the appropriation of a thousand dollars for the formation of a birth control clinic. The University is in dire need of these reforms. If the student senate will approve of deficit spending, this bill can thus be passed and realized. If this bill is not passed I believe it will be due to the pressure the administration is expressing to certain student body "leaders". The main opposition claims that this bill is illegal. However according to a 1966 law only the dissemination of devices and counseling to unmarried women are illegal (not information). And if it is illegal as the birth control clinic may be, why not oppose the law. Everyone has the right of the expression of their own sexuality, contrary to the hopes and opinions of many legislators. I refuse to let a few administrators and infirmary doctors continue to keep a lid on this pot - their token efforts of quietly going into a handful of dorms and whispering about birth control are no longer good enough. It is time the University contributes to our education - relevantly.

Guilt: We Cannot Warsh It Off

To the editor:

Songmy did happen
As did Hiroshima
As did the Ku Klux Klan,
As did the innumerable massacres of the American Indian. The blood is on all of our hands. We cannot wash it off as did Pilot by judging a few guilty of the act. Nor can we deny the atrocity by declaring the necessity of the war. Nothing can justify the slaughter of Songmy, or Hiroshima,
or the Ku Klux Klan
or the massacres of the Indians.

Nor can we deny our own participation in the acts.

We all must admit our guilt. We all must resolve that such atrocities will never occur again. We must affirm the value of life.

I ask you to join me in a fast from Wednesday supper, December 10 to Thursday supper, December 11, sponsored by myself and other clergy of the UCF, Hillel, and Newman Center with a worship service at 4:00 p.m. Thursday in the Commonwealth Room at the Student Union.

Julliard Performance "A Rare Privilege"

J. W. WADE
Fine Arts Staff

The Juilliard String Quartet came to Bowker Auditorium Thursday evening to present a concert of Beethoven, Bartok, and Mendelssohn - they brought their usual high caliber of musicianship that has earned them the reputation of being the finest performing quartet today. Thursday night's performance was the third event in the Fine Arts Council's Concert Association Chamber Music Series.

Beethoven's A Major Quartet, Opus 18, No. 5, was sparkling elegance. Though a relatively early work, the A major Quartet is firmly composed and is actually one of Beethoven's more pleasant quartets to hear. The Juilliards played with definitive style throughout, stressing the rhythmic flow and sonorous harmonies of the piece. In a sense, they let the music speak for itself, and that alone was sheer beauty.

To hear the Juilliard String Quartet perform one of the Bartok String Quartets is a rare privilege. Thursday night they offered the Fifth Quartet, composed in 1934. The Fifth can be described as outwardly mammoth in scope and internally dynamite. The powerful impact of the first movement, Allegro, was beyond belief with its maddening furor and interweaving lines of the macabre. Tension was unbearable in the unnerving second movement Adagio molto. Two more movements of twining, darting, almost frighteningly bitter harmonies - and then the Finale: Allegro vivace with its relentless pulsation, and "mind-blowing" discbords; it was a musical performance of the kind that leaves one drained.

Tonal quality never sagged for a moment in the Quartet No. 4 in E Minor. Opus 44 of Mendelssohn. The Juilliards bubbled over with musical enthusiasm in the Scherzo and savored the romanticism of the third movement Andante. They didn't soak the audience with what easily could have been a schmaltzy, theatrical rendition. First and last movements were driving virtuosotic displays. The Quartet's unity and direction was continual throughout; the results couldn't have been finer.

Committee Receives Complaints

Starting this week, the Student Senate Services Committee will handle all written complaints relating to any aspect of University life. Previously, the Services committee dealt only with Health, Housing, and Food Services complaints.

In an effort to provide a more convenient system of handling complaints, Services came up with an expanded program. The Senate Committee will now deal with any grievances relating to the University, whether they are concerned with Student Services, academics, or administrative procedure.

In other words, Senate Services' additional function will be that of a clearinghouse for all legitimate grievances; if a complaint is out of Services' purview, the Senate Committee will forward the complaint to the appropriate area for further action.

Complaint forms can now be obtained, filled out, and turned in at any Dining Commons and at the Student Senate Office in the Student Union. Students are encouraged to take advantage of this expanded service.

Grapplers Pin URI, 21-10

By ERIC OPPELAAR
Staff Reporter

In a weekend as packed with sports events as this one was it's easy for one or two sports to be lost in the shuffle. Judging from the attendance at Friday night's freshman wrestling match it seems that this is exactly what happened.

One would never have guessed it from the performance of the all new frosh team though. They took every weight class that URI could find someone to sacrifice themselves in. 21 to 10 was the final score with URI acquiring all 10 points through the mercy of two forfeits, 118 and 177.

There can't be too many complaints about the aggressiveness, desire and competitive spirit of this year's Little Redmen. Tom Hayward at 126 lbs. got things off on the right foot when his determined effort proved too much for his opponent who was subdued with a total decision.

At 134 lbs. Bill Gesenthal kept things moving with a decisive 4 to 0 decision over a tough URI opponent. Things were looking pretty close at 142 lbs. for a while as Rick Tribbitt went blow for blow with his man for seven minutes, but a timely reversal for two points and a strong ride pulled it out of the fire, 7 - 4.

Bill Farschman, at 150 lbs., displaying the drive and aggressiveness seen all through the frosh team, took every opportunity to rack up points over his opponent. After twice nearly pinning his man the clock ran out with Bill gaining a 10 - 0 victory.

At 158 lbs. Eric Oppelaar, after a slow start, rode his man for several minutes nearly pinning him once, but had to settle for a 5 to 2 decision. With the disadvantage of wrestling above his weight, Peter Rock, at 167 lbs. still wrapped his man up for the entire match, finally putting him away 9 - 0. Ed Carlsson, at 191 lbs., dominated his opponent with the strength and determination that was reflective of the whole team, his final verdict being 12 to 5.

The final match of the evening was Jeff Hazel wrestling unlimited. Heavily outweighed, Hazel used his speed and swift movements to the best advantage. Down one or two points through most of the match, his determination paid off as his URI gargantuan began to run out of steam. Repeated stalling calls turned the tables, giving Jeff a 12 to 5 victory.

As the crowds began to filter in for the Varsity match the freshman walked off the mat already thinking about Saturday's meet at Tufts.

Bright and early Saturday morning weigh-ins were held in Boyden Gym. By 11:00 the squad was on its way to Tufts and the freshman match began at 2:00. The Tiny T.U. wrestling team was anxious for a win after losing to UConn, 28-15, last Wednesday.

But their hopes were in vain. With five weight classes being forfeited, two by UMass and four by Tufts with 177 lbs. vacant in both teams, UMass already had ten points just for showing up. They turned out pot to be needed anyway as UMass took all but one match. The winners for UMass were Rock, Carlsson and Hazel, who all scored pins and Farschman with a 6 - 0 decision.

With results such as these in their first two outings, one can be sure that the Frosh have a promising season ahead of them. Best of luck Wednesday against Amherst.

Frosh Skaters Down Yale, 5-1

The freshman hockey team scored an impressive 5-1 victory over the Yale J.V.'s Saturday at Yale. The Little Redmen sextet displayed solid fore-checking and defensive work throughout and kept a continual barrage of shots directed at the Yale net. They also got an excellent goaltending job from John Kish who was quick and sure of himself when the Yale skaters put the pressure on.

Pat Keenan opened the scoring for UMass at 11:37 of the first period with assists going to Bob Shea and Rick Anderson. Yale tied the game at 14:28 of the second period on a goal by Goodspeed, assisted by McNerney and Oullet. Kish could hardly be faulted on this goal as he had only three skaters in front of him with two in the penalty box.

After the Yale score it was all UMass. Co-captain Don Riley tallied the team's second goal at 15:48 of the second period with Keenan and Anderson picking up the assists. Dave Branch came right back at 17:19 of the same period with a goal assisted by Keenan and Avery. Riley picked up his second score of the night at 5:03 of the third period as Joe Roache assisted. The freshmen closed the scoring at 13:56 of the third on Keenan's second goal of the night as he converted the rebound of a Don Lowe slap-shot.

Coach William Richards cited the fine play of his team in all areas as being instrumental to the victory. He mentioned in particular the "outstanding defensive work" of Branch and Lowe, the back-checking of Shea, the offensive work of Keenan, Riley, and Avery, and the fore-checking of all the forwards in general. The coach went on to say that, being its first game, he thought his team played "real well" and that he was "quite satisfied."

"The Department of Public Safety has limited the basketball attendance figure for the student sections on the floor in the Curry Hicks Cage to 3000. Student admissions must be terminated when this figure has been reached, and as a result, for the more attractive games we may not be able to accommodate all who wish to attend. We regret this disappointing situation; however, the safety of spectators must remain our primary concern."

Trackmen Hurt By Graduation Face Rebuilding Season

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

The 1970 winter track season is just around the corner and U-Mass track coach Ken O'Brien is faced with the chore of rebuilding a team that has lost nine outstanding seniors via graduation. With only four seniors on this years team, it will take hard work by the underclassmen to fill the voids left by last years seniors. And they will be big voids as four of the places to be filled will be those of conference champions and two others will be those of second place finishers.

Through training and actual race experience O'Brien feels that the team will be ready to open its Yankee Conference schedule on Feb. 18 against Connecticut with a well rounded unit. The race experience will be gained from the Knights of Columbus meet and the B.A.A. Games in January and from dual meets with Northeastern and Dartmouth, two of New England's strongest track teams.

This year's track team will be co-captained by seniors Dave Marble and Dave Evans. Marble is a fine sprinter, who finished third in the 100, and second in the 220 in last year's Conference Championship, and fifth in the outdoor N.E. 100 yard dash.

Evans is a middle distance runner who is coming off a year's layoff from track after suffering a knee injury. He ran well as a sophomore and Coach O'Brien will be looking for him to return to his former racing form.

Distance running will be a big question for Coach O'Brien to solve this year. There will be a great deal of switching amongst the distance men in the mile, two mile, and 1000 yard runs. There is good potential, but it has to be developed through race experience, as this year's distance men are mostly juniors and sophomores.

Cross country ace Ron Wayne will be the leading runner for the Redmen. He'll be running in the mile, two mile and 1000 yard runs. Joining him in these events will be cross country teammates juniors Leo Duarte and Tom Derian, and sophomores Bruce Blackburn, Don Dunsky and Steve Whicker. By shuffling these men around, O'Brien hopes that he will be able to come up with the depth that is needed in these events.

Joining Evans in his middle distances will be senior Bill Donaldson, junior Larry Paulson, and sophomore Al Mangan. Evans and Donaldson will give experience to these events and Paulson is coming off a fine cross country season. Mangan set freshman records in the 440 and 880 yard runs last season and hopes to carry on with his winning ways as a varsity runner.

The sprints and hurdles will be the strongpoints of the team this year. Joining co-captain Marble in the sprints will be Walter Mayo, a 50 yard record holder, and Ed Heywood. Sophomores Ron Harris and Dave Annis will add to the speed and strength of this fleet unit.

Senior Mark Lefever and junior Gerry Spellman are the returning hurdlers on the team. Spellman is the varsity record holder and both he and Lefever placed in last year's conference meet. Sophomores Peter Bradlee and Jim Graves are new varsity hurdlers and with the experience gained from Spellman and Lefever should prove to be fine additions to the team.

Senior Paul Nyman, junior Carpenter and sophomore Ed Shaughnessey will be this year's high jumpers.

Junior Eddie Acaro will be counted on to solve the weight throwing problem this coming season.

Redmen Meet URI Tonight In Big Conference Game

Capacity Crowd Is Expected For Contest Between YC Powers

By STEVE ROSS
Senior Reporter

After Saturday night's easy win over Vermont, the Redmen must take on their toughest Yankee Conference opponent in Rhode Island. Coach Jack Leaman calls this URI unit, "the best unit we've faced from Rhode Island since I've been here." Considering some of the Ram aggregations that have thumped the Redmen over the past few campaigns, this must be quite a team.

Rhody has a 2-1 record, and a 1-0 YC slate. The Rams bombed Bridgeport 107-72 in the opener, lost a tough 70-68 decision at Manhattan when foul troubles caught up with them, and crushed Maine 98-65 on Saturday night.

Coach Tom Carmody has secured himself some first rate material through the Junior College ranks. Starters Dwight Tolliver at 5' 11, Nate Adger, 6'5" and Claude English, 6'5", have all come to URI through the Junior Colleges. English was an all-conference selection last season while the other pair are playing in their first season.

The other starters are 6'6 John Fultz, and 6'4 Phil Hickson, a guard. Fultz seems to get better every year, and he was an all-conference selection last year. If he and Julius Erving don't make it this year, many experts will be shocked. Hickson was a member of the Weequahic "Wonder Five" in New Jersey, probably the finest high school team this side of Lew Alcindor's Power Memorial quintets.

Backing up the first five will be Ron Louder, and Ed "Flea" Molloy. Louder was a regular on last year's team, while the 5'5 "Flea" is unbelievably quick. Carmody can also call on soph Mike Beale or lettermen Bud Hazzard and Bill Metkiff.

Leaman will counter with his normal starting line-up of Erving, Dennis Chapman, Kenny Mathias, John Bettencourt, and Ray Ellerbrook. Dick Samuelson, Mike Pagliara, and Jack Gallagher are all slated for back-up duty.

One thing that is very noticable after the first two games is the improved play of both Samuelson and Mathias. Both are anxious to play, and, as a result, they are hustling like men obsessed to pile up playing time. Leaman is handling the situation beautifully by dividing the playing time evenly.

Saturday night's fray was viewed by another turnaway throng of "4200". Erving distinguished himself with 25 points. Bettancourt could also have been considered a star with a fine all around performance. The aforementioned Mathias and Samuelson along with Jack Gallagher also stood out defensively.

JOHN FULTZ - The URI star who was all-conference last year will lead the Rams as they visit the Cage tonight for an eight o'clock game with the Redmen. The contest is expected to be a sell-out.

Vermont coach Art Loche called Erving, "the most exciting sophomore I've seen in my five years in the Yankee Conference." He also admitted, "I think we were in over our heads with Massachusetts."

One of the best parts of the games now is the warm-up drill. Erving shows a new stuff shot every night. His latest was a double-pump reverse left handed cram coming across from the right of the lane. He showed the move twice in the second half, sans pump and cram. Too bad the rule committee decided to ban the dunk. Incidentally, dunking in the warm-up can be considered a technical foul because it breaks the spirit of the rule.

Thus far the Redmen have managed to outrebound the opposition by healthy margins. Leaman is guessing, "The team that wins the battle of the backboards will win the game." The coach also said, "The game will be so close, that the crowd rooting for us could well make the difference."

If Saturday were any indication, be there early, and bring noise. Bring lots of noise.

Conference Action Leaves UMass Hanging

At a meeting of the Presidents of the six New England State Universities held in Boston on December 5, 1969, the following resolution was adopted:

WHEREAS

The University of Massachusetts has clearly violated Bylaw 4-6 (h) of the National Collegiate Athletic Association by allowing students to participate in intercollegiate athletics despite inadequate academic qualifications, and

WHEREAS

The University of Massachusetts may have allowed one or more ineligible students to play varsity football in 1969, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Presidents of the member universities of the Yankee Conference, in special meeting assembled, that

"1) The Yankee Conference officially reprimands and censures the University of Massachusetts for the admitted rule violations and that,

"2) The Yankee Conference directs its Commissioner to obtain through the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Assn. (ECAC) an independent investigation with respect to eligibility of the members of the 1969 University of Massachusetts varsity football team, and directs that the designation of a conference football champion be held in abeyance pending the outcome of this investigation."

This resolution was adopted by a vote of five to zero, with the President of the University of Massachusetts abstaining.

Homer D. Babbidge, Jr.
Yankee Conference President Pro Tem

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

UMass was rightfully censured for its violation of the 1.6 entrance rule for athletes, by the Yankee Conference. And if the Conference presidents had made a final judgement of the affair, the minute respect for the Conference in many quarters might have been increased.

But the Yankee Conference, remember, is a small-time outfit, and no one can expect it to act in a big time manner.

Instead of taking a definite stand in the issue, the Conference has decided to keep UMass hanging on the end of the hangman's noose, without knowledge of its execution date.

The Conference presidents, among whom, John Lederle is a big time minority, censured UMass, "pending a study by an independent body," (namely the Eastern College Athletic Conference) and "hold the Yankee Conference football title in abeyance pending an investigation", (an absurdity simply because UMass has not officially been awarded the Conference football title by the Conference executive committee).

Therefore the small timers from Storrs, Kingston, Orono, Durham and Burlington, (sort of a small time ring to those names isn't there) have placed the entire U-Mass football team under false suspicion, and has made a personal interpretation of NCAA bylaws, by making a freshman ineligibility a varsity ineligibility.

The Yankee Conference wants UMass at its own level. They are tired of losing, tired of being humiliated by a superior athletic department. So, instead of trying to build up to meet UMass evenly, they will take the cowardly, easy way of tearing down UMass.

Taking away a football title from a school that earned it in the most decisive fashion, in history, because a vague interpretation of a vague rule rules the school ineligible, can certainly change the title on paper.

But ask the players who played in the Yankee Conference. Ask anyone who saw a Yankee Conference football game. The title was won by UMass on the field with ease.

UMass has reiterated over and over again that they are guilty, that they revealed their own guilt to the Conference. They investigated their violations themselves, and found some freshmen athletes a few years ago to have performed ineligibly. UMass is not seeking to hide their guilt in this matter. They have revealed the violation and have awaited a judgement.

But the Conference wants to milk and bleed the incident for all its worth.

They are only bleeding themselves. The Yankee Conference with the exception of UMass teams, has been slaughtered in non-conference athletics. They have favorable publicity only from UMass. They look like the fools they are in this incident.

The gentleman's way would be to make a judgement and stick to it. All the Conference has done, is make threats and curses.

UMass should cease being a gentleman for once and leave once and for all. Maybe there would be some confusion in scheduling for a while. Maybe there would be a period of hard times getting things straightened out. But it would all be worthwhile being rid of the small timers from New England tank towns.

Frosh Hoopsters Bomb STCC, 69-41

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Staff Reporter

Showing a vast improvement over their opening performance, the UMass frosh basketball trounced Springfield Tech, Community College last Saturday night, 69-41. Although Tech kept close to the Little Redmen in the first half, trailing by only two at halftime, the frosh outscored them 44-18 in the second half to make the contest a runaway. The win evened the hoopsters season mark at 1-1.

Coach Peter Broaca shuffled his starting line-up a bit for this game and had both Tom White and Chuck Olsen starting up front with Mike McSharry getting a starting berth in the backcourt. The moves were based on performances in the 74-70 loss to New Haven. Obviously the shifting payed off as the Little Redmen simply outclassed their opponents.

UMass opened the scoring as Andre Polly scored on a rebound and Chuck Olsen hit a jumper. Tech's Bob Zanolli put his team on the board at 18:25 of the half with a hoop to narrow the gap to 4-2. The team's traded hoops for most of the half as good shooting prevailed for both squads. Bob Kalbfell was especially impressive for the Little Redmen as he scored ten points in the first half and did a strong job on the boards. Kalbfell hit a jump shot at 10:30 to give the frosh a 14-12 lead. Mike Polakoff, who scored over twenty points for the second straight contest, took over the scoring chores at this point as he scored three straight hoops. Mark Canegallo, however, scored five points for Tech and UMass led 20-17. Mark Starr made a jumper, McSharry hit two free throws, and White made one as UMass took a 25-23 lead into the dressing room.

The second half was all UMass. Sparked by the all-around play of both Starr and Kalbfell and the shooting of Polakoff, the Little Redmen pulled to a nine point lead with only four minutes gone in the half. Polakoff had eight of the team's fourteen points in this spree and the frosh led, 37-28. The squad continued to build the lead and at one point scored twelve consecutive points to take a 57-32 edge. For all intents and purposes that was the ball game.

Coach Broaca then started to clear his bench as the whole squad saw action. But even the substitutes would not let up as they built the lead up to thirty points but a lay-up by Zanolli with 0:18 left on the clock made the final score 69-41.

Tonight, the Little Redmen meet the frosh of Rhode Island in a preliminary to the varsity game. The frosh contest is slated to begin at 6:00 and should provide some good action, and a good test for the Little Redmen.

Mermaids Finish Second In Albany Swim Meet

Two points meant the difference between 1st and 2nd place for the UMass Mermaids at the Albany Invitational Swim Meet, held November 22 at SUNY. The 11 girl squad fought to catch up with the University of Vermont, who lead throughout the meet. Both UMass and UVM outdistanced the other seven competing teams. The total score indicating this with Vermont scoring 76 points, UMass 74, and Skidmore 39. The opening event, the 200 Medlay-Relay, set the pace -- Vermont won it with the UMass team, (Barb Quinn, Nancy Tyksienski, Kathy Sharron, and Debbie Jackson) placing third. The next event was won by Janet Shockley, captain of the UMass squad, although she was unable to match her last year's record time of 2:12.5. In the 50 Free, the 3rd event, two UMass girls scored, Leslie Barselaar 3rd place and Jan Reid 5th. The 50 yd. Breaststroke was won in a record time, Gretchen Nelson, UMass, outdistancing the field in a 37.0 effort. In the 50 Fly, Jan Reid again picked up valuable points in her third place finish. In the 200 yd. IM, Janet Shockley successfully defended her last year's title, while Kathy Sharron placed 5th. Setting another record for UMass was Leslie Barselaar in her 1:04.6 effort in the 100 yd. Freestyle. Gretchen Nelson took her 2nd gold medal in the 100 Breast, winning in 1:20.7. Nancy Tyksienski placed 4th in this event. Barb Quinn scored points in her 6th place finish in the 100 Back. The final event was also a victory for UMass with Gretchen Nelson, Jan Reid, Leslie Barselaar and Jan Shockley combining to set a new Championship record, 1:55.4. Vermont was second in this event, but unfortunately had enough points for the win.

Veale Wants Student Part In Commencement Planning

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

Senior class president Dave Veale has presented a letter to the Board of Trustees requesting that "proposals be implemented giving students a larger role in planning their own graduation."

Veale's letter states, "We would like to express to you and the rest of the Board of Trustees our dissatisfaction over the handling of honorary degree and speaker nominations for Commencement." He further states that while students can recognize the right of the Trustees to approve all candidates for honorary degrees, "we also recognize that the students receiving degrees are the focal point of this ceremoney. Since the degree candidates, especially the Senior Class, have this role, we feel that their representatives should take a major part in Commencement planning, especially in the area of honorary degrees and speakers."

The senior class president has called for the following procedures to be implemented:

"1). The Senior Class will collect all nominations from all University students, including Stockbridge students, wishing to nominate someone for honorary degrees. Faculty, Staff and Administration may also give their nominations to the Senior Class, although they have other channels.

"2). The Senior Class and the other collection agencies will submit their liests to a Trustee subcommittee on this topic. The Senior Class President, Graduate Student Senate President, and a representative from the Stockbridge graduating class will be on this committee as well as interested Trustees.

"3). The Senior Class President will submit all recommendations from this committee to the Board of Trustees and will be allowed to take part in the discussion and to vote on the nominations."

Under present policy, nominating procedures for honorary degrees are handled by the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees. There are no students on this committee.

The only student group connected with graduation is the Commencement Task Force, comprised of five seniors, and at least eight administrators. The task force is supposed to handle budget matters and make all major policy concerning commencement, but has been labeled as a form of "tokenism" by Veale.

"The Commencement Task Force has a technical function, but no where does it make substantive decisions. We do not make up a budget or approve one that is presented to us. We have no control over the taxes levied upon us," said Veale.

The firkt meeting of this year's Task Force is scheduled for today.

The senior class president said that for the last two years he has checked into commencement procedures and found that the Commencement Task Force's budget was never approved by representatives of the senior class. The administration went ahead on its own, according to Veale, and "this is what is happening again this year."

"For many, the commencement is not a Senior Class function but rather a University or state function. If this is so, then the University or the state should pay for the function, not the degree candidates," Veale said.

Seniors are presently paying approximately for three-fourths of the commencement budget, or about $31,000 ($10 per senior), according to Veale. The senior class president concluded, "By our being taxed this amount of money, we should have the focal role in commencement. Without the Senior Class there would be no commencement."

See page 3 for the selection criteria for honorary degree candidates.

Citations Issued In BU Sit-In

BOSTON (AP) - Contempt citations were issued Tuesday against the leaders of a continuing student sit-in at Boston University's administration building.

The citations were handed down at the university's request in Suffolk Superior Court by Judge Allen M. Hale. They ordered the respondents to appear for a hearing before Hale Thursday morning.

The citations accuse the respondents of failing to heed an injunction issues by Hale last week prohibiting them from participating in demonstrations interfering with university routine.

If convicted of contempt, those accused could be jailed indefinitely.

The sit-in was begun Monday by about 50 students seeking to dramatize a list of demands that stemmed from a Nov. 25 melee at the university.

President Arland F. Christ-Janer repeatedly asked the protestors to leave, warning them that they were violating both the injunction and university regulations. For their part, the demonstrators vowed yesterday to remain in the administration building until their demands were met.

They barricaded the doors and windows, and supporters furnished them with food.

The students' demands included:

- That the court injunction barring disruptive demonstrations on campus be dropped;
- That the university refrain from summoning police to break up future demonstrations on campus;
- That the university take legal, moral and financial responsibility for the melee that erupted Nov. 25 when students tried to block an official of the strike-bound General Electric Co. from appearing on campus;
- That BU join the strike-related nationwide AFL-CIO boycott of GE products.

Close Vote Predicted In Senate VP Contest

By JOHN J. DUBOIS Senate Reporter

A Senate Vice-Presidential campaign that has generated no animosity, few issues, and little excitement appears to be sharpening a bit with balloting scheduled for this evening.

The candidates, Senator Glenn Elters (Commuters), Finance Chairman, and Senator James Albert (Kennedy Lower), Budgets Chairman, both predicted a close vote.

There appears to have developed a difference in the way each candidate conceives of the Senate Vice-Presidency. Senator Albert sees the office as purely internal, with no "policy-making" aspects. Senator Elters feels that the Vice President, in addition to taking on any tasks that the President may assign, "inherently has some role in policy due to his administrative position with regard to the committees."

The Vice President is a member of all Senate standing committees, and has historically co-ordinated the work of these committees and aided in the drafting of legislation.

Senator Elters added that it is the Vice President's job to "guide legislation through the floor in a manner that will not cause undue division."

Senator Albert emphasized that he would seek to improve the smooth functioning of the committee system, and the consequent shortening of lengthy meetings and agendas.

Though both candidates are relative newcomers to the Senate, (Elters last March, and Albert this September), their involvement in the Senate stretches back beyond their election. Senator Albert had been a member of the Budgets Committee for two and one half years before being appointed Chairman last Spring. Senator Elters had served as secretary of the Academic Affairs Committee, of which he is presently Vice-Chairman, before being appointed Finance Committee Chairman last Spring.

It would appear that President Olken has reaffirmed her earlier intention not to participate in the race, as neither candidate foresees an endorsement. President Olken is reported to feel that her support of a candidate might impair her ability to work with his opponent should he be elected.

House Debate Preceeds Approval Of Asian Aid

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House, after a loud and angry debate, tentatively approved Tuesday night $104.5 million in military aid for Nationalist China and South Korea.

The package, subject to a roll call vote later, includes a controversial $54.5 million to supply fighter planes for Nationalist China.

It was approved on a 113 to 77 vote.

"This is fishy and I don't like it," shouted Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., who said for the first time in his congressional career that he planned to vote against the foreign aid money bill. The measure contains funds for the two projects. The over-all bill has been cut to a new low of about $1.6 billion.

Rep. L. F. Sikes, D-Fla., however, argued that Communist China has more than 1,400 jets "within striking distance of Taiwan" and referred to that nation as "an arrogant trouble maker.

"These planes are needed if Taiwan is to have a chance to survive in case of attack," Sikes said.

The package actually added $50 million for special military assistance to South Korea which the House Appropriations Committee had knocked out of the money bill.

Both House GOP leader Gerald R. Ford and Democratic leader, Carl Albert of Oklahoma said they had letters from Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird supporting the extra funds for South Korea. They described his letter as secret.

An earlier clash had developed over whether a "top secret" document from the Defense Department justified the need to supply Nationalist China with the fighters.

Conte had an amendment pending to eliminate the $54.4 million for the fighters, but a substitute offered by Rep. William S. Broomfield, R-Mich., was adopted which retained the Nationalist China money and added the $50 million for South Korea.

In an apparent reference to Laird, Ford told the House "the same person who wrote about the funds for South Korea communicated with me personally and said the Defense Department supports the request for $54.5 million for Taiwan."

"Isn't this a peculiar way to legislate?" Conte asked. "Why didn't he come to the committee."

"I can't say," Ford replied. "I can only say he communicated with me personally."

The "top secret" document mentioned earlier reportedly involved two letters, both said to be signed by Air Force Lt. Gen. Robert H. Warren, deputy assistant secretary of defense in charge of military sales.

Citizens Patrol In L.A. After Black Panther Raid

LOS ANGELES (AP) - A peacekeeping force of some 300 Negroes Tuesday patrolled a three-square mile area near where a small band of armed Black Panthers held off police for four hours the day before.

Police reported that the predominantly Negro section three miles south of downtown Los Angeles was quiet, as the citizen patrol walked the streets wearing police-issued arm bands.

Three policemen and three others were wounded during a four-hour shooting siege Monday after a police raid on Panther headquarters.

Patrolling officers were ordered by police radio Tuesday to cooperate with the local peacekeepers and to treat them with "respect and courtesy." Williams Elkins, director of a federal program for minority youth in the area, hailed the program as "the first time in the history of Los Angeles the police department has fully cooperated with the community effort."

Assistant Police Chief Robert Houghton, who led the predawn raid and the ensuing four-hour gun battle Monday, said police lost the element of surprise.

Some 40 policemen had gone to the headquarters to serve warrants in connection with alleged possession of illegal arms.

The three officers were wounded, one seriously, after police broke down the headquarters door with a fire department ram and were met by a burst of gunfire.

Four hours later, nine men and two women surrendered after a morning of sporadic shooting and a tear gas barrage by police. Three of them had been wounded.

Moonmen End 21 Day Stay In Isolation

SPACE CENTER, Houston, Tex. (AP) - The Apollo 12 astronauts - earth's second visitors to the moon - will be released from quarantine at 3 p.m. EST Wednesday, officials said Tuesday.

The release of Charles Conrad Jr., Richard F. Gordon Jr. and Alan L. Bean comes about 12 hours before the end of the full planned quarantine period of 21 days. Officials said the early release is based on negative findings of any infection.

Twenty-five other persons in quarantine at the Lunar Receiving Laboratory will be released at the same time. These include a support staff of 14 persons and 11 others exposed accidentally to lunar material.

Officials said blood samples taken from the crew Tuesday indicated the astronauts had no illness from contact with lunar material.

Conrad, Gordon and Bean have been in quarantine since shortly after their Apollo 12 spacecraft landed in the South Pacific Nov. 24.

Nasser Aides In USSR May Seek Soviet Backing

MOSCOW (AP) - Three top aides of Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser arrived Tuesday for secret talks, possibly aimed at winning Kremlin support for Nasser's hardening line against Israel.

After a brief arrival announcement, Soviet officials kept strict silence on the details of the visit by Anwar Sadat, Nasser's deputy and personal representative; War Minister Mohamed Fawzi, and Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad.

They were expected to see Kremlin leaders headed by Communist party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev and Defense Minister Andrei A. Gechko. An Egyptian Embassy spokesman said the Nasser team would be here about four days.

Informants in Moscow and Cairo said Nasser sent his aides in an effort to win Soviet backing for his recent statements that a Middle East political settlement has become impossible and the Arabs must now resort to force.

Observers said the presence of Nasser's war minister Fawzi, in the delegation indicated the Egyptians might also be asking for more Soviet arms. Moscow re-equipped the Egyptian army after its defeat in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Another likely topic, Cairo sources said, was a new U.S. peace proposal which reportedly calls for a separate Israeli-Egyptian settlement before later settlements with Jordan and Syria.

Moscow has kept publicly silent on the proposal, handed to the Soviet ambassador in Washington last month.

Class Officers Objection...

Honor Degree Selection Criteria Gives Students Only Minimal Say

The following is the selection criteria for honorary degree candidates established by the Board of Trustees, which the senior class officers claim does not give then enough say in the final selection of honorary degree candidates.

"Candidates for an honorary degree must be men and women of great distinction. Factors which will be considered by the Trustees in granting honorary degrees include the following:

1) intellectual attainment of a high order in a particular field.

2) outstanding achievement of which the University wishes to indicate its approval.

3) outstanding contribution to the well-being of the University or of the Commonwealth.

The number of honorary degrees awarded will be limited in number in order to emphasize the honor being bestowed.

Nominating procedure;

1) The faculty, thru the President, the Alumni thru their organization, the incoming Senior Class, thru its President, and individual trustees may submit names which must be accompanied by biographical material to the Secretary of the Board of Trustees who will forward the composite biographical lists of all persons recommended to the Executive Committee of the Board prior to June first.

2) The Executive Committee shall screen the candidates and make recommendations to the Board of Trustees at the first regular meeting of the Board held after Commencement each year.

3) Following the screening of nominations for honorary degrees, and after reporting its list of candidates to the Board of Trustees, the Executive Committee shall submit biographical material on all persons considered to all members of the Board of Trustees.

4) The Trustees will be allowed time to consider the nominees between meetings and to vote on them at the next following regular meeting of the Board or, in any case, not later than the meeting held in September.

5) The President of the University will notify all candidates approved, informing them of the character of the award and the date of Commencement.

6) No honorary degree will be awarded IN ABSENTIA or in a place other than a campus of the University, except in extraordinary circumstances."

All Night Parking Ban Is Effective As Of Now

The annual winter season ban on all night parking is now in effect on Amherst streets. Cars parked on any Amherst Street after 2 a.m., are liable to be towed at the owner's expense. The ban runs from Dec. 1 through March 31, 1970. Vehicles also may be towed away if they interfere with snow removal.

According to Town Manager Allen L. Torrey, the contract for towing was awarded to Anderson's Towing Service of Belchertown Road. The towing charge for the 1969-1970 season has increased from $8 to $10.

The town will allow cars to park overnight on three public parking areas: the Amity Street Parking Area, the Lincoln Lot off Main Street, and the Pray Street Parking lot.

Time Of Essence, Says Nixon As Hanoi Hints New Proposal

President Nixon's latest comments on Vietnam make it appear that the most precious commodity in the conflict now is time, and that time is working both for and against each side.

The thrust of North Vietnam's statements and the activities of the National Liberation Front suggest alertness to the problem of time. So does the U.S. rejection of the latest Liberation Front maneuver in Paris.

Nixon expressed belief Monday that pressures on the foe to negotiate a settlement will increase as the "Vetnamization" plan develops. The President, with what seemed a display of confidence, said the war "will come to a conclusion" as the result of the program to replace U. S. forces with Vietnamese.

Hanoi has reacted violently to "Vietnamization." Its main objective, said a Hanoi newspaper in one of many broadsides on the subject, "is to make the puppet troops strong enough to cope with all Communist forces, regardless of the outcome of the Paris conference." That could be the key to Hanoi's worry.

The President dismissed as "frivolous" the Monday statement in Paris by a Front spokesman that if the Americans would agree to troop withdrawal over a six-month period, it would discuss "guarantees for the safety of the withdrawal." There was something new in this. It was not a demand for immediate withdrawal, but for a phased one. It suggested that Hanoi and the Front already feel the pressure of the time element. But so do the Americans.

Six months would be far from enough time to prepare South Vietnamese forces to take over on their own. A U. S. withdrawal over a much longer period, however, could face Hanoi with a prospect of losing all it has fought for in the past decade, or at least having its ambitions blocked for a long time. Thus, the quicker Hanoi can get the Americans out, the better for its chances. The offer of safety guarantees for a six months' withdrawal period almost amounted to a bid for a ceasefire.

Police Are Investigating Accident Involving Coed

By DON LeBLANC
Police Reporter

Police are investigating an accident on Sunderland Road Tuesday in which a hitchhiking University coed may have jumped from the car in which she was riding.

Gail Maloni, a senior living at 100 Meadow St., was brought by ambulance to the infirmary Tuesday afternoon. Dr. R. Gene MacDonald said the girl apparently suffered no serious injuries, but declined to state their extent or how they were incurred.

Amherst Police also refused comment on the incident pending further investigation, but said no one was being held in connection with the event.

Jan.15 Named Induction Day For Mass.Draft

Jan. 15 was named as induction day yesterday for the first group of Massachusetts young men whose names were at the top of last Monday's lottery.

Col Paul F. Feeney, deputy state selective service director, said he has ordered all local draft boards to realign their files in lottery sequence, although he has not received any official word from Washington.

The state's quota for the month will be 253 young men, which means that 25 to 30 men will be inducted each day for the last half of January.

Feeney said he expected all of the calls to be allocated by Dec. 15 and that he was confident the lottery program would run smoothly despite initial confusion over the new system.

G.E. Turned Off By IUE; Files Suit in Strike

NEW YORK (AP) - The General Electric Co. filed an unfair labor practices charge Tuesday against one of the two key unions in a seven-week strike that has crippled production in 135 cities.

The action was directed against the AFL-CIO International Union of Electrical Workers, IUE, representing 88,500 of the 133,000 workers striking the company.

It accused the union of prolonging the 12-union strike, refusal to discuss the company proposal, reinstatement of dropped demands and increasing other demands.

Paul Jennings, president of the 320,000-member IUE, dismissed the GE charges as "absolute hogwash."

The two key unions in the strike-the IUE and the United Electrical Workers UEW, independent- continued to negotiate separately with company representatives. Federal mediators participated in the IUE talks.

The National Labor Relations Board already is processing charges by the unions that GE is engaging in unfair labor practices. The unions charged the company with refusal to bargain and with by-passing union leaders in efforts to deal directly with their members.

In its complaint, GE accused the IUE of having engaged in "a wholesale campaign of coercion and restraint, mass picketing, violence and other illegal tactics and community disruptions."

Mighty Mouse For Israel?

WASHINGTON (AP) - The State Department declined to say Tuesday whether the United States has supplied Israel with Mighty Mouse air-to-ground rockets but insisted that the use of such rockets was not a violation of international law.

The question came up at a State Department news conference after the semi-official Cario newspaper Al Ahram accused the United States of an "international crime" in supplying Israel with the Mighty Mouse aircraft rocket.

Press officer Carl Bartch answered with a "no comment" when asked whether Israel had received the Mighty Mouse, the popular name of a 2.75 inch air-to-ground rocket. It is not customary, Bartch said, to disclose details of arms deliveries to foreign countries.

Asked specifically about the "international crime" charge, Bartch said that irrespective of whether Israel was or was not supplied with such rockets "we do not consider the use of a weapon of the characteristics of the Mighty Mouse would be contrary to international law."

The Mighty Mouse can be used by any type of aircraft and it could carry various warheads, military experts said. Al Ahram charged that Israel is using the Mighty Mouse to hurl metal darts at Egyptian troops.

TV Show, Fast Highlight Moratorium Activities

A panel show on Vietnam will be held on channel 13, cablevision, Friday night at 7:30. The show will be piped into the School of Education gym at UMass. The show is sponsored by the December Moratorium Committee and the Valley Peace Center.

Tiny Tim Warbles Good-bye

NEW YORK (AP) - Happily warbling "Goodbye girls, I'm through," Tiny Tim stood in line Tuesday to apply for a marriage license.

The long-haired singer whose real name is Herbert Buckingham Khaury, was accompanied by his fiancee, Victoria May Budinger, 17, of Haddenfield, N.J.

The couple plans to be married Dec. 17 on Johnny Carson's "Tonight" show.

The singer, 37, told newsmen, "It's the greatest day of my life." Then, at their request, he broke into song.

Miss Budinger's mother also was there, but her father will have to appear Wednesday to give his formal permission since the bride-to-be is under 18.

The couple was asked if they planned to have a family. "Well," Tiny Tim replied, "I don't believe in birth control, so, basically, whatever happens will happen."

The C.C.E.B.S. Program At UMass

By ANDREA LEWIS

For those of you who have noticed, for the past two years there have been a number of Black Students enrolled at the University. They are still few in numbers but five years ago there were more black Faculty members on the teaching staff than were Black Students attending the University. C.C.E.B.S., The Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students has changed that.

For those of you who are asking, "what is CCEBS and how did it get started?": CCEBS was designed to assist Black Students in getting admitted to the University, providing the financial aid and furnishing academic assistance needed to stay in college.

CCEBS was first conceived of three years ago by three of the Black professors. They were Prof. Lawrence Johnson, of the School of Business Administration, Prof. William Wilson, of the Sociology Dept., and Prof. James White, who left before the program got started.

Later they met with other Black Faculty members and together drew up a proposal for the admittance of Black Students into the University.

Today, Prof. William Bromery heads CCEBS.

Cast Turner, Director of the Tutorial Component of CCEBS, along with students, has set up a very effective tutorial program in which the students themselves play an important role. Students play the role of Tutor Counselor in which those students from last year's program act as an assistant to the tutors and instructors. This way if the student missed the assignment in a class and he can't get in touch with his counselor the T.C. is available.

In Sept. 1963 there were one hundred and twenty-five Black freshmen enrolled at the University. This year there are about one hundred and eighty freshmen enrolled, making an overall total of three hundred and five Black students currently enrolled at U-Mass.

Further information about CCEBS can be obtained from John Childs and Dallas Darling in their offices at Mills House.

Afro-Am Offices, which are also located in Mills House, provides a place where Black Students and Black Faculty meet to come to a more in depth understanding of the problems in the communities.

Black Students have instituted such projects as Dorchester County S.C. Food Drive along with other organizations and have also set up Tutorial Workshops in Riverview, Springfield to aid these communities.

Mike Thewell, co-ordinator of Afro-American studies, speaks to students on the role of black studies on the U. Mass. campus.

Poverty In USA

Poverty is something that we often hear about today, but it is also a state that very few of us ever experience. We hear a lot about people starving all over the world, in India, Biafara, and China; but we hear very little about the many thousands of people who are literally starving to death right here in our own territorial United States.

Of course you wouldn't expect to hear very much about the starving people in America because we, of course have to keep up our image of perfection if all of those little "foreign" countries are to look to us for intervention.

We have a genuine chance this Christmas season to do something for some "non-existant" starving people here in our own country. Right down in Dorchester County, South Carolina are some 10,000 people who are earning less than what the federal government terms is a minimum subsistance level.

These people, victims of racists, L. Mendle Rivers and Strom Thurmond who represent their state, are starving because according to people such as this, black people can't starve because black people aren't human beings. The Rivers and the Thurmonds who represent people such as these are responsible for the deaths of countless poor and helpless people. And the pace goes on.

The people of Dorchester County are lucky in a way though, because they have someone who is fighting, one of their own who is fighting desperately to save her people from injustice and death. Mrs. Victoria DeLee has worked tirelessly for years often braving grave personal injury to help her people LIVE. Her job is pretty lonely. With just about everybody against you; its bound to get lonely.

Mrs. DeLee is appealing to people all over the country to help her in her struggle to free her people from starvation and oppression. Money, food, clothing is what is needed at present in her fight to independance.

Our Govt Leaders

As I study the separate, supposedly representative, branches of the United States government, I begin to wonder if there is in this country, at this very moment a branch of government, an individual of a branch of government, or any political figure that truly speaks for the American people?

Further, I wonder why the American government seems invisible, to the extent of providing little leadership. Who are the well-known but silent majority's spokesmen?

In asking my self these questions, I am convinced that the people of America lack leadership and that at least one branch of government, if not all, must show more leadership if they wish to remain viable.

Congress seems the most likely governmental branch to exert leadership. Congressmen are direct representatives of the people, being elected every two or six years.

But the seniority rule of the Congressional power structure has rendered the American legislature out-of-date and out of touch with the American people.

Because Congress has changed rule by representative of the electorate to rule by the committee power chairman, the American people have become disappointed with Congress' ability to understand twentieth century needs.

Especially in the area of foreign policy, Congress has continued to go along with the Presidency. Since Congress has abdicated its power in the important matter of formulating foreign policy to the Presidency, the American people are forced to turn to the Presidency for leadership.

President Richard M. Nixon must assume the awesome responsibility of being America's current leader and spokesman. So far, President Nixon's only decisive leadership has been in reaffirming the United States position in Vietnam and in trying to nominate Judge Clement Haynsworth to the Supreme Court.

But was Nixon speaking for the Nation in exerting this leadership. Perhaps in the case of Vietnam, it depends what Gallup Poll you read.

No, the people of the United States are still longing for creative leadership, the leadership of speaking for and with the people.

There is still time for President Nixon to assert himself and to become a spokesman of the people.

If not, the silent majority will continue to be well-known, but silent.

Campus Comment

On MDC Review

To the Editor;

It is unfortunate that the man behind the impressive title "Metawampe Staff Great One," who reviewed last Sunday's rock concert in the Cage, couldn't have kept his head together in his exuberance and have pointed out some rather serious flaws in the concert. Apart from a rather unfortunate comparison of the performing styles of Ian Anderson and Mick Jagger, Staff Great One failed to say anything about the sound system that the Sendoff crew provided for the three groups. Outside of several splendid attempts at trying to electrocute both Anderson and Johnny Winter, the P.A. had another great virtue - no one could hear anything that was being sung. Edgar and Spooky Tooth's set was for all practical purposes completely destroyed by the incompetence of our boys running the P. A. Jethro Tull's manager was about to close their performance and leave in disgust. I don't think it is much to ask of Sendoff or any other future promoter to rent some respectable P.A. eqipment for these concerts. It doesn't cost that much. If you don't, then don't be surprised, Metawampe, if you have seen the last of the kind of music you appear to be freaking out over. The word does get around about how one treats performers. This campus has few enough performances of The Music without having to insult everyone who comes here with a worthless P. A. and an equally worthless job of production.

Libe Support

To the Editor,

Nick Costa has expressed eloquently the problems of students using the University Library. Since the Governor and the Legislature are generally responsive to the wishes of the voters an implication of this year's cutback in the Library budget is that our state officials do not believe that there is much support for the University Library throughout the state. If many University students and their families would let their representatives know that adequate funds for library books every year are important to them, the voice of the University would be greatly strengthened. If you feel as Mr. Costa does, you can help by writing the Governor, writing and seeing your state senators and representatives, and asking your family to do the same.

In the meantime, you can reduce your inconveniences somewhat by making the most effective use of available library services. (1) When a book is not on the shelf, ASK FOR IT at the Circulation Desk; it may be on Reserve or ready to be re-shelved, due back the next day or recallable at once from the person who has it. (2) When stumped, ASK A REFERENCE LIBRARIAN for help; the information you need may be in other sources; for advanced students we may be able to borrow from another library. (3) Find out, from the staff and the Library Handbook (available at the Reference Desk), the full range of Library services. (For example, the bookstacks continue to be open till midnight; after 10 p.m. the Reserve Desk charges out books from the general stacks.) In many cases the staff can meet your needs, but only if you communicate with them. The Library has 22 fewer staff members this year because of the budget, but the remaining staff, though overworked, are there for one reason: to serve you.

Christmas Peace

Silent night,
Holy night.
Peace tonight?
Wouldn't it be nice?
Christmas is here,
But where is Christ?

In Song My weeping?
In D. C. working?
Or is he sleeping?
Hurt and disgusted.
One place he's not,
Is in our hearts.

Silent night,
Holy night.
Open your eyes,
And all you see
Is war and fear and lottery.

Christmas is here;
Snow blankets the fear.
Happiness reigns,
And they cease the fire.
But tomorrow we still hear
The screams of pain.

JAMIE LEBLANC

If you're having trouble finding the Christmas spirit in between all the exams and papers, the University Band can help tonight at 7:30 in the Student Union.

UMass Band Presents XMas Concert Tonight

The University of Massachusetts Concert Band will give its first Christmas Concert Wednesday, Dec. 10, at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Conducted by Larry Weed, assistant director of bands and low brass instructor at the University, the Concert Band will offer a widely diversified program. The concert will open with Movement I of "Trittico" by Vaclav Nelhybel and the Finale from "Death and Transfiguration" by Richard Strauss.

In a lighter vein is Ralph Hermann's "Kiddie Ballet" and music from Lerner and Loewe's "My Fair Lady." "Christmas March" by Goldman and Leroy Anderson's "A Christmas Festival" are in the holiday mood. "American Salute" by Morton Gould will round out the program.

The performance will establish the Concert Band's intention of holding Christmas concerts on an annual basis. The program is open to the public without charge, and the University community is invited to attend.

Israel Hits Egypt Post Along Suez

(AP) - Israeli planes struck at Egyptian positions on the Suez Canal Tuesday and Cairo asserted one of Israel's swift U.S.-made F4 Phantom jets was shot down in a dogfight.

A communique distributed in Cairo said eight Egyptian Soviet-made MIG 21s engaged eight Phantoms over the southern end of the waterway and the Phantom fell in flames near Suez. Egypt said all its planes returned to base.

The Israeli military command reported its planes raided Egyptian military positions along the central part of the canal and all returned safely.

Decision Due Today On Kopechne Autopsy

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) - A Pennsylvania judge will announce today whether he will permit the body of Mary Jo Kopechne to be exhumed for an autopsy.

Judge Bernard C. Brominski of Luzerne County Common Pleas Court said yesterday he will disclose his decision at 9:30 a.m. He has been studying the matter for seven weeks.

If Brominski orders exhumation, the parents of Mary Jo are expected to appeal his decision immediately to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

Miss Kopechne died July 18 when a car driven by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., plunged off a bridge on Chappaquiddick Island off the Massachusetts coast.

A Massachusetts inquest into her death has been delayed pending outcome of the autopsy request.

Judge James A. Boyle, who is to preside over the inquest in Edgartown, Mass., has refused to set a new date for the inquest, originally scheduled to begin Sept. 3, until Brominski disposes of the autopsy matter.

"An autopsy would be just like another funeral to us," Joseph Kopechne tearfully told Judge Brominski at a Oct. 21 hearing on the exhumation request.

The Massachusetts Supreme Court has ordered the inquest closed to the public and news media.

Adaptation of "Animal Farm" Will Be Performed At Smith

NORTHAMPTON — An experiment in improvisational acting based on George Orwell's satirical commentary on revolution, "Animal Farm," will be performed at Smith College.

The college's theatre and speech department will offer the production in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre of the new Center for the Performing Arts. Performances will be at 7:30 and 10 p.m. December 12 - 15 and at 8:30 p.m. December 16.

Acting improvisations based on studies of farm animals are being combined with dialogue from the 1945 novel to create a scenario on revolution. The novel gives barnyard animals roles as insurrectionists. The cast includes 11 Amherst College and UMass men and Smith graduate and undergraduate students. Smith students have undertaken the project as their semester's work in the advanced acting class of Stephen Macht of the college's faculty.

Through a group interpretation of the text by the whole cast, the play will "represent a completed action which explores current political, social, religious and economic problems that plague this particular group of students," says Macht.

To further add to the importance of the actors, costumes, lighting, props and the set itself will focus on the actors. A limitation of only 100 persons in the audience for each performance will further emphasize the actors. They "will be seen as through a microscope", notes Macht.

He feels that the audience "should include any and all people who have ideas about revolution. They will be called upon to witness the performance in a highly artificial, creative environment."

Discussions of the play's form and content by the actors and their director will be held December 16 following the performance. The discussion will take place in the Green Room of the performing arts center.

Tickets are now on sale weekdays from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and an hour before each performance at the Center box office.

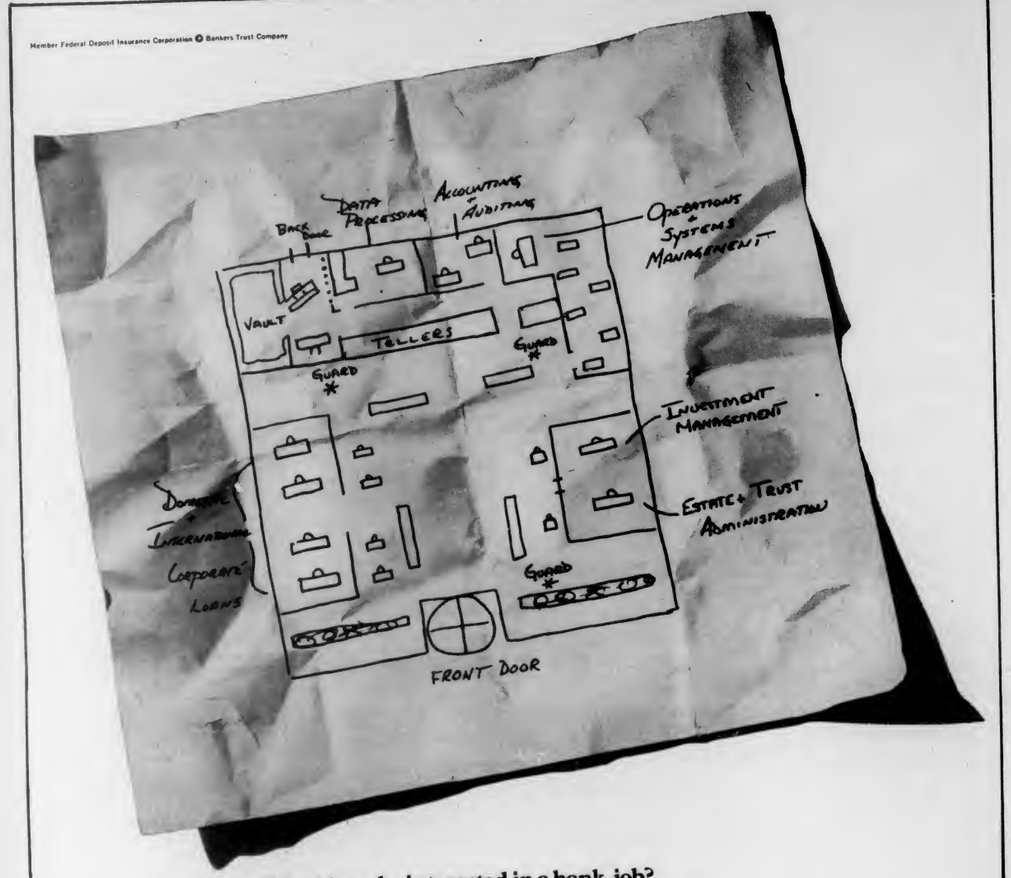
Avoid The End Of Semester Rush! Do Your Term Paper Today.



Pssst! Would you be interested in a bank-job?

It's not a simple little caper.

And it's going to take the right people to make it work.

Bankers Trust has grown faster than any of the 10 largest commercial banks in the country. We now rank seventh in size, and we want to rank sixth, then fifth, and so on.

But we want to do this without becoming a rigid corporate monster.

So we need people who can step right in and contribute to the areas that concern us.

Areas like metropolitan, national and international banking; the management of personal and corporate investments; the economic problems of the minorities, and the growing crisis in the cities.

(What your major is isn't important. What you can do with it is.)

Which brings us to the way we feel about you, and the way we feel about ourselves.

Today, the old cliché about uncommitted youth is shattered. And in the pieces lay the ruins of another: the one about all bankers being stuffy.

Bankers Trust is not alone in the belief that this is the brightest generation yet.

We're anxious to meet you.

But just as important, we're anxious for you to meet us.

We might have just the plan you're looking for.

You'll find Post-Graduate work at Bankers Trust.

Agri.Society Meeting Runs Through Dec.12; Six Present Papers

Six members of the faculty of the department of agricultural engineering, at UMass, are scheduled to present technical papers resulting from research work carried out with the support of the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station during the four day 1969 Winter Meeting of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers Dec. 9 - 12 at the Sherman House in Chicago.

Dr. J. T. Clayton, professor and department head, will present a paper on the "Flexural Behavior of a Structural Sandwich: Vertical Deflection and Distribution of Shear Stresses and Strains."

Dr. J. W. Zahradnik, professor of biological process engineering, will present a paper on "In-Stack Hydrocooling for Apples." Dr. L. F. Whitney, associate professor, will present "Mechanisms for Planting Conifer Seeds in Spots." Assistant professor E. A. Johnson will present a paper on the "Effects of Electromagnetic Radiation on the American Cockroach." Dr. C. S. Chen, assistant professor, will present a theoretical paper on "Equilibrium Moisture Curves for Biological Materials." S. W. Fletcher, instructor, will present a paper on "The Mechanical Behavior of Processed Apples."

Also, Ashfaq Husain, graduate assistant, will report on his work on the "Viscoelastic Behavior of Rough Rice."

Socialist League Meeting Tonight

The UMass chapter of the Young People's Socialist League (YPSL) will hold its second membership meeting on Wednesday, December 10th, at 8:00 p.m. in Washington Lower Lounge.

The question of ROTC on campus, the drive to aid Dorchester County, and a local campaign to boycott GE goods, will be discussed.

All members are urged to attend. Interested students, faculty, and staff members are welcome.

"Danton's Death" Starts Thursday

DANTON'S DEATH by Georg Buechner will be produced by UMass Theatre, December 11 - 14. Bound to time by its tale of the French Revolution gone nightmare, Danton's Death nevertheless slips the confines of datedness and speaks to today of revolution. Buechner does not write of blacks and whites, but rather explores the grayness of characters creating history. He strips away the purity of motives attributed to leaders of great causes to show the bony skeletons of real men - sometimes ramrod certain of rightness, often vain and voluptuous.

But behind his tale of men involved in actions, he hangs an aura of the beyond that perhaps creates these men and actions. He speaks by implication of the meaning beyond the meaning into mirroring depths. Hoffman has said, ". . . man is pictured as a living puppet, helplessly aware of the strings that move him, finding in the actions imposed on him a vision of distant unknown forces, at best experiencing the richness of existence while acknowledging his status as a clown in the circus of the gods."

In short Buechner, doomed radical himself, has created a work of man fighting himself and his world into no resolution because a puppet has no answers.

Tickets are on sale in the Box Office, 545-2579.

Venture: Use a love call to count bacteria.

The lampyridae beetle family. Delight of small boys. Biological light bulb. And prime source of raw material for another Du Pont innovation.

Luciferase, an enzymatic protein with intriguing properties, obtainable only from fireflies. Luciferin, an organic molecule also found in fireflies, but synthesizable. Adenosine triphosphate (ATP), a common energy-yielding substance found in all living cells.

Those are the three main ingredients in lampyridae's love light. And because ATP is common to all living cells, university researchers discovered they could produce an artificial glow by mixing luciferin and luciferase wherever life is present.

Noting that phenomenon, Du Pont scientists and engineers went on to develop it into a practical analytical system. Correlating the intensity of the artificial "glow" with the amount of ATP present in bacteria, they designed a means of measuring the reaction.

The result is the luminescence biometer—the first really basic improvement in bacteria-counting methods since the time of Louis Pasteur. Rather than waiting days for a culture to demonstrate growth density, a doctor or technician can now get a digital readout of bacteria concentration in a matter of minutes.

Other potentially lifesaving uses for the biometer are being suggested every day—such as diagnosing metabolic rates, enzyme deficiencies and nerve damage.

Innovation—applying the known to discover the unknown, inventing new materials and putting them to work, using research and engineering to create the ideas and products of the future—this is the venture Du Pont people are engaged in.

You can become one of them, and advance professionally in your chosen field. See your Du Pont Recruiter. Or send us the coupon.

Rhody Rams Redmen, 77-73, In Overtime

UMass Loses Late Lead, URI Too Tough At End

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

A desperate UMass last half comeback went down the drain in a frustrating overtime period as the Redmen dropped their first contest of the young season, 77-73, to a rugged physical Rhode Island team, before another turn away Curry Hicks throng. UMass is now 2-1 and 1-1 in the Yankee Conference while the Rams are 3-1 and in control of the Conference lead with a 2-0 mark.

Actually the Redmen had no one to blame but themselves after climbing back into things. UMass was down by as much as six points with under four minutes to play. But a combination of Rhode Island fouls, and clutch down the stretch shooting by Ray Ellerbrook and Ken Mathias brought them back.

Down 65-59, Julius Erving, who was "held" to 20 points and 14 rebounds, canned three free throws and Mathias one foul answered by a free throw by Rhody. Then Mathias hit a jumper, came down to steal a Ram pass and drove for a score to give UMass their first lead since 2:32 of the first half.

After John Fultz brought the Rams back into the lead, Ellerbrook who had shots repeatedly blocked and still kept coming back, canned two straight jumpers and the Redmen led by three, 71-68 with 1:15 left.

It was then that UMass lost chances to ice the contest. Ellerbrook missed the first of a one-and-one situation that could have put the Redmen up by four with 45 seconds left. Then after Rhody was called for traveling, UMass had 39 seconds to kill for the win. However an errant pass gave the Rams the ball and with eight seconds left Nate Adger canned a short jumper for the Rams and things were all tied up. A desperate John Betancourt 35 footer at the buzzer hit the rim and things were in overtime.

Whatever momentum UMass built up by a violent ritous crowd and the comeback, was non-existent in the five minute extra period. UMass did not score until ten seconds were left in the game when the issue was long since resolved. Adger, Dwight Tolliver and Phil Hickson plus a cold freezing offense took the Rams to a big victory.

It was nip and tuck throughout the first half, with Rhode Island having the upper hand most of the way.

Rhode Island scored five straight at the outset only to be quickly answered by five Redman markers, three by Mathias and two from Ellerbrook. Erving and English traded hoops for a few minutes until Fultz, an All-East and All Conference pick a year ago, and headed that way again, got hot to lead the Rams to a seven point, 27-20 lead midway in the half.

Erving and Ellerbrook brought the Redmen closer at 27-25. After Rhode Island leads fluctuated between five and three points for a time, Dennis Chapman led a quick rush that gave UMass a 39-38 lead.

However, a Rhode Island substitute, Mike Beale, canned two jumpers to help the Rams to their four-point, 44-40 halftime lead.

It was the same type of a second half. Rhode Island would take a lead because of cold shooting Redmen and the Ram dominance of the boards, and then someone would lead UMass back close.

The largest lead of the game came at 12:29 of the second half as Rhode Island jumped ahead 58-50. Then Mathias, Ellerbrook and company began their comeback that would go all for naught in the end.

Fultz led all scorers with 26 points and also had 15 rebounds. He was helped by English with 17 points and Tolliver with 10.

Erving's 20 led UMass, but Ellerbrook with 18 and Mathias with 16 were right behind in the balanced attack. Chapman chipped in with 10 points.

REDMAN RANTINGS - UMass shot 45% from the field while Rhode Island was 49%. . .The foul shooting was atrocious on both sides with UMass shooting 70% from the charity stripe and Rhode Island 38%. . .Rebounding tells a big story as the Rams outrebounded the Redmen 45-35. . . English fouled out with three minutes to go while Fultz and Hickson each had four fouls down the stretch but neither got the big fifth one. . . Mathias picked up his fourth with 10:02 remaining and fouled out with minutes to go in regulation. . . . A disappointed but not discouraged UMass coach Jack Leaman praised the Rams saying "They are a real good ballclub and showed good maturity". . . .Leaman termed the game "a physical game. It got so rugged under there, I wouldn't want to be in there". . . .The coach termed the shooting "either real good or awful" but added about his charges, "We'll be back and we are gonna win a lot of games. The kids had chances to quit and never did. It wasn't one of their best games, but they never died. We'll be back."

Little Redmen Fall Too, 57-50

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Staff Reporter

Playing on even terms with what appeared to be a very talent Rhode Island frosh quintet for most of the game, the Little Redmen fell to the Rams, 57-50. The frosh were plagued mostly by a tough URI defense and their own lack of rebounding.

UMass was consistently unable to work the ball around for good shots and when they did they couldn't make their shots consistently. The loss dropped the frosh's record to 1-2.

Paced by Jose Paris, who scored their first four field goals and finished with 25 points, the Rams broke on top. The Little Redmen tied the score at four apiece, however, on a basket by Mike Polakoff and charity tosses by Chuck Olsen and Mike McSharry. URI then ran off seven straight points on two hoops by Paris and a basket and free throw by Gerry Gimelstob.

They extended this lead to 15-5 with 8:14 remaining in the half as Steve Rowell made two free throws and Jim Rake hit a jumper while UMass could only counter with a charity throw by Olsen. But the frosh kept slipping away and with only 4:12 left in the half had closed the gap to 24-22.

The leader in this surge was Polakoff as he suddenly got hot and hit three straight baskets. They finally tied it up with 1:59 left as Polakoff once again scored after hoops by Olsen and Kalbfell to knot the score at 28. Rake then scored four points against an Olsen hoop for the Little Redmen to make the score 32-30 at halftime.

Stars of the first half were Polakoff with twelve points and Olsen with eight. Paris countered for Rhode Island with fourteen.

The second half proved to be more of the same as UMass was still hurt by its inability to penetrate the URI defense. UMass fell behind by five, 38-33, but Polakoff and Chuck Peters came back with scores for the Redmen and the was closed to one with 14:28 remaining.

The lead see-sawed back and forth and with 6:22 left URI took the lead for good when Gimelstob made a lay-up to put the Rams out in front, 48-45. Rowell then made two straight hoops to build the lead to six, 52-46, with only 3:07 remaining.

Olsen made two baskets for the Little Redmen but Paris came back with one for Rhode Island and they still led, 54-50, with only 2:51 left. UMass was then forced to foul, giving Paris one free throw and John Morley two, while the Little Redmen were called for two offensive fouls, making the final score 57-50.

It was a good effort by UMass but they could never quite take control of the game and were constantly fighting from behind. Paris made many crucial hoops for his team as his 25 points of his teams 57 would indicate. Though standing only 6'1", he showed excellent ball-handling ability and fine inside moves and outside shooting ability.

Taking on an untested Amherst squad tonight, the UMass wrestling team hits the mats in an important dual for both squads. The action will start at 8:00 p.m. in the Auxiliary Gym of Boyden. The freshmen meet scheduled for 6:30 has been cancelled as the Jeffs are using some of their frosh on the varsity and a full team cannot be suited up.

The Redmen are excited over two lop-sided victories over the weekend. However, Coach Barr has warned his team that the opposition was rather weak and that overconfidence is a real danger. The Lord Jeffs hold a commanding lead in their overall series dating back to the middle 1950's. The UMass wrestlers have only beaten the Jeffs three times, two of those three coming in the last two years. Last year the Redmen had one of their finest hours as they triumphed 44-5.

George Zguris, last year's NEIWA champion, is the newly elected captain of the Redmen and he will be leading the team from the heavyweight division.

Several lineup changes may strengthen the Redmen, especially in the middle heavies where the only points have been surrendered thus far. Dave Reynolds, a sophomore replaces Rick Tyma at 126 pounds. Tom Young is finally back in condition after an intramural injry and will take over the 167-pound class. Kent Mignocchi has taken over the 177-pound division, having moved up from the 167-pound spot. The rest of the lineup Nick Didomenico at 118 is 2-0 with two pins; Phil Davis is at 134 with a pin and a decision; Sheldon Goldberg is at 142 with two decisions; Clay Jester is at 150 with two pins; Jim Godkin is at 158 with the two fastest pins of both dual meets last week; Tim Perkins is at 190 with one pin, and one decision loss; and George Zguris is at heavyweight with two pins.

The two outstanding Jeff wrestlers are D. Case at 167, and G. Sklaver at 190. Both were freshmen NEIWA champions last year, and Young and Perkins will be hard pressed to stay with them.

Stockbridge Wins Second Straight

Stockbridge basketball demonstrated some real ability Monday as they came from behind to beat Hopkin's Academy, 59-38, making their record 2-0. Using only seven players, the Shorthorns held their opponents scoreless well into the third quarter. SDS To Picket GE at Whitmore, Union Leader Condemns Violence

By Mark Silverman
Asst. Managing Editor

SDS will stage a "non-obstructive" demonstration inside of Whitmore this afternoon to protest the presence of a General Electric recruiter on campus this week.

At their meeting last night, SDS members agreed that the demonstration would be non-obstructive, "just because of tactical reason," and not because of a warning which came yesterday in the form of a letter from the President of one of the two striking G.E. unions.

Specifically, the students plan to meet at 9:00 in the Student Union to pass out leaflets in order to gain campus support. The actual demonstration, in the form of picketing the first floor of Whitmore, will begin at 1:00 p.m. and will "not interfere with students meeting with recruiters."

But spokesmen for the group indicate that if campus support for the demonstration grows, "more militant tactics" may be used either late tomorrow or on Friday.

Paul Jennings, president of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers issued a statement early yesterday, saying that striking workers were grateful for student support, but that violent protests could not help the strikers.

The concensus of the 20 students at last night's SDS meeting was that "it is incredible for a union president to speak out against violent action" and Jenning's statement is a direct attack upon the rank and file strikers who have used militant action themselves.

Students at the meeting condemned Jennings for his statement, and said that they felt the recruiters have "no place on campus because they are scabs (strike breakers)."

They explained that the demonstration would start out peacefully because "we are unsure of our tactical strength, not because of Jennings statement."

Earlier in the day, a petition carrying the signature of 408 students and faculty members asked the administration to stop the recruitment meetings today and tomorrow. And later in the day yesterday, the administration released a statement recognizing the seriousness of the petition signers' concerns, but stating "The University intends to permit those students to exercise their rights," in seeing the recruiters.

The text of both the petition and the administration's reply follows:

"We, students and faculty of the University of Massachusetts, feel that the presence of GE recruiters on this campus is harmful to the interests of workers now striking against GE.

"We support the strike against GE as it is in the interest of all of us.

"THEREFORE, WE DEMAND THAT THE UNIVERSITY RESCIND ITS OFFER TO THE GE BOSSES TO RECRUIT ON THIS CAMPUS.

"Since the GE bosses have consistently flouted and attacked the civil rights of their workers, it is out of the question whether or not this petition threatens the civil rights of the recruiter or those who wish to see him. This petition attacks the right of GE to expand and amplify its punishment of striking workers by carrying out its business as usual, unresisted by students and faculty. Students and faculty should prevent this University Administration from abetting the punishment of workers for their action against GE - an action in the interest of us all."

The administration's response to this demand is as follows:

1. To date, 136 students have made arrangements to meet with GE recruiters December 11 and 12. The University has a commitment to allow these students to engage in this legitimate activity. Whether or not "the GE bosses have consistently flouted and attacked the civil rights of their workers," the rights of these students are unaffected, and the University intends to permit those students to exercise their rights.

2. The issues raised by the petitioners are serious, and their concern is legitimate. It is right that the University should respond to this concern. We have therefore invited the International Union of Electrical Workers to send a representative to the campus tomorrow and Friday, and the Union has agreed to send such a representative. He will be given an opportunity to talk with the students, including those who visit the GE recruiters and present the Union's side of this conflict.

Senate Elects Elters To Vice-Presidency

Glen Elters, former Student Senate Finance Committee chairman was elected to the vice-presidency, filling the vacancy created by Bruce Balboni's recent resignation, at last night's Senate meeting.

Elters defeated Jim Albert, Senate Budget Committee chairman by a 40-33 margin, after much heated debate on the qualifications and role of the vice-president. The debate began to take on the appearance of an old-fashioned personality contest before the question was called.

The major points of Elters' pre-election speech were "revitalizing the structure of the senate," analyzing the entire committee system with change quickly ensuing, and eliminating the "stop-gap" efforts which the senate has made in past committee changes. In speaking of former President Balboni, Elters claimed that the administrative role which should have been played by the president constantly fell upon then vice-president Cindi Olken, creating a void in the duties of the V.P. He promised to fill this void.

Commencement Task Force Seeks More Budget and Policy Power

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

The Commencement Task Force yesterday passed unanimously a resolution calling for future commencement budgets to be worked on and approved by the Task Force before seniors are taxed for their graduation fee. This resolution would go into effect for the class of 1971 and thereafter; as the present senior class budget as been proposed and commencement fee already paid.

Senior class president, Dave Veale called for the resolution after University Secretary Robert McCartney stated that every year since 1946 the University has been absorbing "hidden" costs and that each budget "pretty much duplicates itself." John Burke of the Secretary's office also stated that "informally there has been a sort of budget procedure from past years."

Veale was not satisfied and declared that "The administration has taxed us and not presented a budget to us. We want the Task Force to plan, approve and present a budget before we are taxed."

Sec. McCartney replied that the question of budget "never came up before because no one (on Commencement Task Force) knew how it worked."

Veale made another motion attempt to allow for the Task Force to ask the Exec. Committee of the Board to raise or lower the present $10 graduation fee based on projected budget figures. This was dropped after a consensus of opinion was reached that such a procedure might cause the Board to shift some of the present hidden costs already absorbed by the University and still allow them to come up with the $10 fee.

In addition to budget matters yesterday's meeting served primarily as a "clearing-up" one according to senior class officer Ina Goldstein.

Asked by Sec. McCartney to explain why he referred to the Commencement Task Force's present role in graduation planning as "tokenism" (in Wednesday's DAILY COLLEGIAN) Veale stated, "all major decisions have been made previously and only minor ones left for the Task Force to decide. We want the Task Force to do more and not have the decisions made prior to our first meeting."

The Commencement Task Force's present role was criticized as being too "mechanical," concerned with such things as commencement programs, invitations, caps and gowns rather than honorary degrees and speakers as its members would like. Sec. Mc Cartney agreed saying that the Task Force's role was "operational" rather than of policy and one of "handling the mechanics of graduation" and that as commencements develop fewer and fewer problems every year, graduation ceremonies will become almost "automatic" and the Task Force may not have to meet at all.

Senior Dick Kline said that this is what the Task Force wants to avoid, making the commencements mechanical and automatic and "able to make the decisions ourselves."

McCartney told the Task Force members that "Whatever happens on graduation day is the outcome of the meeting of the minds of Commencement Task Force. If you want to get involved in anything you are perfectly free to do it."

The Task Force also called for more student representation on its subcommittees.

After the meeting adjourned Veale stated that while the meeting had been helpful in discussing the clearning up certain misunderstandings about the role of the Task Force as well as the important budget action undertaken, "I don't see any substantive role in commencement for the Commencement Task Force due to the present set up. It's still tokenism to an extent."

UNH Sit-in Protests GE Campus Recruiters

DURHAM, N.H. (AP) - University of New Hampshire officials warned demonstrators trying to halt interviews by General Electric Co. recruiters Wednesday that they would face disciplinary action if they continued a sit-in at a university building.

The interviews were shifted to another building after about 15 students spent the night in Huddleston Hall, where the interviews began Tuesday.

A spokesman for the Students for a Democratic Society said the demonstrators planned to end their sit-in with a rally late Wednesday. About 50 pickets greeted the GE recruiters Tuesday, preventing them from entering the building until student body president Brad Cook and university officials escorted them inside.

The students said they were supporting workers in the current GE strike.

The demonstrators ignored an administration warning to terminate the protest and spent the night in the building.

Senate Coffee Hour

The Public Relations Committee of the Student Senate will present a coffee hour this afternoon from 4:30 to 6:00 in the Colonial Lounge. This week the Student Senate officers will be present.

Since a new vice-president was elected last night, it will be the first chance for students to meet and talk with him, and also the first chance for many to meet the other senate officers.

The coffee hour is free and open to the public.

Spiro Knocks Students

BALTIMORE (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew suggested Wednesday encouraging increasing numbers of young people to attend college may compound social antagoaisms between those who do and those who don't have higher education.

He also said, in a speech to the Theodore Spiro Agnew Scholarship Fund Dinner here honoring his father, that confining education to a specified period of life has the effect of "consigning a huge group of our young citizens to an academic limbo totally alien to their human instincts" and has "created a disenfranchised social class called youth."

Noting that 40 per cent of the nation's young people now attend college, Agnew questioned whether encouraging increasing numbers to do so "benefits the lower half of the intelligence scale."

The vice president, himself a law school graduate, also said the federal government should reevaluate whether such policies as restrictive apprenticeship programs, civil service age requirements and voting age limits have the effect of protracting dependence, and whether programs such as the Peace Corps and VISTA discriminate against the working young.

Senate Supports Boston Location For New University President

By JOHN J. DUBOIS
Senate Reporter

The Student Senate last night challenged the contentions of Executive Councilor Fontana (R-Spfld.) concerning the proposed relocation of the University President. Earlier this week, Mr. Fontana called upon the Governor to intervene with the Board of Trustees to cause them to reconsider and reverse their decision to relocate the President in Boston.

He argued that such a relocation would cause the University to become Boston-oriented, and would as well isolate the President from contact with the Amherst student body.

Bill S111, passed by an overwhelming voice vote, rejects specifically both contentions, and affirms that in his new role as chief public relations officer of the University, "it is more vital... that he (the President) be readily accessible to the news media and the legislature than to the students of this campus."

The bill notes that under the planned reorganization, it is wit. the Amherst Chancellor (a post yet to be created or filled), and through him to the Board, that there must be student contact.

The bill calls upon Governor Sargent to "support the Trustee decision on the relocation of the University President," and upon the Board of Trustees "to reaffirm its decision on this matter."

It is expected that the opposition of the Amherst student government to Mr. Fontana's assertion of what he perceives to be the student interests will have an adverse effect upon Mr. Fontana's attempts to convince the Governor to intervene. The Student Senate has a history of vigorous assertion of student interests, even to the point of oversensitivity, and their failure to agree that student interests are being infringed upon by the Trustee action should seriously undermine Mr. Fontana's case.

In other action, the Senate approved a room deposit system. A question that aroused considerable controversy last year when the administration tried to impose a system without prior consultation with the student government, the room deposit is designed to correct the planning difficulties engendered by students who do not return to school, but do not notify the University of their intention, thus creating an inability to accurately plan on housing for the coming year.

The proposal provides for a $50 deposit (refundable upon graduation or sufficient advance notification of intent to withdraw) from each undergraduate currently enrolled who plans to live in a residence hall. Incoming classes will be charged $100.

The money is due on June 15 for first and November 15 for second semester. The money is paid only once, and is forfeited if the student fails to notify the housing office of his intent not to occupy a room for which he had previously signed up. Through this system, the Housing office will have an accurate estimate of the number of students who will return, and it is hoped that they will be able to avoid unnecessary tripling.

Judge Denies Autopsy, Dinis Will Not Appeal

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., (AP) - Dist. Atty. Edmund Dinis will abide by the decision of a Pennsylvania judge denying his request for an autopsy on the body of Miss Mary Jo Kopechne, an aide said Wednesday.

The district attorney "has no intention at this time of appealing," said the aide, who asked not to be identified.

The decision was handed down in Common Pleas Court in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Wednesday by Judge Bernard Brominski. Dinis had asked for the autopsy on the grounds that it was essential to the inquest he has ordered into Miss Kopechne's death.

That decision and Dinis' apparent acceptance of it clears the way for the inquest, which is to be held in District Court in Edgartown before Judge James A. Boyle.

Boyle recently declined to set a date for the proceeding until after Brominski's autopsy ruling.

Sources close to Boyle indicated that Dinis still would have to declare formally that he has no plans to appeal before Boyle will proceed with the inquest.

Dinis' only public reaction to Brominski's ruling Wednesday was a hurried "no comment."

MafiaControls IRSEmployees InNewJersey

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) - The Mafia has gained control of a "large group" of Internal Revenue Service employees in one state, U. S. Atty. Gen. John Mitchell said Wednesday. He said indictments expected in the case within 10 days will "break up the largest gambling syndicate in history."

"Organized crime can only exist where it is protected by government at some level," Mitchell told a convention of the Investment Bankers Association of America. "In the state involved, a large group of IRS people have been found to be controlled by the Mafia."

The nation's highest legal officer refused to identify the state, but the Newark News said federal investigations pointed to New Jersey as the strongest possibility.

"The investigations were conducted by the Justice Department, FBI, IRS, Labor Department and the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC)," Mitchell told the bankers.

Mitchell said the probe has been aimed at Mafia families in the area.

The attorney general spoke shortly after Mayor Hugh J. Addonizio testified in Newark that he knows reputed Cosa Nostra figure Anthony "Tony Boy" Biolardo. The answer came as the mayor, under subpoena in a federal grand jury probe, took the witness stand to explain to U. S. Dist. Court Judge Robert Shaw in Newark why he had invoked the Fifth Amendment before a grand jury Tuesday.

The mayor, all nine Newark councilmen, a Municipal Court judge and several other city officials were subpoenaed to testify Tuesday. Two reputed Mafia figures also were subpoenaed but failed to appear.

Springfield College Day of Concern

Roy Innis On Racism

"The movement has seen escalation on both sides," the National Director of CORE, Roy Innis said yesterday, "and a coordinated conspiracy has been revealed in the attacks by police against the Black Panthers."

Innis spoke at a symposium on Racism at the Springfield College Field House as part of the Student Council sponsored "Day of Concern."

Presenting two views of racism not popularly accepted, Innis centered his opening remarks on the subtle type of automatic, unconscious racism that manifests itself in the negative judgments made about Blacks by the young and innocent as well as the old. The more overt type is demonstrated, according to Innis, in the "assassination of 28 Black Panthers in the past two years." He called this "the first phase of a genocide campaign."

"Twenty-eight Mafia leaders haven't been killed by police in the last 10 years, and 28 Ku Klux Klan leaders haven't been killed by police in the last 100 years," Innis said.

The movement Innis is involved in is a Liberationist movement. He called for this movement to be achieved "by any means possible and pragmatic."

Innis called the 25 million Blacks in America a "Nation in captivity" and "an internal colony of the United States". Innis declared that the Blacks demand "autonomy, sovereignty, and control over our destiny."

Offering solutions that "are more or less satisfactory to both Blacks and Whites," Innis stated that "enlightened self-interest is the greatest motivational force, and that Whites should support us because in the long run it will lead to peaceful coexistance. If not, it will lead to a catastrophic confrontation, that no one can win."

According to Innis proximity intensifies conflicts, that Blacks live in socialogical but not political units and the first step to alleviating Black problems is to allow the Blacks to control everything within their area "from sanitation to schools, from welfare to the police."

Dr.Spock On TheDraft

By LOUIS DIMONACO
News Editor

Dr. Benjamin Spock addressed at least half the student body, over 1000 students, at Springfield College's "Day of Concern" yesterday at Memorial Field House.

The main topic was the Vietnam War and Spock's denouncement of the war as "totally immoral" and a "total abomination." "We've lost our leadership of the free world."

Recapping our history in the war and how we got involved, Spock blasted L.B.J.'s acceptance of the Tonkin Gulf Resolution as an equivalent to a Congressional Declaration of War as a "fraud on the American People."

Spock cited the burning of crops and forced starvation tactics used by the American Forces in Vietnam as wholesale violation of international law.

Spock expressed the opinion that our involvement in the war was facilitated because our country had "no legal precedent to say that the war was morally illegal".

Strongly urging the students to be aware of the laws in our country, Spock emphasized that laws are "assumed to be arbitrary by the American People." Spock urged students to "apply pressure if you feel justice is on your side. If one is to push the limit of the laws one must be well organized so that the authorities will feel awkward in taking punitive action."

Other expressed opinions, by Spock, were that the "time for revolution is not right, that we haven't used conventional methods and channels for change enough and we haven't nearly exhausted all the gentle pressures that can be applied." He praised the young protesters in Chicago during the Democratic Convention and those who took part in the protest at Columbia and Harvard.

Benjamin Spock And The Problem of Conscription

By LOUIS DIMONACO
News Editor

Dr. Benjamin Spock, speaking at Springfield College yesterday, as part of the "Day of Concern" Draft Symposium, stated his reasons for believing the Vietnam War to be "a total abomination." A large number of people do not have to be convinced that the Vietnam War is "a total abomination", but here is Spock's argument anyway (Spock apparently does not consider futile, an argument directed toward people of the same mind as Col. Feeney, Deputy Director of the Mass. Selective Service, who believes "we are fighting for peace, not withstanding what anyone else says".).

The United States agreed to abide by the Geneva accord. However, the Eisenhower Administration was convinced Vietnam could be "taken over." Diem was instituted as a puppet," cancelling National Elections, taking over peasant lands and giving it to "absentee landlords," until he could no longer be tolerated by the people." Diem was disposed of, only to be replaced by another puppet.

"The United States was not invited into Vietnam, nor did we have a treaty obligation." It was a power grab. President Kennedy introduced military advisors to "beef up" the Saigon forces. In 1965 Johnson escalated the war as a result of the Tonkin Gulf Resolution, which Johnson considered equivalent to a declaration of war. Johnson asked Congress the power to repel further attacks similar to the Tonkin Gulf incident, and Congress granted him that right.

"The United States has total air superiority, a 6-1 manpower advantage, and weapons superiority, but we have been unable to win the people over to our side, and thus have been unable to win the war."

The United States has committed crimes in wholesale violation of international law. It has used chemical means to accelerate its genocidal warfare.

It has violated the Nuremberg principles which states that individuals are obligated to refuse orders of immorality, and acts against humanity; principles which were established, in part, by American judges after World War II.

"And the Government has the nerve to call me criminal for resisting induction."

According to Col. Feeney, the new Draft Lottery does not solve many problems, at least not in Massachusetts. Due to the large number of enlistments by low number individuals, ineligibility due to physical defects, enlistment in the National Guard by low number individuals, and college deferments, Massachusetts could possibly, possibly that is, go through all 366 numbers in 1970.

For the conscientious objector, the situation has not changed drastically (if Feeney's speculation holds true), but the men who thought they were in the clear, the 300's and the 366's, have a little waiting to do. And it might be good to investigate the "legality" of Vietnam again.

The force that keeps people like Dr. Spock going seems to be the willingness of 8000 young people to go to Chicago, get their heads dented, and return the next night. Although Spock believes "we haven't tried nearly hard enough applying the conventional means for change." He feels there are avenues still open to establish reform. This keeps him going.

When asked if he thought the "way to peace was more war," Col. Feeney replied, "No." If this is the case, in view of his position, who knows what keeps Feeney going.

One amazing feature concerning the Vietnam controversy, in the light of the new Draft Lottery, is its rapid decline as a personal question of morality for those people who consider themselves "safe" under the new system. This is not to say that everyone has reacted in this way. Proximity, or rather, vulnerability to the draft and consequently the war itself has played a major role in individual concern over the obvious facts condemning it as an unjust war.

This "enlightened self-interest" has cut into areas other than Vietnam. Poverty is certainly lamentable, but the further from poverty one gets the less lamentable it becomes. And the same holds for Civil Rights, and urban education and any other injustice.

"Damn right I think it necessary to dissent," Spock said. He is far from the physical nature of Vietnam, entirely too old to be drafted, and financially secure.

The problem with Vietnam and poverty and all the other blatant injustices is simply that not everyone is suffering from one abomination or another. This also might have something to do with the continuation of these problems.

"And the Government has the nerve to call me criminal." Some of the people have the nerve to call me criminal. Some of the people can go to Hell.

Roy Innis And The Problem of Racism

By NEAL NOVACK

De-emphasizing "talk" about racism between Black and Whites in the United States, Black Nationalist and National Director of CORE (Congress on Racial Equality) Roy Innis stressed the need for innovative and pragmatic solutions for racial conflict.

Many of Innis' conclusions were logical, but his solutions did and may not approach logical proportions unless one premise is assumed---revolution in this country.

Innis expressed his ideas on power - those in power see racism as irrelevent and are not willing to give up their power. He also talked of the immediate goal of the CORE program which is the Community of Self-Determination Bill presently before Congress. The bill has been stymied by a coalition which includes the supposed liberals, friends of the Black people, or as Innis called them, "poverty hustlers" and "model city hustlers".

If such a struggle against compromising on this legislation is conducted by the supposed Black supporters in power in the government, what is going to be the degree of reluctance of the American people to give up power by granting a "pragmatic disengagement of White and Black folk" as desired by Black Nationalists? The degree of reluctance is revolution resulting from the other trend Innis sees as escalating proportionately---that of repression and genocide by the Whites

Those who would be most reluctant to give up power would be those referred to by Innis as the "active moderates, status quo people, or Dick Nixon's silent majority." These groups, according to Innis, harbor "a kind of racism we pay very little attention to --- the unconscious automatic variety. The kind that causes every single institution operating in the U. S. to be at first structured in a racist way and them to operate like a perpetual motion machine to carry out racial dictates. It is that kind of racism that is caused by institutions that function automatically that mold all of us. This thing, so dangerous and permeates so much of the American fabric that it even affects Black folks. You find that Black folks, too make these automatic negative judgments on Blacks."

Part of the reluctance of the American people to give up power would lie in the result of economic loss. The loss of Black productivity which Innis cited as coming to $40 billion and $30 billion in Black expenditures into the American economy.

The escalation of repression and genocide is exemplified by the fact that "we are witnessing a conspiracy, the first phase of a genocidal campaign---the attacks of the police in Chicago, Los Angeles and other cities against the Black Panthers.

Innis described Black movements as being of several kinds: 1) Pre-revolutionary movement (For Innis is not certain that true revolutionists exist in this country) 2) Pre-reactionary movement 3) reformist movement (old civil rights movement), 4) active moderate movement, and 5) liberationist movement or Black Nationalists.

Innis sees the Black movement as a liberation not a revolution. He bases this terminology on the opinion that we are a heterogeneous country (stressing Blacks and Whites having separate cultures) and that revolutions only take place in homogeneous countires such as took place in Russia in 1917.

The word "liberation" denotes freedom from slavery and oppression. It connotes revolutionary action for a justified freedom from oppression. Thus the word liberation has a positive tone, revolution carries with it a more negative, destructive tone. Using the word liberation is a carefully chosen word if it is to be directed toward the sympathy and hopeful persuasion of the attitude of the American White.

Some of Innis' separatist shadings seemed evident when he expressed one of the dictums of his group's political theory ---- the greater the proximity of Blacks and Whites the more intensified the conflict. Further support for this come when he said that, "We are a nation in captivity," he continued, "an internal colony of the U. S. We must support Black autonomy, sovereignty and control of one's destiny."

Innis left the audience with an optimistic outlook, expressing the hope that with the realization of Black political unity followed by the separation of Black's and White's into two separate nations, that Blacks and Whites will someday exist in peaceful coexistence.

Housing Authority Adopts Rental Assistance Program

Amherst has become the first community in Hampshire County to adopt a rent subsidy program.

At a meeting of the Amherst Housing Authority Tuesday night the rental assistance program, under discussion for a year, was adopted by a 4-1 vote. The only objector was Chairman Walter Jones.

The Amherst program must be approved by the State Department of Community Affairs and then would be in operation. It is expected that the program would be in effect in January.

Under the program up to $100,000 of State funds would be used to help pay rentals in the town.

A subsidy or rent control program has been called for in Amherst by numerous groups who point out that the rapid growth of UMass has put a strain on available housing and pushed rentals to high levels.

Under the subsidy program the high rentals would remain, but the renter would only pay apart of the cost and the housing authority with state funds would pay the rest. A schedule for such payments is being worked out.

Edward Charkoodian of the State Department of Community Affairs spoke to the Housing Authority members on rental assistance procedures and the adoption of it.

This was his second conference with the Authority members since July.

The Housing Authority passed this resolution "Resolved: That the Amherst Housing Authority seek to enter a leasing agreement with the Roberts Realty Trust to lease 51 units in Rolling Green under the Chapter 707 Rental Assistance Program." Talks with Rolling Green officials are planned.

Charkoodian said: "To adopt the state rental assistance program, the Housing Authority must pass a resolution subject to t Community of the Department of ithunity Affairs that:

"1. Indicates the Housing Authority has determined there is not presently available in its community sufficient low-income housing.

"2. Establish a scale of gross rents (all utilities specified) which are not in excess of rents payable for similar housing within the community."

"Danton's Death" Opens in Bartlett Tonight

By HARRIET DECKER

Photos by Patricia Lempart

"To understand 'Danton's Death' requires making order where order does not exist but begs to be discovered". Theodore Hoffman makes this remark in his introduction to the Maxwell translation of Georg Buechner's dramatic tragedy. "Danton's Death" is the story of how one group of people worked toward the revolt of the French people and how this revolution in turn worked against them. Assistant Professor Gary Stewart, University of Massachusetts Speech Department, is the director in charge of the production. Mr. Stewart directed "The Changeling" which was presented last year by the University Theatre. Working closely with Mr. Stewart on this production is the Assistant Director, Pedro Silva, technical assistant in the Department of Speech. Set designing and lighting effects, which are more complex than usual in a production because more than just the stage is used in presenting this play, have been created by Assistant Professor Peter Vagenas and technical director John Hopkins and his assistant, Susan Roundy. Assistant stage manager and rehearsal manager has been Kathleen Duncan. Costume coordination has been under the direction of Elizabeth Weiss and Diano Brown. The actors themselves are in charge of sound and musical effects.

Mr. Stewart's interpretation of Buechner's concept is cleverly portrayed by the manner in which each individual character becomes part of the whole, serving as an integral force so that a realistic picture of the misery of the people can be seen. What can be visualized in the reading of the script is merely one group in conflict with another; Stewart's directorial forcefulness has made these groups individual members of a society unified by common misery. The historical background limits the scope of direction since one cannot deny history, but the way in which this aspect is treated gives the audience a more acute perception of the overall picture.

Historial figures as well as fictional characters intermingle realistically. Danton is the leading figure of the Deputies of the National Convention. He is played by Michael Walker, whom students may remember as Vermandero in "The Changeling". Joseph Wilins as Camille, Lance Reidy as Lacroix Lewis Louraine as Herault, Robert Rotenberg as Phillippeau and Stephen Driscoll as Legendre, comprise the other members of the National Convention Danton's antagonist, Roberpierre, as the head of the Committee of Public Safety, is played Daniel Johnson, who has had much experience in acting prior to coming here as a graduate student. Other members of Roberpierre's committee are Karen Connolly, known for her many appearances on campus in both Operetta Guild UT, as St. Just, Steven Greechie as Collot, Ann Lowe, Service Assistant in the Speech Department, as Billaud and Brian Marsh, who does the part of Barrere.

FROM OUR SIDE

The Ship Sinking

A Black Panther Party's headquarters is maliciously attacked by heavily armed regiments of American policemen. An innocent Vietnamese village is completely wiped out by heavily armed American infantry men. And hundreds of black and red Americans are viciously starved and supressed in Dorchester County, South Carolina by two American senators heavily armed with the weapons of hatred and power.

These are but a trickling of the incidents which are leading many people to wonder just where in the hell this country is going. What have these "atrocities" taken place, and especially, why are they continually committed by American whites against members of the darker races of the world, solely.

It should be retained in pondering these questions though, that this is not the only period in which such incidents have taken place. During the decades immediately following the Civil War, thousands and thousands of American Indians (men women, and children) were purged out of existance by the advancing white Americans. Numerous Indian tribes were completely slaughtered into extinction so that their ancestors can only be traced in the blood of other races of men with whom they intermarried with before their liquidation.

During World War II in the American serge through the islands on their way to Japan, numerous villages were completely wiped out of all living beings. The inhabitants were buried in mass graves; their rotting bodies used as fertilizer for the folliage which grew in nature's way to cover up what the executioners had left in their wake. These are the incidents that you don't read about in Quint, Albertson, and Cantor. These are the incidents known only to the men who committed them and to the ones whom these "men" bragged to upon their return.

In the Europen Theatre of World War II there were never any mass atrocities committed against the white Europeans like those that were committed against the yellow Japanese. Why was it that white American soldiers had no qualms about butchering yellow people, and by the same token if a couple of white German civilians were killed by accident a big deal full of regrets and tears was made out of it? The answer of course is obvious. The Germans are white; the Japanese are yellow. You'd better believe that this makes all the difference in the world.

So, today is nothing but a continuence of yesterday. There's actually little difference except that the race may have changed but then again all yellow (black, brown, etc) people look alike to the average white American anyway.

People are wondering why the Vietnamization of the war is going so slow. The answer is obvious! The Vietnamese are just as reluctant about killing other yellow people as Americans are reluctant about killing other white people. People learn to kill their own very slowly; sometimes they never learn. We will probably just have to do it for them just as we have done it in the past.

In our own country the Black Panthers are being massacred mercilessly. One might ask here, why is it that the Minutemen or the Klu Klux Klan aren't purged just as relentlessly as the police purge the Panthers? They are certainly of equal standing as far as threats and violence goes. The police at present have a gas that they can fire into a house which would make that house a virtual "hell hole". So then, why do the police move in with .38 cal. pistols M16 military rifles, and weapons similar to the military recolless rifle in reserve to get three men armed with deer rifles and shot guns? Again, the answer is obvious. It is because the Fathers are black.

It is seemingly obvious where this country is headed, where this world is headed unless something breaks this hundred year old plus murdering by White Americans of the darker races. Some people today are already speaking of repairations. The hell with repairations! Let's stop the killing first. You don't save a sinking ship by scrubbing the decks first. America is indeed a sinking ship whose crew is merely scrubbing her decks while the water lines gets higher. Maybe it wouldn't be as terrible if it was just the United States that was sinking, but it should be remembered that in the whirl pool the world will follow her down. You are the crew; what are you doing?

ART BUCHWALD

A Short Review Of The War

WASHINGTON -- Time flies by so fast that it is always good to review, every year or so, why we are in Vietnam.

"Sergeant, will you start the briefing?"

"OK, you guys, now pay strict attention, because I'm going to say it only once. The reason we are in Vietnam is to protect the gooks from being overrun by Charley."

"Charley is the enemy. Is that correct, Sergeant?"

"Yes, sir. He's also a gook, but he's THEIR gook, and the exercise is to knock off more of their gooks than they can knock off of our gooks."

"Sergeant, I hate to interrupt, but could you use another word other than gook when discussing the Vietnamese people?"

"Yes, sir. I'll use dinks. Now the big reason we're there is to train our dinks to be able to fight Charley after we pull out. This is called Vietnamizing the war. There is some question whether our dinks can do it because Charley is a helluva fighter and you have to admire him, even if you hate him."

"Do you have another word besides dinks?"

"We also call them slopes. The only good slope is a dead slope."

"Wait, Sergeant. I believe you should qualify that by saying the only good slope is a dead slope, if he's one of THEIR slopes."

"That's what I meant. Now there's no problem knowing who the good slopes are in Saigon. But when you get out of Saigon, any slope, dink or gook could or could not be working for Charley, including women and children."

"And that presents a problem doesn't it, Sergeant?"

"This is our major problem in Nam. The papa sans and mama sans all look alike, and sometimes you would burn down a hootch and it could belong to a good slope or it could belong to a bad dink -- you never know. If you burn down the hootches of the good gooks, then you lose them to the Cong. But if you burn down the hootches of the bad gooks, then it serves as a warning to them not to cooperate with Charley."

"Sergeant, don't you think you ought to tell them what a hootch is?"

"It's somebody's home. Everyone knows that. Now in spite of what you read in the papers, the pacification program isn't going as well as the Saigon government would like you to believe, and some areas that are supposed to be occupied by friendly slopes, are, in effect, still controlled by Charley."

"What do you do if you're not sure?"

"You zap first and ask questions later."

"I think you should mention though, Sergeant that we do not condone killing innocent people."

"Of course we don't. We have to win them over to our side, and you're not going to do that if you kill them. At the same time if the people are on THEIR side, you're not going to take a chance that they're going to kill you."

"We should all keep that in mind."

"Now, our only purpose in being in Nam is to protect the Vietnamese so they won't be taken over by the Commies.

"The best way to persuade the Commies they can't win is by body counts. The more people we can kill the less chance there is for a Commie takeover."

"At the same time, Sergeant, we must be certain that the bodies we count are ONLY Communist bodies, and not the bodies of innocent victims of bombing and artillery."

"That's correct, sir. If there is any question as to whether it was a good gook or a bad gook, it's best that he or she be left out of the final tally."

Thank you, Sergeant. I believe everyone understands it. Now, are there any questions?"

A Black Awakening

There is to be a meeting of the University's black community on Monday night to review the final draft of the plan for an Afro-American studies department which is to be submitted to the Administration.

This welcome and long-overdue development in the face of a rising tide of black student resentment and frustration about the progress of black studies at the university. These feelings were discussed in a recent letter in these columns by Brother Steve Moore. It is true that we have at the University the beginnings of what could develop into one of the most effective and educationally stimulating black studies programs in the country. But this only adds to the frustration of Black students who are unable to take advantage of these courses because their schedules are overloaded with "required courses" of dubious relevance to anyone, black or white.

Education which does not prepare us for liberation, spiritual, political and economic, is a waste of time. Black students have no time to waste. Brother Moore was right on when he called white America's education policies towards Black people "colonialist pacification" programs. This has always been the case, and the existence of Black studies courses which do not lead to a degree which do not replace irrelevant requirements, and which many Blacks are therefore unable to take are just window dressing.

Brothers and sisters, we have begun to organize and we must continue to bring pressure on the Black Studies Committee, the Administration, the faculty and any group which stands in the way of our educational needs.

Brother Frederick Douglass said "power yields nothing without a demand". . .men who want freedom without agitation want crops without ploughing the earth." The brother also said "Men may not get what they pay for on this earth, but they sure as hell pay for all they get." Dig on that with your bad selves. What are you willing to pay for your own Black liberation? Next Monday will be your last chance to help outline and define your own education so we will see just who been shucking and jiving with all that bad talk. And we will also see just how many dues folks are willing to pay. For us, as for the brothers in the liberation front, this is the year of decisive effort. Not only must we come to the meeting, but we must demonstrate to the Trustees, the Administration and the Faculty, that "black folks is serious" about a relevant education, by whatever means necessary. I think the Black studies committee has already get the message. Now them other folks got to get it. Right on.

Dying

It has been a long time since I thought of myself as "an American." At the age of twelve, I was lucky enough to live in Germany for a year and attend a German high school. I saw my country from a distance, and I began to realize that the name of a nation is never a good enough name for a man. Never again, I thought, would I be only "an American." I had, for one thing, another language, and that must change the inner man. For another, I began to understand my European heritage, of family and of mind. The possibilities were limitless.

But now there is news that says different. The news is called Song My. But I call it much more. I call it the news that I am an American, that my country is doing its level best to ensure that I will never be anything else. I picked up a German magazine, DER SPIEGEL, (I have returned to Europe this year to study) and read not only of Song My, but of a long series of war crimes and atrocities - all of the reports taken from U.S. papers and magazines. Had I not seen them? Had I ignored them? I could not remember them. But there was a letter there, too, from a young GI who had witnessed the brutal, accidental slaughter of a mother and her three children in 1967. Halfway through the German translation, I realized that I had read this letter before, in English, perhaps a year and a half ago. It had shocked me as much then as it did not. What had I done? Nothing. And I had forgotten it. This was the news. I am an American.

And I think of Germans who say, "We didn't know . . ." or, "Yes, we knew, but what could we do?" We stand invigils, we march on Washington, but what can we do? The answer we get is that if we withdraw the Viet Cong will massacre the innocent with the guilty, that if we leave now, South Vietnam will be plunged into a bloodbath. Do we prefer to handle the massacre and the bloodbath ourselves?

In the column next to the letter from the young GI was an advertisement from Merrill, Lynch inviting German businessmen to turn the tide of one-sided U.S. investment in Germany. "Investment is not a one-way road," the ad said. I had just returned from a weekend with two German and one English businessmen who have been attempting to encourage private investment in self-help projects in the developing countries. There I had heard of great need, of intelligent plans to invest not money so much as talent in the third world and of the tremendous difficulties of getting such investment going. And here, next to a report on the U.S.'s largest single "investment" in the third world, was Merrill, Lynch inviting rich Germany to invest in the rich United States. "To him who has shall be given." An accident of the modern media, this juxtaposition? Perhaps. Under the circumstances, obscene.

And I am an American, as much as the New York broker, as much as the officers who ordered Song My. Perhaps we shall never be anything more.

We are conquering the world. We are dying.

China

A mutual misunderstanding exists between the United States of America and the Chinese People's Republic. This misunderstanding was spawned by the Korean Conflict. China had not committed a single troop to North Korea until the U.S. began bombing supply bases behind the Yalu River and MacArthur threatened to cross the border into China. China saw this action of possible invasion by the U.S. as a threat to her security, and only then did she commit troops to the Conflict. The U.S. saw the defensive action as a sign of China's aggressiveness. So, the Containment Policy of the U.S. began under the policy decisions of John Foster Dulles. The U.S. began a systematic encirclement of Red China by arming the eleven "forward defense" countries. The logical conclusion of this misunderstanding is Vietnam. China sees U.S. military presence in Asia as a threat to her security, and the U.S. views China's defensive actions as a sign of her aggressiveness.

A. Doak Barnett, a leading Sinologist who lived in China for ten years, said in the Mainland China Hearings of 1966, that the Chinese people genuinely fear the U.S. is going to invade their country. So, China is determined to drive the U.S. out of Asia. According to C. P. Fitzgerald in his book, CONTEMPORARY CHINA, "The security of the Chinese state is held to be threatened by U.S. military power established in Asia." Further, according to Vidia Dutt, head of the East Asian Institute of Harvard, "The U.S. containment policy stands in the way of fulfillment of practically every legitimate national objective of the Communist Chinese." China, being the dominant power in her hemisphere, wishes to exert her cultural and political sphere of influence over that hemisphere in the same way the U.S. does in the Western Hemisphere. China does not wish to physically occupy Asia. According to Harold Hinton, another leading Sinologist and political scientist, "There is no evidence that the Chinese People's Republic intends to conquer, annex, or colonize other Asian countries." Brig. General Samuel B. Griffith has said, "The Chinese do not have the slightest intention of physically occupying Southeast Asia."

Thus, China is not an expansionist power, but only seeks to drive the U.S. from Asia, because China views U.S. military presence as a threat to her security. Consider an analagous situation. How would the U.S. feel if Chinese troops were lined up around our borders? The Containment policy is based on the myth that China wishes to conquer Asia and the world. In light of evidence, this is clearly false. According to W. H. Gleystein, "Communist China cannot be characterized as an expansion power in the sense of military conquest." By helping North Vietnam, China is helping to eliminate what she sees as a threat to her security. For this reason, the U.S. must not only withdraw from Vietnam but end the encirclement of China by withdrawing from all "forward defense" countries. If the U.S. does not end this antiquated policy based on a myth, rather than new realities, there will be other Vietnams and the possibility of a full scale land war with China. China will not tolerate this threat to her security and thwarting of her legitimate national objectives forever. It is time for the U.S. to begin a new and rational policy toward China. The Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, J. W. Fulbright, has stated, "When our perceptions fail to keep pace with events, when we refuse to believe something because it displeases us, or is simply startlingly unfamiliar, then the gap between fact and perception becomes a chasm, and action becomes irrelevant and irrational."

Contempt

We all know that our "black brothers" have been discriminated against for generations. They are frustrated and angry etc. So therefore I should, being a liberally reared student, try to understand them. Not being black I often find myself incapable of this compassion.

The black display of racism and anti-Americanism during last night's basketball game was a shame (J.E. is not the only gifted athlete on the UMass squad). It served to dampen a waning sense of "brotherhood" that I have tried to maintain throughout my short and experience-limited life.

I have one last thing to say - I can only respect those people who deserve respect. The black spectators last night earned my contempt. (But what does it matter if I'm their enemy anyway.)

Edwards To Replace Ley As FDA Commissioner

WASHINGTON (AP) - The trouble-ridden Food and Drug Administration will get a new chief and a higher rung on the government ladder, government sources said Wednesday.

Secretary of HEW, Robert H. Finch intends to replace FDA Commissioner Herbert L. Ley Jr. with Dr. Charles C. Edwards, a one-time surgeon who is now a management expert.

Finch called Ley in late Wednesday morning, reportedly to ask his resignation.

Ley would not comment after the meeting. But department press officers were busy preparing a biography of Edwards, a 46-year-old aide to Dr. Roger O. Egeberg, assistant secretary for health and scientific affairs.

The department also scheduled an announcement on FDA changes later in the day.

The decision to fire Ley came after months of criticism directed at the agency by Congress, consumer advocates and the food and drug industries.

Finch reportedly adopted the key task force recommendation that the FDA regain its independent status with direct reporting authority to the secretary.

The agency was made a subordinate of the newly formed Consumer Protection and Environmental Health Service last year. The move, FDA officials contend, deprived the agency of money, manpower and high level backing from the secretary - all leading to what they term a severe morale crisis.

In addition to Ley, several other key FDA officials are reported on their way out.

Klashman Invites Students To Water Pollution Seminar

A day-long seminar on water pollution keyed to the nation's college students will be held at Kresge Auditorium, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, 9:30 a.m. Monday, December 29.

This seminar, one of nine to be held across the nation during the Christmas Holidays, will be conducted by the Northeast Region of the Federal Water Pollution Control Administration, the agency of the Department of the Interior responsible for cleaning up the country's waterways. Invitations together with details of the seminar, are being sent to colleges throughout the Northeast. All students are welcome.

In announcing the seminars, Interior Secretary Walter J. Hickel said, "We want to tap the enthusiasm, vigor and fresh ideas of the nation's youth in the battle to protect and preserve our precious and irreplaceable water resources."

Student advisory groups will be formed at each of the nine seminars. These, in turn, will elect a five-member group to make up a regional Student Council on Pollution and the Environment (SCOPE). Each of the nine regional SCOPE's will elect one of its members to a National SCOPE which will serve in an advisory capacity to Secretary Hickel, who will designate an additional student to serve with the National SCOPE to make it a 10-member body.

In commenting on the seminars, Carl L. Klein, Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Water Quality and Research, said, "We think the contributions the young people can make toward cleaning up the environment will be of the greatest value. We intend to use these seminars as a starting point for enlisting their continuing help."

Assistant Secretary Klein said that he and David D. Dominick, Commissioner of the Federal Water Pollution Control Administration, would take an active part in all the meetings of the National SCOPE.

The Cambridge Seminar will be designed to give information to college students concerned with environmental quality. Lester M. Klashman, the FWPCA Northeast Regional Director, said that the day's activities will focus on what is being done and what still needs to be done to combat water pollution.

"We will make every effort to make this a worthwhile experience," he said.

Particular pollution problems which have defied technological solutions to date and pollution problems in the Northeast Region will receive attention. It is planned to exhibit pertinent films and encourage discussion from the floor. The FWPCA Northeast Region includes New England, the states of New York, New Jersey and Delaware, and a portion of Pennsylvania.

In addition to the Cambridge seminar, others will be held at the Taft Center Auditorium, December 29, Cincinnati; the Prudential Auditorium, December 29, Chicago; Sedgwick Hall, Rockhurst University, December 29, Kansas City; Fincher Hall, Southern Methodist University, December 29, Dallas; Municipal Auditorium Theatre No. 10, December 30, Oakland, California; Old Main Building Auditorium, December 30, Portland Oregon; Georgia Power Building Auditorium, December 29, Atlanta and at Richmond, Virginia, December 30.

There will be career conferences and job clinics held during Christmas vacation in various cities throughout the country. Community career opportunity conferences are designed to enable college students, particularly seniors and graduate students, to explore the many types of careers available to them in their own home towns. Akokawe "Displays African Literature

A program of readings of traditional and modern African literature will be presented at Amherst College's Kirby Theatre on Monday, December 15 at 7:30 p.m. The Mbari-Mbayo Players of New York City will blend music, dance and poetry in an attempt to display the literature of Africa.

The presentation at Amherst, called "Akokawe," is a two-hour program designed to show the cultural richness of Africa in the form of songs, poems, proverbs and stories. It will also try to show how the traditional oral literature of Africa has come to produce great modern writers such as Wole Soyinka of Nigeria, Leopold Senghor of Senegal and the late Patrice Lumumba of the Congo.

"Mbari-Mbayo" is a phrase from the Yoruba language meaning "to delight the eyes - to enlighten the mind" and describes the aim of the Players, which is to bring essential and entertaining aspects of African cultural life to American audiences. The group consists of six African and Black American actors and performers.

The players include Aston Young, a New Yorker, who is currently the director at the James Weldon Johnson Theatre Arts Center in New York City; Amandina Lihamba, a native of Tanzania, one of the leading African actresses of today; Adelaide Amegatcher, from Accra, Ghana, and the holder of a Master's degree in drama from the University of North Carolina; Mr. Babafemi, also a New Yorker, who is an accomplished drummer and drum maker; and Afolabi Ajayi.

Pastore Calls Prices Obscene

(Amherst, Mass. OPU) — Famous critic of fair pricing of entertainment products to college students, Humphrey Pastore told this reporter in an exclusive interview today, that a local store, Tape and Players, 9 E. Pleasant Street (next to the Amherst Tower Restaurant) had been severely reprimanded by his office for, what Mr. Pastore described as "a blatantly obscene" two week, so-called "record riot". As a typical example, he pointed out that Led Zeppelin, Janis Joplin, Steppenwolf, Country Joe and the Fish, and almost 2000 other LP's were being sold for only 2.99 each. Pastore told newsmen that he was shocked to learn that major record companies like Columbia, Decca, Capital, Reprise, Mercury, A&M were allowing their records that normally sell for 4.98 to be sold at this low, low price (2.99). He also pointed out that if this sale continues thru the 13th as planned thousands of record buying students would be roaming the campus with money in their pockets saved by purchasing their records and tapes (8 track tapes 4.85 ea.) now. Pastore commented that "everyone knows what a dangerous situation that could be, especially with the holidays drawing near." Local authorities report that steps are being taken to give Tape and Players a "Z" rating (no persons under 105 admitted without a Veterans of the Spanish-American War I.D.) which also would require officials of Tape and Players to post a notice that records could be purchased elsewhere for the regular list price, thereby safeguarding the tradition of higher prices for students.

Harmon Describes Hunger of Mass. Aged

BOSTON (AP) - "Some pet dogs and cats" eat better than many of the elderly in Massachusetts, Sen. Samuel Harmon, D-Boston, said Wednesday in testimony before a special commission investigating hunger in the state.

Some old persons in his district in the Dorchester and Mattapan sections, Harmon said, are "living on coffee and danish, morning and night.

Harmon heads a special commission on aging, and was the first witness at hearing on hunger and malnutrition in Massachusetts.

The State House session was the group's fifth.

Harmon said the major responsibility of the state is to "end hunger for our people."

Of the 600,000 elderly in Massachusetts, he said, 85,000 of them live in Boston, many on incomes of less than $3,000 a year.

After paying gas, electric and telephone bills, he said, "there is not much left for 90 meals during the month."

Senate President Maurice A. Donahue, D-Holyoke, headed the nine-member commission that heard testimony.

"Some of our biggest problems relate to our food programs and their unsatisfactory design or inadequate administration as well as the lack of adequate funding," Donahue said.

Donahue opened the session by promising that the commission would eventually act to eliminate "any trace of a hunger or malnutrition problem among all segments of the population of this state."

Crystalline organic material in a sealed glass tube is illuminated by a filtered light source from the left, producing "excitons" in the material.

Venture: How do you tame excited molecules?

Answer that one and you'll open up a whole new field of solid state physics that just might come to be called "excitonics." Because the most exciting thing about excited molecules in solids, right now, is that no one knows what to do with them.

This intriguing state of affairs came about after physicists began firing photons into molecular crystals and observing the results. Which were: "excitons."

An exciton is a conceptual entity that has more "stateness" than "thingness" about it. When a photon strikes a molecule in an organic crystal with sufficient energy, it bumps an electron to a higher energy level, leaving a "hole" in the molecule. In the brief interval before it falls back into its hole, the electron releases the energy it received from the photon, which propagates another hole-electron pair in a neighboring molecule, and thus on through the crystal.

This phenomenon is called the "singlet" excited state: or the singlet exciton. Du Pont scientists have produced it with a 150-watt bulb. In the singlet, an electron is excited without any change in direction of its spin or magnetic moment. It dies quickly, and a blue light emerges from the crystal. But with an intense light source, such as the laser, an even more interesting excited state has been produced: the "triplet."

In the triplet, the spin of the excited electron is reversed, a magnetic field is produced, and the excited state lasts a million times as long—about a hundredth of a second. Du Pont researchers have also found that two triplets can combine, producing a singlet exciton with greatly increased energy and a life span of a hundred millionth of a second. Of promising interest is that this tendency of triplets to merge can be sensitively controlled by applying a magnetic field to the crystal.

Perhaps the next step will be the engineering of devices that manipulate light signals directly, bypassing the present need to convert them first into electrical signals and then back into light. Perhaps too this line of research will lead to greater understanding of the mechanisms of light-energy transfer itself, such as those involved in photosynthesis by living plants. The possibilities are many.

Innovation—applying the known to discover the unknown, inventing new materials and putting them to work, using research and engineering to create the ideas and products of the future—this is the venture Du Pont people are engaged in.

Co-ed Housing Approved For Harvard-Radcliffe

A co-educational housing experiment was approved Tuesday by the faculty of Harvard's College of Arts and Sciences. Next semester one hundred and fifty Harvard men will change places with 150 Radcliffe women.

The experiment, first suggested last December in a Harvard student report, was approved almost unanimously following reports on a possible full merger between the two schools.

Plans outlined yesterday, stated that volunteers will be sought from the three Harvard houses, Adams, Winthrop, and Lowell, and North, East, and South houses at Radcliffe. Girls moving to Harvard may be placed anywhere in the building as the dorms are arranged in self-contained suites including bath. At Radcliffe, the men will be assigned to separate corridors in the above mentioned houses.

Although Radcliffe and Harvard students have been attending joint classes for more than 25 years, the women's dorms are nearly a mile from the Harvard buildings. Many girls feel that this separation is socially as well as intellectually depriving.

Favorable student reaction to this one semester experiment will very likely have a definite effect on plans for a full merger, a move strongly endorsed by many students and faculty.

Mrs. Mary I. Bunting said Tuesday that she hoped merger discussions would move quickly because, "the uncertainties of the situation are very difficult, indeed."

Harvard's present undergraduate enrollment is four times that of Radcliffe.

Czech Movie of Prague Invasion Will Be Shown Here Monday Night

"Prague, A Summer of Tanks" is a program sponsored by the Student Movie Committee, to be presented on Monday, December 15th at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The movie was made by professional Czech film makers, who began filming within one hour of the Russians' midnight takeover of the Prague airport. Each event through the hours that followed in that day of shock and terror is on the screen. Following the many fragmentary and conflicting reports on the first days of the invasion, viewers will appreciate this film's precise account of what happened, hour by hour. We see the capture of radio stations, individuals burning tanks, shooting in the streets, and the citizenry's spirited defiance of massed tanks in Prague, Bratislava, and smaller cities. The unhesitating opposition of the populace, which has continued to reject any acceptance of the loss of freedom, must be seen for an understanding of the moral force of the Czechoslovakian resistance.

Immediately following will be a short discussion period in which the personal experiences of the panel members will be presented. On the panel will be: Czech exchange students from the area, Prof. Joseph Lake of the University's Slavic Dept. who was in Czechoslovakia at the time of the invasion and Glen Mengurian, President of S.W.A.P., who visited the country this past summer.

The consequence of the Russian occupation will be discussed in the question and answer period at the end of the program.

The program is open to the public and there is no admission charge.

Wrestlers Win Third in Row, Defeat Amherst 29-11

Redmen Victors in Eight Out of Ten Divisions, Become City Champions

By Earle Barroll
Staff Reporter

In a very impressive manner the UMass wrestlers defeat ed Amherst College 29-11 before a fine crowd at Boyden Gymnazium last night. This dual was for the city championship and the Redmen grapplers came away in fine style as they won eight of the ten weight divisions. Each division winner was awarded a plaque as the city champ.

Nick Didominico got the Redmen off to a flying start by pinning his opponent at the 2:04 mark of his 118 lb. bout. Nick was all over his man from the start and it was just a matter of time until he got the pin. In that first bout Nick set set the pattern for the rest of the evening.

Dave Reynolds continued UMass' winning ways by pinning his opponent in four minutes and forty-two seconds to win the 126 pound championship of the city. This gave the Redman a commanding 10-0 lead at this point in the meet.

Phil Davis gave Coach Barr another victory by taking home the honors in the 134 pound division, with a 9-0 shutout of his opponent. Highlighting Davis' victory was a phenominal seven minute riding time.

Shelly Goldberg brought the UMass fans to their feet with a sensational 31 second pin of his opponent to win the 142 pound division. By this time the Redmen were leading 18 - 0 and it was clearly evident as to who the winning team would be.

After a slow start, Clay Jester came on strong to earn a well fought 13-2 victory over his Amherst opponent in the 150 lbs. class. Clay picked up his pace in the second period and continued it to the end of the bout.

Amherst won the next two divisions, but not without tough struggles in each bout. The scores in each match bear this out as Jim Godkin was defeated in a close and exciting match 6-4, and Tom Young came up on the short end of his 167 pound match, 2-1, losing on a stalling call.

Kent Mignocchi got the Redmen back on their winning ways with an 8-1 victory in the 177 pound division. Kent was in complete control all the way and clearly dominated the match.

Tim Perkins was on the losing end to his Amherst opponent in the 190 pound division. Tim was wrestling with an injured knee and was not able to perform at his best.

Captain George "Zig" Zguris ended UMass' scoring in the heavyweight division by pinning his opponent at the 1:02 mark of the first period. "Zig" got the advantage right from the start and performed just as the captain is expected to.

Coach Barr now has his sights set on Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania where his wrestlers will be competing on December 13 in a quad meet with nationally ranked wrestling powers, Ohio University, Indiana State, and Bloomsburg State.

UMass' wrestlers have been on top three times this season and have looked unbeatable. The squad so far has posted easy victories over URI, Tufts, and Amherst. (MDC photo by Bob Christman)

Frazier vs Clay in Feb.

Boxing merchants shook hands Wednesday on a Cassius Clay - Joe Frazier heavyweight title fight at Tampa Stadium, but a Miami bidder yelled double cross and promised to take the case to court "because the deal was mine."

Bob Arum, an attorney for Clay, said the Miami negotiations were halted without an agreement and that the 48,000-seat football arena in Tampa would host the match Feb. 16 or 17.

"Contracts will be signed by the weekend," said Arum. "Clay and Frazier are guaranteed $300,000 apiece, but stand to earn well over $1 million each thanks to closed-circuit television."

The Miami promoter Murray Woroner, said his attorney came to an agreement with Clay's lawyer in New York 48 hours before "Everything was settled and a rough contract drawn up," said Irving Whitman, legal counsel for woroner. "Arum's people were to mail me the contracts - signed by Clay and Frazier - on Tuesday."

Woroner waved a telegram from Bruce Wright, an attorney representing Frazier, that said negotiations were off. The Miami promoter said the wire came Tuesday night.

"If Frazier doesn't fight Clay in Miami, he won't fight anybody anywhere," Woroner said. Whitman added, "nothing was signed, but our verbal deal will stand up in court, in my opinion."

When informed of Woroner's plans, Arum broke into laughter. "Murray is acting like a child," he said. "Anybody can bring a suit in America, but it won't hold water this time. And it's not about to delay the Tampa match."

Sports Action, Inc., will produce the Tampa bout and Arum said, "the audience should be the largest in history. Thanks to three communications satellites that are now working, we can reach all of South America and much of Europe."

Frazier, recognized as champion in seven states, was not represented at the Tampa gathering, but Arum said that presented no problems.

There is no stipulation regarding Jimmy Ellis, recognized as heavyweight titleholder by the World Boxing Association. Arum said the Tampa people fought hard for a clause concerning a future match between the Clay-Frazier winner and Ellis.

"Ellis isn't interested in any Clay fight," said Chris Dundee, whose brother, Angelo, manages the WBA king and has always trained Clay for his bouts.

"Ellis won't do anything that the WBA doesn't agree with and the WBA has suspended Clay."

Rebounds, Turnovers Keys to URI Win

By STEVE ROSS
Senior Reporter

February 17, that's the big day. On that Tuesday night, in Kingston, R.I. the Redmen will have an opportunity to atone for Tuesday's 77-73 overtime loss to Rhode Island. Right now the Redmen will have to content themselves with a tough schedule that includes four more YC frays, and a host of tough outside opponents.

The general concensus in UMass locker room after the game on Tuesday was on e of disappointment, but not of discouragement. Old platitudes like, "We lost the battle, but we haven't lost the war," were in vogue.

Coach Jack Leaman credited the visiting Rams with a fine all-around effort and was the first to admit that they deserved to win. "They beat us on the boards,(45-35) and were able to sit on the lead at the end," he said. As an afterthought he added, "When Mathias went out on fouls it was the end as far as we were concerned."

URI was able to grab a 44-40 intermission lead as a result of a rather porous UMass zone defense in the first half. The Rams were able to get many close shots, and shot an astounding 53%. The Redmen stayed in only because of some fine outside shooting that clicked at a 50% rate.

Turnovers and poor ball handling were the hosts downfall in the final six minutes. An errant pass in the last 21 seconds allowed Nate Adger to knot the score, and, believe it or not, UMass could only muster one shot in the first four minutes of the OT. Such performances do not win ball games.

Rhode Island displayed the fresher troops in the end. As soon as the Rams regained possession after accumulating four markes in the over time they resorted to a four corner offense, John Bettancourt and Ray Ellerbrook looked like Turk Sanderson and Eddie Westfall trying to break up a hockey power play in a vain attempt to regain possession. Unlike hockey, Jack Leaman couldn't change his charges on the fly, and the URI keep away tactics worked to perfection.

Another capacity throng spurred on the hosts, but URI's JC Brigade along with John Fultz proved too much. One must wonder if the Rams plan of going almost exclusively after JC transfers is the right idea.

Adger, Dwight Tolliver, and Claude English were all framed out to Junior Colleges before coming to URI. Fultz was an obvious blue-chip in high school, and needed no preping before going to Kingston. Last night's Little Ram unit showed one blue-chip in Jose Paris, but don't be surprised if some big men from Junior colleges show up next year to replace English and Fultz.

UMass on the other hand goes almost exclusively for the high school seniors. The only JC player to help in recent memory is Dennis Chapman.

DOUBLE DRIBBLES - Julius Erving led the Redmen in scoring for the third consecutive game. He had 20 points. But for the first time he was both out scored and outrebounded. Fultz had 26 points, and 15 caroms, one more than Erving. After the game the soph termed the performance "sluggish."

Jack Leaman was nailed with a technical foul in the first half for objecting to a call in an overzealous manner. Fultz deserved one with 3:31 left in regulation when he attempted to boot the ball in the balcony after picking up his fourth foul. Unfortunately for the Redmen, the chorus-girl kick went unnoticed by either official.

It will be interesting to see if the game against New Hampshire on Saturday night draws a capacity crowd. The Wildcats don't figure to give the Redmen much of a battle, but, hopefully, the Umies have learned to appreciate the exciting brand of ball that is provided for them by this year's Redmen five.

CAPTAIN RAY ELLERBROOK canned a total of 18 points in Tuesday's clash with Rhode Island. Ellerbrook's hustle went unrewarded, however, as the Redmen lost in overtime. (MDC photo by Bob Mangiaratti)

Garber Receives Krause Award

Richard F. "Dick" Garber, head lacrosse coach at the University of Massachusetts for fifteen years and one of the most successful college mentors in the country received probably the top award of his college coaching career during the past weekend when he was named the first recepient of the Francis L. "Babe" Krause award as the top college lacrosse coach in the country. The honor, bestowed at the Third Annual Awards Luncheon of the United States Lacrosse Association, is just one of the many that have been presented to the associate professor in the School of Physical Education at the University of Massachusetts.

A graduate of Springfield College, where he earned a total of seven letters in football, basketball, and lacrosse, Coach Garber received his M.Ed. degree from Pennsylvania State University. He is a veteran of the United States Air Force and was discharged with the rank of first lieutenant.

Coach Garber has always been active in collegiate lacrosse circles and is a past president of the New England Intercollegiate Lacrosse League. In 1956-57-58 he served on the coaching staff of the Yankee-Rebel game held in conjuction with the Lacrosse forum at West Palm Beach, Fla. In 1965 he was head coach for the North in the Annual North-South All Star Game in Syracuse and it was mainly through his efforts that the North-South Classic was held in UMass Alumni Stadium in 1967. For the last three years he has been general chairman of the Annual North-South Game.

University Student Viewed Viet Massacre

By MAUREEN MESKIMEN Staff Reporter

William D. Pharmer, 3d, a sophomore at UMass was quoted Wednesday as saying that American soldiers "frequently" destroyed evidence of whether slain Vietnamese were civilians or Viet Cong by burning their identification cards. "Sometimes, if a civilian, a VC suspect, were accidentally killed in a village, we'd take his identification card and burn it so there would be no evidence that he was a civilian." A witness to "about five" of these burnings, the former Army infantryman stated that he himself had never burned one. Though he was uncertain that the cards were destroyed deliberately to conceal the civilian deaths, Pharmer could see no other reason for the killings.

Stationed in Vietnam during the alleged My Lai massacre, Pharmer served in the American Division, C Company, of the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Brigade, a "brother brigade" to the unit indicted in the incident at My Lai. He saw the alleged occurences of March, 1968, as "isolated" and reports of those murdered, as exaggerated. Although he had never been given nor had ever heard of an order to slay civilians, he was aware, through accounts of fellow soldiers, of examples of brutality levied by American troops, and had himself been witness to the shooting of a civilian. "One time we were on a road and we picked up an old man who was found to have some Army codes in his possession," Pharmer said. "A friend of mine told him to walk away and he was shot in the back."

Awarded the Vietnam Service Medal, the Vietnam Campaign Medal, the Combat Infantry Badge, and the National Defense Service Medal, Pharmer held the rank of infantryman, Ep4, when honorably discharged. He was also decorated with the Purple Heart for wounds he received while in Vietnam.

Pharmer said that the war had a brutalizing effect on the men, noting that during "search and clear" missions, civilians would accidentally be killed in the confusion. His unit was sent to capture a Viet Cong hospital once, "and they didn't bring back any prisoners."

Lottery Draft Seen "A Cruel Deception"

by DONALD A. EPSTEIN
Editor-in-Chief

The head of the Hampshire County draft board has joined the deputy director of the Massachusetts Selective Service in predicting that even those men whose birthdays were drawn last in the recent lottery will probably be drafted next year.

James Faulker of the Naorhampton Draft Board told the Collegian that he agrees with Col. Paul F. Feeney that the new draft lottery system is a "cruel deception" that will only extend the period of uncertainty faced by American youths.

Faulkner called the new system, "The most confusing thing that I have ever run into. It's a mixed up mess."

"They (the Nixon Administration and Congress) said it was changing the liability from seven years to one year," the head of the local draft board said. "I claim the new system is increasing the liability from seven years to nine years. It's possible we may have to draft men 26 years old and older if they lose their deferments."

Asked by the MDC if a graduating senior whose birthday falls in the high 300's will be drafted next year, Faulkner replied, "It's very much conceivable that they will be drafted. In Hampshire County alone we will probably be up to number 30 by the end of January."

"The new system is really no different than before," Faulkner said, "it looks more like a nightmare."

"We just should have been instructed to draft only nineteen year olds and told to forget about those older," he said. "This is what they did the last time they changed the procedures."

Col. Paul Feeney, deputy director of the Mass. Selective Service, said at Springfield College Wednesday night that "In my judgment this is a cruel deception. We're not disturbing the draft deferment program. We're not taking all young men, which is the only fair thing to do. We're going to sift them first, and all of a sudden the bottom will drop out."

He continued, "I can predict that with our projected quotas for 1970, we'll hit 365," which means all eligibles would be called.

The state director said the new lottery is a "sugar coating on the deal we've got. The theory that the first third will go, the middle may or may not, and bottom third is safe, is a deception.

Feeney also said students with deferments are not safe from the draft, if their numbers are drawn. He said their names will be on the top of the list the year their deferment ends, regardless of whether they are 26 years of age or older.

He said the lottery extends the period of uncertainty, instead of shortening it.

Feeney attacked proposals for a volunteer army, and said "How many of you would join?" Speaking of a mercenary armed force, he said mostly the poor, would be lured into enlistment.

GE Demonstration Fizzles; Only 20 Show at Whitmore

By BERNARD BLAIN
Staff Reporter

About 20 members of SDS showed up at Whitmore yesterday to protest the presence of 15 General Electric recruiters on campus yesterday and today.

After a short meeting, the picketers moved to the first floor placement office where the interviewing was taking place. Leaders felt that their obvious lack of numbers could not accomplish the large amount of pamphleting which they had intended.

Although the Board of Trustees has ruled out picketing in University buildings, administrators stood by offering no resistance to the picketing as SDS members lined the first floor corridor chanting "Workers yes, G.E. no."

Secretary-Treasurer of the International Union of Electrical Workers Henry Lussier who represents district 2 in New England met the picketers in the corridor asking them to correct the inaccuracies of the pamphlet they were passing out.

Lussier described the pamphlet as misrepresenting G.E.'s offer. The pamphlet stated that G.E. has offered a 20% per hour increase in wages in the first year of a four year contract. Lussier objected pointing out that if a 20% increase had been offered there probably wouldn't be a strike. The pamphlet also stated that unions have demanded a 2-1/2 year contract. Lussier informed the picketers that the IUE has asked for a 16 month contract.

Lussier also refuted an attack in the pamphlet on IEU President, Paul Jennings, since only a small portion of Pres. Jennings' statement against any student demonstrations was used.

Lussier told the picketers that the best way for them to aid G.E. strikers was to boycott G.E. products. Students should not interfere with union issues since union members don't interfere with student affairs. He said, "The members of the Union will make the final decision," and he felt the Union is running the only program which can get the job done. Lussier stated, "Union members have not officially asked for student picketing or involvement in the strike."

Lussier left and picketers began asking each other what they should do next. In the meantime, 15 recruiters were interviewing 130 students in the 2 day period without much attention to what was taking place. One student being interviewed thought the situation was a bit ridiculous.

At 2:20 p.m. the picketers wandered back to the second floor lobby and tried to gather support for their cause. However, they left the building by 4:00.

Harvard Suspends Blacks

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.(AP) - Harvard University suspended 40 Negro students staging a sit-in in University Hall Thursday, then obtained a court injuction ordering them to end their protest.

The injunction was issued in Middlesex County Superior Court by Judge Thomas J. Spring. It enjoined the Negroes from continuing the sit-in or engaging in any further disruptive demonstrations.

The students were protesting the university's rejection Wednesday night of a demand that at least 20 per cent of the employees at Harvard construction sites be Negroes.

They were among more than 100 blacks who forced their way into University Hall.

LONDON (AP) - More than 600,000 British women will be advised to change the type of oral contraceptive they use because some types of the pill are more likely to cause blood clotting than others.

The advice to Britain's 23,500 family doctors will go out this weekend by the government's watchdog Drugs Safety Committee, a spokesman said.

Researchers working for the government are reported to have found that pills with a high proportion of the hormone estrogen result in more cases of thrombosis than others.

DRUG PROBLEMS

Drugs Seen with Substitutes

NEW YORK (AP) - Many people who buy "mild" or "safer" psychedelic drugs apparently are being bombed with dangerous substitutes, a research team said Thursday.

Instead of getting mescaline, psilocybin or THC-the active chemical in marijuana- all of which are relatively mild hallucinogens or mind-expanding drugs, they are getting far more potent drugs like LSD. One reason is that LSD is cheaper to make in the illegal market.

The deception raises the risk that drug users may suffer severe mental reactions and illness, said Dr. Frances Cheek and associates of the New Jersey Neuro-Psychiatric Institute, Princeton, N.J.

Hearing rumors about drug substitutions, the researchers bought various drugs from street sellers.

Dr. Milton Joffee, chief of the drug sciences department of the Department of Justice, analyzed 36 such samples. None of 20 reputedto be mescaline, psilocybin or THC were really those drugs, Dr. Cheek said. All were LSD or equally powerful STP or Sernyl.

Mescaline is a chemical found in the buttons of a small cactus plant, peyote or mescal. Psilocybin comes from a Mexican mushroom. STP is a synthetic chemical which is reported to be extremely mind-distorting, as is LSD.

Drugs such as LSD are blamed for many bad "trips" and prolonged spells of mental illness.

The deception means numerous drug users are taking far more potent chemicals than they intended, Dr Cheek said.

Nerve Gas Tank Leaks

DUGWAY PROVING GROUND, Utah (AP) - An estimated 200 persons were evacuated from a storage area at this secret military test center Thursday after a nerve gas container developed a "small leak," the Army said.

There were no reported casualties.

In a statement released several hours after the incident, the Army said the leak occurred when a filling plug on a one-ton container of nerve agent was "accidentally damaged."

Congressional sources said the agent was in liquid form and spilled onto the ground. Workers spotted the leak and sounded the alarm, the sources said.

"Trained Chemical Corps personnel at the installation were on hand immediately to insure that the material was rendered harmless," the Army statement said.

"The area was declared safe and normal work routines were resumed," about 1-1/2 hours later, the statement said.

"There was no danger to anyone outside the immediate area and there were no injuries," said the Army.

Dugway, a Rhode Island-sized preserve in remote desert country about 80 miles west of Salt Lake City, is a major center for chemical and biological warfare tests by the military.

In March 1968, more than 6,000 sheep died in nearby Skull Valley after an aerial test of nerve agent at Dugway went awry. The military never flatly conceded guilt in the sheep deaths, but did agree to compensation of ranchers who suffered loss.

House OK's Voting Rights Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - Taking civil rights supporters by surprise, the House passed President Nixon's nationwide voting-rights bill Thursday as a substitute for the existing law which applies only in the South.

The administration bill was approved on a 208-203 roll call as an amendment to the present act and then passed, 234-179. The Senate has not yet acted.

Cheers and applause burst from the Southern members as the result of the crucial vote was announced. But there were bitter comments from a Negro civil rights leader.

"This is a cataclysmic defeat for the civil rights movement," said Clarence Mitchell, Washington representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mitchell called the administration bill "a cynical attempt to sell out the Negro to get the segregationist vote in the South."

Just before the vote he told newsmen he had promises from enough Republicans to defeat it.

When the present Voting Rights Act was passed in 1965, 82 per cent of the House Republicans supported it. But only 49 Republicans voted for it this time and 129 voted for the administration version. Democrats divided 154 against the administration bill and 79 for it.

"The White House turned it around," said Rep. William M. McCulloch of Ohio, leader of the Republicans backing the present act. During debate he said it is the best civil rights law ever enacted and that the progress made under it would be wiped out if the administration bill were enacted.

But House GOP Leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan said the 1965 act is unfair in its focus on only seven states.

The act does not mention any state by name but used a mathematical formula based on voting participation in the 1964 election to implement its provisions.

In practice the formula applies only to Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Virginia and part of North Carolina.

In those states literacy states are prohibited, federal examiners can be sent in to help register voters, and no changes can be made in election procedures without prior approval by the attorney general. Since the law was enacted nearly one million Negro voters have been registered in the seven states.

The administration bill would suspend literacy tests in all states until Jan. 1, 1974, permit the nationwide assignment of federal examiners, establish uniform residency requirements for presidential elections and authorize court action by the attorney general to block discriminatory voting-law changes.

Most of the opposition to the bill was directed at the provision dealing with election law changes. Rep. Emanuel Celler, D-N.Y., manager of the bill to extend the present law, said the administration would be an open invitation for the affected states to return to practices that made it difficult for Negroes to vote.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:00 a Christmas party is being given in the S.U. ballroom for elderly citizens. It is hoped that a great many students will come for "the old are with us but not of us." There will e refreshments along with entertainment by some very talented folk singers.

The weekend will end with a carol sing on Amherst Commons at 7:00 p.m. In order that students from the University may get to the Common easily, there will be 3 bus pickups at 6:45. One at W.O.P.E. in the Quad, one at the Copper Kettle for central and one at Patterson for Southwest. There will be a musical and choir group at the Common along with carol booklets, candles and hot chocolate. It is hoped that the people will group together and go caroling through the area. It will be a good time for all.

"Weird" Robbers Hold-up Bank

HASSET, N.J. (AP) - Three masked men riding white horses and carrying pearl-handled six-shooters held up the Hassett National Bank yesterday, and rode off with an estimated $4,000,000 in traveler's checks.

Hassett Police Chief Victor E. Limp called the hold-up, "The weirdest thing I've ever seen."

"Them guys just rode down main street on horses, just like in the old westerns, pulled up to the bank, and got away with all that loot. They even broke a city ordinance by riding horses without a permit," he added.

The robbery was the sixteenth crime committed in this city of 45 this year. Most of the other crimes have been of the jay walking and loitering variety, town magistrate L. Donald King explained.

Effects of Trippling is Studied

The Scrolls will be passing out questionnaires to all freshmen girls today on the subject of room trippling.

The main purpose of the questions is to determine exactly what psychological, academic, and social effects the overcrowding has to this date produced. Plans have been made for a follow-up study some time next spring to see if these attitudes and effects have changed.

The entire study will then be compiled in booklet form and released to the administration and student body for consideration. As a result, a similar situation may be avoided next year, the Scrolls hope.

Suspects Charged in W. Coast Murders Must Enter Pleas Dec. 22

LOS ANGELES (AP) - The shaggy, leather-clad chieftain of a band of young cultists who, with five followers, is charged with murder-conspiracy in the killings of actress Sharon Tate and six others, stood slouched with arms crossed Thursday at his arraignment.

Charles M. Manson, 35, short and slight with bushy brown hair and beard and piercing blue eyes made three points in a brief soft-spoken exchange with the judge.

He objected to being represented by a public defender, saying there might be a conflict of interest. He sought assurance he would have the right to question witnesses. His middle name is Milles, not Miller, as previously reported, he said.

In another development, Dist. Atty. Evelle J. Younger told a news conference his office will seek a speedy trial - within 60 days after all defendants have been returned to California. He also protested a court order Thursday sharply limiting pre-trial publicity, but said he will not challenge it. He declined to confirm the report of a possible 14 clan-linked killings.

Members of the hippie-type band charged with Manson are: Susan Atkins, 21, Linda Kasabian, 20, and Leslie Louise Van Houten, 19, all arraigned Thursday and ordered to enter pleas Dec. 22, the same date set for Manson; also Patricia Krenwinkel, 22, held in Mobile, Ala., and Charles Watson, 24, held in McKinney, Tex.

They are charged in the killing Aug. 9 of Miss Tate and four visitors to her Bel-Air mansion, and those the next night of Mr. and Mrs. Leno LaBianca, wealthy market owners. Miss Houten is charged with murder only in the LaBianca slayings.

Miss Atkins also is charged with murder in the death of a Malibu musician, Gary Hinman, with whom Manson once lived briefly.
